areas owned by the United States.[127] These include National Parks (Yellowstone, Hot Springs, Shenandoah, Mammoth Cave, etc.); National Parkways (Natchez Trace, Blue Ridge, etc.); Monuments and Historical Sites (Abraham Lincoln Birthplace, Fort McHenry, Appomattox Court House, etc.); and Recreational Areas (Cape Hatteras National Seashore, Bull Shoals Reservoir, etc.). Management and control of the National Park Service is lodged in the Secretary of Interior[128] with authority to make rules and regulations for their proper use and management.[129]

The Secretary of Interior has made rules and regulations prohibiting segregation. All "concessioners" are required to agree not to discriminate because of race, religion, color, or national origin" in both (1) employment, and (2) service.[130] Violation of these regulations subjects the offender to a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment for not exceeding six months, or both fine and imprisonment.[131] The non-discrimination provisions are enforced by the Park Rangers, who have authority to arrest for violation of the Secretary of Interior's rules and regulations.[132] There have been no reports of overt segregation or discrimination on the National Parks.

The Bureau of Land Management (in the Department of Interior) is authorized to sell, grant or lease public lands for recreation and public purposes. All sales, grants and leases contain a clause that any act of discrimination against a person in the use of the land or its facilities because of the person's "race, creed, color, or national origin" shall automatically result in reverting the title of the land to the United States[133] Nothing could be more automatic, swift, or certain.

B. The National Forests.

There are more than 151 national forests located in 40 of the United States. In total, they aggregate approximately a third of the total land area of the United States.[134] Some of the better known National Forests are Sequoia, the Olympic, the Ozark, the Ocala, the Black Hills, and Bull Run.

The National Forests have parkways and trailways; hotels, motels, camp-sites, and even summer homes. The national forests contain a wide variety of recreational resources--Camp grounds, picnic sites, thousands of miles of fishing streams and most of the nation's big game. They are visited annually by millions of Americans.[135]

The National Forests are under the supervision and control of the National Forest Service, a division of the Department of Agriculture. In 1958, after correspondence with the Urban League and the NAACP, the Secretary of Agriculture adopted regulations modeled after those of the National Park Service.[136]

C. Federal Reservoir Areas

The United States, through the erection of multi-purpose dams, has created many reservoir areas. Some of these are: the Bull Shoals and Table Rock areas in Arkansas; the Allatoona, Buford and Clark Hill areas in Georgia; the Arkabutla, Enid, Grenada, and Sardis areas in Mississippi; the John H. Kerr area in North Carolina; and the Clark Hill Reservoir area in South Carolina.[137] These areas are widely used for swimming, boating, fishing, hunting, camping and picnicking; with attendant boat houses, restaurants, lodging, and the like. These reservoir areas are under the control and management of the Department of the Army Chief of Engineers. On January 27, 1958, he issued instructions that all licenses granted for concessions shall include the following non-discrimination condition: "That the licensee shall not discriminate against any person or persons because of race, religion, color, or national origin in the conduct of its operations."[138] An immediate result of this was the statement by Georgia's Governor Griffin that if the Engineers insist on this point it means the end of any further development by the state of recreational areas around Federal multi-purpose dams. "We want the improvements," Griffin said, "and no one objects to Negroes paddling on the rivers--or governors either--but we're not going to have any integrated parks."[139] The state of Georgia had acquired areas in the federal area for recreational development.

D. Federal Beach Erosion Projects

The Chief of Engineers of the United States Army is authorized and directed by Congress to investigate and study effective means of preventing the erosion of the shores of coastal and lake waters.[140] The Chief of Engineers is authorized to enter into contracts with states and their subdivisions for the construction of works necessary for protection against erosion. One purpose of these projects is to prevent damage to the shores of the United States; the other purpose is to promote and encourage "the healthful recreation of the people." With approval of Congress, the Chief of Engineers can pay up to one-third of the cost. The projects approved by Congress generally contain a provision that the beach, when reconstructed and "nourished," will be utilized for "public use."[141]

Many beaches along the coasts and lakes have been repaired under this program. There are 26 such projects underway or just completed[142] Some of these projects are those at Rheoboth Beach, Delaware; Harrison County, Mississippi; and Waikiki Beach, Hawaii. Despite the federal support, the beaches in the South are generally off-limits to Negroes. In protest, Negro organizations planned a

"wade-in" movement for the summer of 1960, a project which failed to materialize. One reason, perhaps, is that when a group of Negroes went to the beach at Biloxi, Mississippi, they were attacked by a white mob with the encouragement of local law enforcement officials.[143]

The Department of Justice promptly filed suit in the United States District Court against the Sheriff, the Mayor of Biloxi, the Chief of Police, and others. Allegations were made that Biloxi had contracted to accept federal funds for a beach erosion project containing a "public use" proviso; and that the defendants "enforced and are enforcing a policy, practice, custom and usage of preventing and interfering with the free use of the Harrison County Beach by a certain part of the public, namely, persons of the Negro race." The relief requested was that the public officials in Biloxi be ordered to comply with the "public use" provision, i.e. ordered to refrain from preventing use of the Beach by Negroes.[144] If this suit is successful, the President can direct the Department of Justice to bring similar suits against all the governmental units which bar Negroes from their federally financed public beaches.

VI. HEALTH AND HOSPITALIZATION

The Federal Government is in the business of providing health care and hospitalization, and the business is extensive in terms of both program content and expenditures. The federal government provides these services directly, and indirectly through a system of state grants-in-aid.

Directly, the federal government provides hospitalization and health care for Veterans. In addition, the United States maintained in 1959 over 16 hospitals, 26 outpatient clinics, and 99 outpatient offices for American seamen, civil service employees injured in performing their work, and retired members of the Uniformed Services and their dependents.[145] The United States maintains the National Institutes of Health in Bathesda, Maryland which both conducts and supports medical research and has a 516 bed research hospital.[146] The United States maintains the only hospital in the country devoted exclusively to the treatment and rehabilitation of patients with leprosy.[147] It maintains two hospitals for the treatment of narcotic addicts.[148] It maintains Freedmen's Hospital in Washington, D.C. which serves as the clinical teaching resource for medical students at Howard University.[149] The United States doctors in 1959 examined over two and a half million aliens prior to and upon arrival in the United States.[150] The United States provides health services for Indians, and four major hospital modernization projects were authorized in 1959 alone.[151] These are some of the major direct federal government health programs. The indirect health and hospital programs--through grants-in-aid--to the states--are just as varied and even more extensive.

Under the Hill-Burton Act[152] the Department of Health, Education and Welfare grants funds to the states for the construction of hospitals. Since this program began in 1948, over 4,625 projects have been approved for Federal assistance, with the average annual cost amounting to $104 million.[153]

The United States makes grants to the states for mental health programs;[154] for maternal and child health services;[155] to provide services for crippled children;[156] for aid to the blind;[157] and for programs designed to control tuberculosis, cancer, heart disease, water polution and venereal disease.[158]

The general outline of these programs is that the appropriate state agency files a request for federal funds and attaches thereto a comprehensive plan of operations. The Secretary of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare examines the state plan, and if he finds it adequate, makes the appropriations. With this degree of federal control and responsibility, it is surprising to find that most of the federally financed and approved health and hospitalization programs in the South are operated on a segregated basis. The Southern Negro is denied hospitalization and health services, or provided with these services on a segregated basis.

Most Southern states have provided by law that at least certain public hospitals (usually institutions for mental illness and, less often, tuberculosis) shall be solely either for Negroes or for whites or segregated. /159 Beyond this, segregation is a matter of custom. The extent of the segregation (and denial of services) is illustrated by the progress made in recent years: /160

Miami, Florida: Jackson Memorial Hospital (Dade County hospital) adds Negro doctors and staff members to treat Negro patients.

Volusia County, Florida: Negro doctors permitted to treat their patients in County Hospital for first time.

Kentucky: The United Mine Workers of America complete seven hospitals in Kentucky (as well as one in Virginia and two in West Virginia) to be operated on an integrated basis.

Louisville, Ky.: Marine Hospital admits Negro patients.

Mississippi: Negro doctors join the staff of a Mississippi hospital to treat Negro patients. Another hospital begins treating Negro children.

St. Louis, Missouri: St. Louis institutes a system in which emergency cases are treated at the nearest city hospital without regard to race.

Charlotte, North Carolina: Mercy Hospital, Catholic, begins admitting Negro patients following the request of Bishop Vincent Waters to superintendents of Catholic hospitals to open their facilities to Catholic Negroes. (Bishop Waters' request also went, apparently unheaded, to St. Joseph's, Asheville; St. Luke's, New Bern; St. Joseph of the Pines, Southern Pines.)

The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare need not approve grants to states whose plans authorize or countenance segregation or denial of service on the basis of race. Indeed, in at least one instance, the Secretary denied funds to Arizona because its plan of operations concerning aid to permanently and totally disabled persons discriminated against Indians living on Indian Reservations.[161] The Hill-Burton Hospital Construction Act contains a racial equity formula which approves separate-but-equal facilities.[162] The statute, however, was enacted prior to and overruled by the Supreme Court's construction of the equal protection clause in the school-board decision of 1954.[163] Mr. Chief Justice Marshall pointed out over 150 years ago that "a law repugnant to the constitution is void; and that courts, as well as other departments, are bound by that instrument."[164]

VII. TRANSPORTATION

The yearlong Montgomery bus boycott[165] illustrates that Jim Crow travel is "resented more bitterly than most other forms of segregation."[166]

The Supreme Court had tried to end this discrimination. In 1941 the Court held that railroad passengers may not be denied pullman service even though it would be financially ruinous for the railroads to carry separate Negro Pullman.[167] In 1944 the Court held that state law could not require a bus company to force an interstate Negro passenger to move to the rear and give up his seat to a white passenger.[168] In 1950 the Court held that Negro passengers might not be excluded from a railroad dining car.[169] In 1957 the Court held that state-imposed segregation in inter-city bus travel is unconstitutional[170] and in 1958 it made a similar ruling.[171]

The lower federal courts have issued similar rulings in suits brought to end desegregation in air transport.[172] and in air terminal restaurants.[173] The federal agencies have cooperated. In 1955 the Interstate Commerce Commission ordered the end of Jim Crow rail transportation, and ordered railroad terminals to take down WHITE and COLORED signs in the waiting rooms.[174] The Civil Aeronautics Administrator in 1956 ordered that no "Federal aid Airport Program funds will be made available for the development of separate facilities."[175]

Despite these Court orders and agency regulations, the Negro in many areas of the South[176] is assigned to segregated coaches, told to sit in the rear of buses, assigned to "Colored" or "Colored Intrastate bus and rail terminal waiting rooms, rest rooms and restaurants[177] and told to drink "Colored" water from segregated fountains. The reason: outright defiance of the federal law.

Following the Interstate Commerce Commission order requiring the end of discrimination in waiting rooms (which followed by 11 years the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation of interstate bus travel) the Southeastern Greyhound Lines company sent out a series of instructions to all personnel which reads in part as follows:

> "2. Intrastate passengers may be courteously requested to comply with the law of that particular state, but if passenger refuses to comply, then no further action should be taken.
>
> "3. Existing signs and separation of waiting rooms and restaurants will be maintained as at present, but station personnel must not take any steps to enforce segregation in the use of these facilities.

"I know you can be depended upon to handle this delicate situation with tact and understanding..." /178

Others were not so tactful. Governor Kennon of Louisiana announced his intention to enforce segregation on carriers. The Mississippi Public Service Commission announced a similar intention and when carriers took down the segregation signs in Jackson, the city put up fresh ones. In one Mississippi city the police arrested Negroes who entered the "White" station waiting room, kept them in jail overnight, and released them next day if they pleaded not guilty. /179 Just recently, in the summer of 1960, a federal court decided a case involving the arrest of Negroes for refusing to move to the rear of a Birmingham, Alabama city bus. /180

The law is clear, the violation is plain, what can the President do about it? There are several obvious remedies.

First. The Interstate Commerce Act makes violation of Interstate Commerce Commission orders illegal, punishable by a fine of $5,000 for each day of violation. /181

Second. The Civil Rights Act of 1960 /182 makes it a crime punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both, for anyone to "prevent, obstruct, impede, or interfere with, the due exercise of rights or the performance of duties under any order, judgment or decree of a court of the United States."

Third. Relegating Negroes to a segregated area is a denial of their civil rights /183 and when done under color of state law, is a federal offense punishable by a fine of $1,000 or a year in jail. /184

In 1956 the Department of Justice called a conference of United States Attorneys in the Southern states to consider what measures would be appropriate for the department to take in securing observance of the United States Constitution and laws, by common carriers of passengers.[185] It appears that no departmental action ensued. A new President could well call another such conference with an eye toward his Constitutional obligation to "take care that the Laws be faithfully executed."

VIII.

HOUSING

"It would be an affront to human dignity for any one group of Americans to be restricted to wearing only hand-me-down clothing or to eating the leftovers of others' food. Like food and clothing, housing is an essential of life, yet many non-white families have no choice but secondhand homes." So speaks the United States Commission on Civil Rights.[187] Jackie Robinson adds that "For many, charity begins at home. So do hate, hostility, and delinquency, especially when the home environment is a slum, lacking adequate space, lacking facilities, but not lacking for high rentals."[188]

The problem of housing grows acute, as Americans steadily leave the farm for the town; especially the housing of minority groups as the whites flee to the suburbs and more and more Negroes move into the already crowded "Black Belts" of the old city. "This leads to the most tragic part of the vicious circle. The effect of slums, discrimination and inequalities is more slums, discrimination, and inequalities. Prejudice feeds on the conditions caused by prejudice. Restricted slum living produces demoralized human beings--and their demoralization then becomes a reason for 'keeping them in their place.'"[189]

The official United States policy is "a decent home and a suitable living environment for every American family."[190] To achieve this goal, Congress enacted long ago that Negroes shall enjoy "the same right in every State and Territory, as is enjoyed by white citizens thereof to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real and personal property."[191] The Supreme Court has sought to achieve this goal by striking down racial zoning ordinances,[192] by prohibiting judicial enforcement of racially restrictive covenants, i.e., agreements not to sell to Negroes,[193] and by holding damage suits for breach of the restrictive covenant agreements impermissible as indirect methods of enforcement.[194] The role of the Administrative branch of the Federal Government is equally important, as the programs described below make possible much of the building programs in the United States.

A. The Federal Housing Administration (FHA).

The FHA is the oldest of the federal housing agencies. It was created in 1934[195] to relieve lending institutions of the risk involved in private home mortgages. If the borrower defaults, the FHA makes good the loss. Since its creation, the FHA has insured more than 33 billion dollars worth of mortgages involving millions of homes. Fortune magazine has said that "Government guarantee of mortgages, which has cost the taxpayer nothing so far, has done more than anything else to make possible a million or more new houses a year."[196] But unlike Congress and the Supreme Court in the actions noted above, the FHA has done little to end segregated housing.

For the first 16 years of its life, FHA actually encouraged the use of racially restrictive covenants. Its official Underwriting Manual warned field agents against insuring mortgages on property that would be used by "inharmonious racial groups," and the Manual contained a model restrictive covenant which FHA strongly recommended for inclusion in all sales contracts.[197]

Since the 1948 Supreme Court restrictive covenant decision,[198] however, the FHA has done an about face. In 1948 the FHA eliminated the model restrictive covenant from its literature.[199] In 1950 it announced publicly that it would no longer insure mortgages on property whose deeds contained restrictive covenants.[200] In 1951 FHA announced that all repossessed FHA insured housing would be rented and sold on a non-segregated basis.[201] In 1952, FHA attempted to encourage the building of "minority housing" and local insuring officers were given annual goals in order to spur them to encourage private loans to minority groups. This program was abandoned shortly after it began.[202] In 1954, FHA officials began to encourage "open occupancy" projects through private conferences. By 1957 there were 41 such projects with FHA insured mortgages totaling $53 million.[203] Finally, in 1957, the FHA entered into agreements with states that have enacted anti-discrimination housing laws whereby the FHA refuses to do business with any home builder or developer who has been found to have violated the States anti-discrimination housing law.[204] Elsewhere, however, the FHA continues to finance the "private" developers who, such as Mr. Levitt of the various Levittowns, advertise that none of their homes will be sold to Negroes.[205]

B. The Public Housing Administration (PHA).

The PHA administers the low-rent public housing program authorized by Congress since 1934.[206] By 1958 more than 2 million people lived in more than 2,000 low-rent housing projects in 44 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.[207]

Public housing usually is owned by local housing authorities. The role of the Federal government is to lend the local authority the money to get the project underway, and to guarantee payment on private loans made to the local authorities. The bonds and notes issued to private lending agencies are tax exempt, and Federal control of these local housing projects is thorough and significant. The PHA will not issue a loan until it reviews and approves various aspects of the proposed project such as site, rentals, size and cost of construction contracts and budgets.[208] A default in any of the approved conditions of the loan gives the PHA option to repossess the property.[209]

The PHA takes no stand on integration, insisting only that Negroes be given "separate but equal" treatment on the basis of number and need.[210] The result is that in 1958 approximately 35% of the local projects (including those in Washington, D. C., Baltimore, Wilmington, and St. Louis) had an "open occupancy" policy; the others were segregated.[211] The comments of some of the State Advisory Committees to the Civil Rights Commission are interesting:[212]

> Wilmington, Delaware: The housing projects are integrated and there have been few if any serious racial incidents.
>
> Chicago, Illinois: Public housing programs have tended to become segregated as a result of the site selection process. No public housing project has been built in a white or racially mixed area since 1954.

Lexington, Kentucky: There are currently 1,200 apartments in the public housing projects. These 1,200 apartments are allocated evenly between the races, i.e., 600 apartments for colored and 600 apartments for whites. There is complete segregation in the project.

Las Vagas, Nevada: The city of Las Vagas Housing Authority has maintained the policy of segregation in some of the authority's projects. This is done as they feel that integration of all their projects would be dangerous to the program as a whole.

C. Urban Renewal Administration (URA).

The Urban Renewal Administration was established in 1954 to help the cities eliminate slum and blighted areas. The essence of the scheme is that the Federal government pays two-thirds of the cost of acquiring slum areas, the existing buildings are then razed, and the property is sold to private developers for the erection of new neighborhoods. Before a city can take advantage of this program, it must submit a plan of operation, complete with details as to need, size, future land use, and care provided for existing occupants. As of June 1959, the URA had approved projects in 877 localities.[213]

The occupants of the first 347 areas approved for renewal aid were approximately 55% Negro and 45% white.[214] The slum areas were "integrated," especially in the South where Negro housing has traditionally been interspersed among white dwelling.[215] In the North, the occupants of the sites approved for "renewal projects" were largely Negro, and the "slum clearance" programs as well. Almost a third of the Negroes displaced by renewal projects move into public housing (usually segregated), so one result of these two Federal programs (Urban Renewal and Public Housing) is to initiate or accentuate segregated neighborhood patterns.

The reports of the state advisory committees to the Civil Service Commission tell a graphic story:[216]

> Kansas: Urban Renewal will tend to create more pressures and problems for minority group members. A large percentage of the people to be relocated are in minority groups. When relocated they will more than likely be relocated in segregated areas, thus re-enforcing the segregation pattern and creating greater pressure in those areas to "break out."
>
> New York: The fact is that the Title 1 (Urban Renewal) program is geared to producing luxury or semi-luxury housing or non-housing reuse of the land, therefore, in effect, depriving the vast majority of the displacees from the benefits of this Federal government program. Although renewal programs are meant to clear slums, their net result has too often been the transfer of slums to adjoining areas.
>
> Philadelphia, Pa.: Mayor Richardson Dilworth has declared: "Urban renewal cannot and will not work within the framework of a racially restricted housing market.
>
> Pittsburgh, Pa.: A study of a mixed area already overburdened by a heavy Negro influx from a section undergoing redevelopment showed sharp increases in conversion to smaller units accompanied by increases in overcrowding. Areas thus overcrowded soon deteriorate thus requiring additional redevelopment.

In January of 1960, the United States Housing Administrator notified purchasers of land in urban renewal programs that they will be denied the right of future participation in the event they violate local laws forbidding racial discrimination in housing.[217] There is no requirement that private contractors who acquire land (purchased and cleared at government expense) in states lacking anti-discrimination housing laws adopt a non-discriminatory policy of sale and rental.

D. The Veterans Administration.

The GI Bill of Rights[218] authorizes the Veterans Administration to make loans outright to veterans for the construction of homes, and to guarantee loans issued by private sources. The extent of this program is illustrated by the fact that in 1954 and 1955 nearly 30 per cent of all new urban dwelling units were built with the help of VA loan guarantees.[219]

The VA policy is to make its services and programs available to all qualified veterans without inquiry into the race, creed, or color of the applicant. Moreover, the VA deprives the private lender of his right to convey defaulted property to the VA if the property is encumbered by a "restrictive covenant."[220] The loss of this option has the effect of causing the lender not to make loans on racially restricted property. The VA reported to the Civil Rights Commission that "So far as we know, no loan has been guaranteed on a property covered by the proscribed restriction."[221] In addition, the VA regulations provide that in the event racial restrictions are ever imposed upon the property, the private lender can declare the entire mortgage debt due and payable immediately, and failure to do so results in loss of VA supports.[222]

Under its regulations for direct loans, the VA will not deal with the purchaser of a house with a "restrictive covenant,"[223] and putting a restrictive covenant on the property after the initial loan is transacted results in a default of the mortgage obligation which requires the owner to either pay the whole sum immediately or turn the property over to the VA.[224]

The VA will suspend any builder from its program if the builder violates the anti-discrimination housing laws of New York, New Jersey, Washington and Oregon. Violation of these state laws is considered "an unfair or prejudicial marketing practice" under the terms of the GI Bill. The United States Civil Rights Commission comments that if such discrimination is covered by the federal law when it occurs in these four states, it is difficult to see why discrimination is not also an "unfair or prejudicial marketing practice" in the other states as well.[225]

E. Army Sale and Furnishing of Utilities.

The Secretary of the Army is authorized to sell or lease to private contractors within the immediate vicinity of Army posts "surplus utility services" such as water, sewage service, electricity, sanitary services, fuel, heat and the like.[226] These facilities are sold or leased to housing developments even though the developers refuse to sell or lease the housing to Negroes stationed or employed at the nearby base.[227] "It is the Army's view generally that a product or service is being sold. The Army does not make it a policy to police the use."[228]

* * * * *

A California court recently enjoined an FHA guaranteed builder from refusing to sell to Negroes with these words: "When one dips one's hand into the Federal Treasury, a little democracy necessarily clings to whatever is withdrawn."[229] A President who shares this sentiment can direct the Housing Authorities to require all participants in their programs to agree to an "open occupancy" policy; and to enforce this policy with (1) a regulation baring all violators from future participation in federally financed housing operations, and (2) a provision in each contract giving the government the right to declare the entire mortgage debt due and payable upon breach of the agreement. A policy of "open occupancy" is meaningless if the housing development is located deep in either a "Negro" or "white" residential district where members of the other race doubt their welcome; The President could direct the Public Housing Authority and Federal Housing Authority, when asked to approve the "site" of a public housing project or of an FHA insured apartment development, to give priority to those located in "mixed" neighborhoods, or on the fringe areas of a racial neighborhood. The President could also direct the Housing Authorities to give careful study to the experimental "scatteration" programs of local public Housing Authorities, i.e., a program wherein one or two large, institutional-type projects are shunned in favor of many small projects scattered throughout a metropolitan area. The President might also direct the attention of the Federal Housing authorities to the experimental programs in Sacramento, New Haven, and elsewhere wherein public housing was assigned on a "benign" quota basis; and to the public housing experiment in Pittsburgh wherein white applicants were solicited through advertisements directed at university students, faculty, foreign language and other white groups whose members may be eligible on the basis of income.[230]

Federal action or inaction alone is far from the sole cause of racial patterns in housing, and Presidential action alone cannot end them, although this contribution is not to be minimized. The lower level of Negro income and the scarcity of housing (both public and private) damp the effect of any legal rule designed to assure equal access to living accommodations; but the Presidential attitude and actions set a standard for the nation which over the long run probably will be effective.[231]

IX. VOTING

The studies of the Commission on Civil Rights reveal that "many Negro American citizens find it difficult, and often impossible to vote." "This is accomplished," states the report, "through the creation of legal impediments, administrative obstacles, and positive discouragement engendered by fears of economic reprisal and physical harm."[232] The details are spread on the pages of many publications.[233] Suffice it to repeat here the conclusion of the Commission on Civil Rights that there is a "moral gap" "between our principles and our everyday practices. It spills over into and vitiates other areas of our society. It runs counter to our traditional concepts of fair play. It is a partial repudiation of our faith in the democratic system. It undermines the moral suasion of our national stand in international affairs."[234]

The Civil Rights Act of 1957[235] authorized the Attorney General to institute civil suit in the federal court to prevent the denial of voting rights. The Civil Rights Act of 1960[236] provides that if in any such suit the court makes a finding that the denial of voting rights is "pursuant to a pattern or practice," the court may appoint "voting referees" to register qualified persons denied this right by local election officials. The denial of the right to vote to these persons so registered by the court appointed "voting referees" "constitutes contempt of court and is punishable accordingly.

The vigor with which the President directs that these Civil Rights Acts be applied will significantly affect the extent to which voting-denial practices will continue. In this connection it is well to note what has been in the past an important hurdle to implementation of the Civil Rights Acts.

General supervision of the Civil Rights Act and its implementation rests in the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice. Department of Justice organization, however, requires that such cases be processed through the office of the United States Attorney in the district where the prosecution is to be brought. It is to be remembered that the United States Attorney in a given district is a local lawyer appointed by the President, subject to confirmation by the Senate, for a term of four years. To him is entrusted the task of prosecuting Civil Rights litigation. This often places him in the unenviable position of having to take a public stand in court against the ingrained prejudices and mores of his own community. There have been outstanding examples of United States Attorneys, whatever their personal beliefs, courageously and vigorously assuming this position. There are others who have not done so. Witness the following examples given by President Truman's Committee on Civil Rights.[237]

> "...in a case in which a local constable had brutally killed a Negro, the local United States Attorney was asked for his views, after an F.B.I. investigation had been made. He expressed grave doubts as to the advisability of proceeding under Section 52 (the Civil Rights Act). In the same letter, he expressed his personal belief that Section 52 was unconstitutional, quoting liberally from the arguments of the dissenting justices in the Screws case.
>
> "In another case involving the killing of a Negro by a deputy sheriff, the Civil Rights Section sought the advice of the United States Attorney on July 30, and referred him to the F.B.I. report of its investigation in the case. On September 13, the Section again asked for the advice of the United States Attorney. On October 10, it repeated its request for the third time. ...On October 17, he advised that he had received the report and he thought the matter should be closed. He gave no reason for his opinion. The Civil Rights Section closed the case, apparently because the Civil Rights Section attorney in charge reported that "X will not go on anything."

A President who wishes to push forward in the voting area must staff the Civil Rights Division with a sufficient number of able and energetic and enthusiastic lawyers, and give it authority to by-pass the office of the local United States Attorney whenever this is necessary to save the local repute of that office.

X. EDUCATIONAL

In 1954 the Supreme Court held in Brown v. Board of Education,[238] that "Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal" and that state compelled or permitted segregation deprives Negro students of the "equal protection" guaranteed them by the Fourteenth Amendment. In 1955, after hearing argument on effectuation of its decree, the Supreme Court remanded the Brown and companion cases to the trial courts where they had originated with instructions to require the appropriate school boards to admit the Negro children "to public schools on a racially nondiscriminatory basis with all deliberate speed."[239] In 1958, in the Little Rock case, the Supreme Court held that "chaos, bedlam and turmoil" in the school room did not justify the postponement of school integration.[240] Thus, the law is clear.

Six years after the Supreme Court decision holding segregated school illegal, the picture is somewhat as follows. All Negro children attend non-segregated schools as a matter of course in Wilmington, Delaware; Baltimore, Maryland; Washington, D.C.; Louisville, Kentucky; St. Louis, Missouri; and other areas in the "border states." A handful of Negro children attend non-segregated schools in the states of Texas, Arkansas, Florida, North Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee, and most recently, Louisiana. No Negro children attend non-segregated public schools in South Carolina, [illegible] Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi.

The South has fought the Supreme Court decision with more than 200 legislative acts, ranging from "Interposition and Nullification" to resolutions calling for the impeachment of all Supreme Court justices. /241 The most effective Legislative resistance has been the so-called Pupil Assignment Plan. Under this scheme, each school board is required to assign each school pupil to a given school on the basis of designated criteria. Race is never a criterion, but the results of the assignments are, almost inevitably, that Negroes are assigned to Negro schools, and whites to white schools. The Negro child dissatisfied with his assignment is given the right to petition for re-assignment. If the petition is denied, he can request a formal hearing before the School Board. If the School Board rules against him, he can then go to court. In the courts, the School Boards assert all manner of procedural defenses to avoid decision on the merits. If the initial trial court rules for the pupil, the defendant school board almost always appeals. Many cases have dragged on so long that they become "moot" before final decision, i.e. the student graduates, or his parents succumb to economic pressure and withdraw the transfer application.

What can a President do to implement the 1954 Supreme Court decision? At least three types of actions have been suggested.

A. Intervention In Pending Court Cases.

A little used statute of the United States permits the Attorney General to send any officer of the Department of Justice to "attend to the interests of the United States in any suit pending in any" court, federal or state. /242 It has been suggested that the Attorney General is authorized by this section to direct the appearance of a United States attorney in any civil suit between private persons in which interest of the United States are involved, and that he is authorized to determine what interests of the United States are actually involved.[243] The value of such intervention is illustrated by the many instances in which the Supreme Court has requested the Department of Justice to file "amicus" briefs in "racial" cases; and by the fact that the District Courts during the Little Rock and New Orleans crises requested the United States to intervene in the pending school-desegregation cases. School Board attorneys can ride high when their only opposition is underpaid Negro attorneys representing unpopular causes. The situation changes drastically when the United States of America enters the fray.

B. Withholding Of Financial Support

The federal government now finances in large part the segregated school system of the South. More than $2 billion a year of Federal funds go for educational purposes to the nation's colleges, universities, and other institutions of higher learning.[244] At the primary and high school level, the Federal government in 1959 paid approximately $150 million to local school districts under the program whereby the government supports "federal impact" areas, i.e. areas with large numbers of federal installations and federal employees. These school districts had an estimated total enrollment of 9.5 million children, or about one-fourth of the enrollment of all children attending public elementary and secondary schools.[245]

The Commission on Civil Rights investigated this problem and three of the six Commissioners recommended that at least in the area of higher education (where there are no reasons for "gradual elimination" of racial discrimination): "Federal agencies act in accordance with the fundamental constitutional principle of equal protection and equal treatment, and that these agencies be authorized and directed to withhold funds in any form to institutions of higher learning, both publicly supported and privately supported, which refuse, on racial grounds, to admit students otherwise qualified for admission."[246] Commissioner George M. Johnson points out that "The achievement of equal justice under the law and equality of opportunity should not be left to the Federal judiciary." He therefore recommends the withholding of Federal educational funds to schools at all levels until there "be some indication of good faith compliance with the constitutional requarement of desegregation with all deliberate speed."[247]

C. The Exercise of Moral Leadership

It is well to re-examine the situation immediately following the Supreme Court decision of 1954. Harry Ashmore, then editor of the Arkansas Gazette, describes it as follows: "Most Southern newspaper, while deploring the decision as premature, counseled calm and indicated reluctant acceptance. A good many churchmen spoke out approvingly from their pulpits, and the organized denominations formally endorsed the decision as morally correct. While no one on the white side of the color bar regarded May 17, 1954, as the day of jubilee, and the leaders of both races recognized that monumental practical problems lay ahead, there was almost a feeling of relief. For better or worse, the other shoe had finally dropped.[248]

The day after the 1954 decision Governor Francis Cherry of Arkansas announced that "Arkansas will obey the law. It always has." In Florida, Senator Spessard Holland said: "No matter how much we don't like it, we must not have false ideas of the seriousness," while Representative Charles E. Bennett said, "I think the federal government should be required to take all necessary steps to make the states carry out the ruling." Governor Boggs of Delaware told his state board of education that it would be the policy of the state "to work toward adjustment of the United States constitutional requirements," and Maryland's Governor McKeldin said his state "prides itself upon being a law-abiding state, and I am sure our citizens and our officials will accept readily the United States Supreme Court's interpretation of our fundamental law." Similar statements were heard from Kentucky, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Tennessee, and West Virginia.[249]

Where segregationist opposition was checked firmly, as in Baltimore, Washington, D.C., and Clinton, Tennessee, plans for desegregation moved forward. Where the first tentative steps of opposition to the Supreme Court went unchecked or even encouraged by high officials, the steps grew longer and bolder until a situation was created where members of school boards feared to end desegregation without benefit of protective federal court order. "When responsible men default, irresponsible men take power."[250]

A ringing expression of national indignation; the creation of a feeling of inevitability about compliance with Supreme Court orders, would mark the effective beginning of a new day in school desegregation. Only the President can sound the alarm and end the conflagration now raging.

SUMMARY AND CONCLUSION

The Nation faces an acute problem of securing the full rights of citizenship to those Americans who are being denied vital recognition of human dignity and the equal protection of the laws because of their race.

The steps toward ending discrimination and desegregation need not be taken at snail's pace. Experience in the integrated Armed Forces, in the integrated Veterans' Administration hospitals, teaches that "actions" can be legislated and that behavioral patterns influence thought.

The Executive branch of the federal government encourages Jim Crow in some areas, in other areas it encourages the end of Jim Crow, in all areas the President can move the country forward.

1. The Military Services

Integration is a fact, with nothing but favorable consequences, in the enlisted ranks of the Armed Forces. The number of Negro officers, however, remains disproportionately few. The President can remedy this situation by Presidential appointment of qualified Negroes to the service academies. The National Guard units in Southern states, component parts of the Armed Forces, limit their membership to whites. The President can end this discrimination by withholding federal financial support.

Recreational facilities on Navy shore stations and Army posts are integrated. "Private" places of public accommodation outside many Army bases are segregated. The President can terminate this discrimination against some American soldiers by putting "segregated facilities" "off-limits" to all American soldiers.

2. Federal Employment

The federal "policy" of employment is equality of opportunity without regard to race. The federal "practice" of employment is discrimination and segregation. The President can effectuate federal policy and terminate federal practice by summary dismissal charges against those practicing discrimination and by putting the burden of proof on those who visually discriminate against Negroes in employment and promotion.

3. Federal Contract Employment

Here again, Federal policy and federal practice are entirely dissimilar. Those who contract with the government agree not to discriminate in employment opportunities, and the contractual obligation is widely and openly violated. Practice can be made to conform to policy by the imposition of sanctions: disqualifying violators from future contracts; terminating the existing contracts of repeated violators; seeking injunctive relief, etc.

4. Other Federal Employment Programs

There is no segregation in the federally financed vocational rehabilitation programs, as the federal government requires the end of segregation as a condition of receiving federal support. There is segregation in the federally supported apprenticeship programs, because there is no similar requirement. The solution is obvious.

The National Mediation Board and the National Labor Relations Board continue to "certify" Jim Crow unions as the exclusive bargaining representatives for Negro employees. The President, through the Department of Justice, can request the federal agencies to put a stop to this practice.

5. Recreation

The federal government operates extensive recreational programs and facilities through the National Parks Service, the National Forest Service, and the Corps of Army Engineers: none are segregated. The National Parks Service, for example, requires all "concessioners" to agree not to discriminate in employment and service, and these agreements are enforced on the spot by the Park Rangers. Many "municipal" beaches, however, built with federal funds and under agreement that they will be maintained for "public use," are segregated. A current suit to enjoin interference with the right of Negroes to the "public use" of the beach at Biloxi indicates the techniques available to the President to end segregation on government subsidized recreational areas.

6. Health and Hospitalization

The federal government makes grants-in-aid to the states for hospital construction, mental health programs, maternal and child health services, aid to the blind, and for programs designed to control tuberculosis, cancer, heart disease, etc. Some states deny these federally financed facilities and services to Negroes entirely, or offer them only on a segregated basis. A few years back the federal government denied further aid to Arizona under one of these programs, because Arizona discriminated against Indians living on Indian Reservations: a guide available to the President.

7. Transportation

Segregation in inter- and intra-state rail, air, and bus transport has now been held to violate the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, yet in some areas Negroes are relegated to segregated waiting rooms and told to ride in the rear. Enforcement of three federal criminal statutes, covering the varying conditions of discrimination, is a step available to a President desiring to effectuate the law of the land.

8. Housing

The federal government now finances, and sometimes initiates, segregated residential patterns. The government can terminate its financial support to the large contractors and developers (both public and private) who refuse to adopt an "open occupancy" policy; and the federal government can take affirmative action through a policy of control over "site" selection for the construction of public housing projects and large apartment developments.

9. Voting

Many qualified Negroes are presently denied the right to vote and thereby participate in our governmental affairs. A recently enacted statute, if given proper effectuation, might go a long way in ending this situation.

10. Education

Six years after the Supreme Court declared segregated public education unconstitutional, segregated public education exists openly, even proudly, on large scale. The President has at least three avenues open to effectuate the Supreme Court decision and thereby perform his sworn duty to "take care that the Laws be faithfully executed." 1) He can order the Department of Justice to intervene in all pending school integration court cases. 2) He can withhold federal funds from the schools of higher education (estimated expenditure--$2 billion a year in all) that refuse admission on basis of race to qualified Negro applicants, and he can withhold funds from the primary and high schools (approximately one-fourth of the school enrollment is in districts receiving federal support) which fail to indicate compliance with the constitutional requirement of desegregation with all deliberate speed. 3) He can provide moral leadership for those who would comply with the Constitution.

FOOTNOTES

33. Executive Action in the School Crisis, address by Marion A. Wright before Senator Kennedy's National Conference on Constitutional Rights at Park Sheraton Hotel, New York, New York, October 11, 1960.
34. Ibid.
35. See Pollitt, Dime Store Demonstrations, Vol. 1960 Duke Law Journal 315.
36. "Through integration, our mighty defense machinery, with all its potential for destruction, is sowing seeds of brotherly love and understanding among Americans. Some of the yield is already in.
"According to Maj. Gen. Harvey Fischer, a West Pointer and Korean veteran: 'Heart is heart, blood is blood, muscle is muscle-- what difference does color make'
"And according to Negro Navy Lt. (j.g.) L. E. Jenkins: 'After awhile you start thinking of whites as people.'" Morton Puner,"What the Armed Forces Taught Us About Integration," Coronet Magazine, June, 1960.
37. Harry Ashmore tells the story this way. "The issue was the proposed erection of an $11,000,000 Veterans Administration Hospital at Jackson, a facility that would accept white and Negro patients alike and house them together without distinction. 'Well, we've got the tiger by the tail,' Governor Coleman said. 'We either accept an integrated facility, or we deny our Mississippi white veterans medical services they need.' With only one dissenting voice the (State Sovereignty) Commission voted to donate state land for the hospital." An Epitaph for Dixie, pp. 131-3 (1958).
38. Quoted in Peters, The Southern Temper, p. 42, (1958).
39. There is some evidence that the Federal government actively and positively has aided and abetted the segregationist cause. The NAACP has filed with the White House affidavits accusing federal financing agencies in Mississippi of discriminatory practices in the denial of loans to Negro NAACP leaders in that state. Id. at p. 48. An informal survey of thirty-four white and Negro Southerners prominently identified as opposing segregation shows that 59% of them had their federal income tax returns audited within the past four years--a rate almost four and a half times the normal rate. The damning fact about this is that only one of the twenty individuals audited had an income which could be considered high enough to subject him to an automatic audit, while most had modest or even small incomes, from which little in the way of additional taxes could be expected, however ruthless the auditor's disallowances. Id. at p. 263. While it is possible that the audit of Dr. Martin Luther King's return may have been motivated by the fact that he had recently become an officer of a group involved in raising money, there is clearly no explanation for the methods used by the auditor. King was asked, "How much did you pay for your Cadillac?" and "Who air-conditioned your home?" -- insulting questions, considering that Dr. King owns no Cadillac and that the only air conditioning his home has ever had resulted from a bomb which exploded on his front porch. Id. at 264. The Internal Revenue top officials denied any harassment and one said, "If the charge is true, we certainly want to stop it....It's part of the tradition of the Service that we pay no attention to names, that we don't allow personal feelings to enter into our work. Anyone found doing this kind of thing would be summarily dismissed. They all know that." Id. at 265.

40. "The Negro Officer in the Armed Forces of the United States of America," Bulletin of the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense, July 4, 1960, p. 1.
41. Morton Puner, "What the Armed Forces Taught Us About Integration," Coronet Magazine, June, 1960.
42. "The Negro Officer in the Armed Forces," note 40, supra., p. 3.
43. "Freedom to Serve," Report of the President's Committee on Equality of Treatment and Opportunity in the Armed Services (1950), p. 53.
44. William Peters, The Southern Temper, p. 142 (1958).
45. 13 Fed. Reg. 4313 (1948).
46. "Freedom to Serve,"Report of the President's Committee on Equality of Treatment and Opportunity in the Armed Services (1950), pp. 23, 33.
47. Id. at p. 62.
48. Emerson and Haber, Political and Civil Rights in the United States, p. 1450 (2nd Ed., 1958).
49. "Integration in the Armed Services," Bulletin of the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense (1955), p. 4.
50. Ibid.
51. Note 46, supra, at p. 25.
52. "The Negro Officer in the Armed Forces of the United States of America," Bulletin of the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense (1960), p. 22.
53. 10 U. S. C. sec 4342.
54. 10 U. S. C. sec. 4382.
55. 10 U. S. C. sec. 261(a)(1), 70A Stat. 10 (1956).
56. 70A Stat. 598, 32 U. S. C. sec 104(b), (1956).
57. The Federal government pays 96.29% of the cost of maintaining the North Carolina National Guard. The National Conference and the Reports of the State Advisory Committees to the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights (1959), p. 298.
58. 50 U. S. C. A. App. sec. 454(b).
59. Walter Millis,"Individual Freedom and the Common Defense," p. 22 (Bulletin published by the Fund for the Republic, 1957.)
60. Note 57, supra. at p. 299.
61. 32 U. S. C. A. sec. 104.
62. 32 U. S. C. A. sec. 110.
63. 32 U. S. C. A. sec. 108.
64. 32 U. S. C. A. sec. 109.
65. "Integration in the Armed Services," note 49, supra., p. 3.
66. The Southern Heritage, quoted in Peters, The Southern Temper, p. 143 (1958).
67. "Integration in the Armed Services, note 65, supra. p. 2.
68. Quoted in Peters, The Southern Temper, p. 144 (1958).
69. "Integration in the Armed Services," note 65, supra. p. 7.
70. Morton Puner, "What the Armed Forces Taught Us about Integration," Coronet Magazine, June, 1960.
71. Harper v.. Jones, 195 F.2d 705 (10th Cir. 1952); Note, 66 Harvard Law Review 350 (1952); 20 Fordham Law Review 321 (1951).
72. "Integration in the Armed Forces," note 69, supra. p. 7.
73. Loth and Fleming, "Integration North and South, A Progress Memorandum," pp. 72-77 (The Fund for the Republic, 1956).
74. "Characteristics of Negro Employment in Federal Agencies in Atlanta, Georgia," Press Release of the President's Committee on Government Employment Policy, October 24, 1960.

75. "Trends in the Employment of Negro-Americans in Upper-Level White-Collar Positions of the Federal Government," Press Release of the President's Committee on Government Employment Policy, September 28, 1960, p. 2.
76. Third Report of the President's Committee on Government Employment Policy (1959), p. 17.
77. 22 stat. 403, sec. 2.
78. 5 U. S. C. A. sec. 1074.
79. Emerson and Haber, Political and Civil Rights in the United States, p. 1447 (2d Ed. 1958).
80. 13 Fed. Reg. 4311 (1948).
81. Emerson and Haber, note 79, supra. p. 1448.
82. Executive Order 10590, 20 Fed. Reg. 409 (1955).
83. The Chairman, Archibald J. Carey, Jr., never left his law practice in Chicago. The Vice-Chairman, Branch Rickey, maintained his principal interest in the Pittsburg Pirates.
84. Peters, The Southern Temper, p. 253 (1958).
85. Regulations and Procedures of the President's Committee on Government Employment Policy, reprinted in 1 Race Rel. L. Rep. 786.
86. "The Policy of Non-Discrimination in Employment in the Federal Government," p. 1, undated pamphlet published by the President's Committee on Government Employment Policy.
87. "Freedom to Serve," note 46, supra., p. 62.
88. Peters, The Southern Temper, p. 265 (1958).
89. Nearly 3,000,000 persons are employed by private business under contract with one government agency-- the Department of Defense. The Federal Loyalty-Security Program, Report of the Special Committee of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, p. 4, (1956).
90. Executive Order 8802, 6 Fed. Reg. 3109.
91. "Equal Economic Opportunity," Report of the President's Committee on Government Contract Compliance, p. 3 (1953).
92. Executive Order 10557, 19 Fed. Reg. 5655 (1954).
93. Ibid.
94. Quoted in Peters, The Southern Temper, p. 261 (1958).
95. Sixth Report to President Eisenhower from the Committee on Government Contracts, pp. 10-14 (1959).
96. Peters, The Southern Temper, p. 259 (1958).
97. The following discussion is based on Jack Greenberg, Race Relations and American Law, pp. 189-190 (1959).
98. Bolling v. Sharpe, 347 U. S. 497 (1954).
99. A statute being unconstitutional, and, "having regard to his official oath, he rightly may refrain from effort to enforce it." Ex. Parte La Prade, 289 U. S. 444, 258 (1933). Compare Ex Parte Young, 209 U. S. 123, 159 (1908).
100. Annual Report of the U. S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, P. 231 (1959).
101. Id. at p. 217.
102. 45 C. F. R. sec. 401.14(a)(2).
103. Annual Report, note 100 supra., p. 143.
104. A New York statute suggests (but does not require) that apprenticeship agreements contain a provision forbidding racial discrimination; and the Cleveland Board of Education has prohibited discrimination in apprenticeship programs operated in the city schools. See Greenberg, Race Relations and American Law, p. 155 (1959).

105. 29 U. S. C. A. sections 49d., 49g.
106. 20 C. F. R. sec. 604.
107. Greenberg, note 104, supra., p. 165.
108. 41 Op. Atty. Gen., July 2, 1959, following 29 U. S. C. A. sec 49k.
109. Steele v. Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, 323 U. S. 192 (1944); Wallace Corporation v. NLRB, 323 U. S. 248 (1944).
110. Joseph Rauh, Jr., Civil Rights and Liberties and Labor Unions, 8 Lab. L. J. 874, (1957).
111. Note, Railway Labor Act--Rights of Minority Groups to Membership in Labor Union Acting as Statutory Bargaining Agent, 37 N.C.L. Rev. 509 (1959).
112. Rauh, note 110, supra. at p. 875.
113. Id. at p. 877.
114. National Labor Relations Board Tenth Annual Report, p. 18 (1945).
115. Rauh, note 110, supra. at p. 877.
116. Ibid.
117. Greenberg, note 107, supra., 182.
118. Id. at p. 183.
119. The cases are collected and discussed in Emerson and Haber, Political and Civil Rights in the United States, pp. 1419 ff. (2d Ed. 1958); Greenberg, Race Relations and American Law, p. 91 ff. (1959).
120. Loth and Fleming,"Integration North and South, A Progress Memorandum," p. 87 (The Fund for the Republic, 1956).
121. Id. at pp. 88-90.
122. Gilmore v. City of Montgomery, 176 F. Supp. 776 (M.D. Ala. 1959).
123. Hampton v. City of Jacksonville, 4 Race Rl L. Rev. 973 (Fourth Judicial Circuit, Duval County, 1959).
124. Tonkins v. City of Greensboro, 175 F. Supp. 476 (M.D., N.C., 1959).
125. 4 Race Rel. L. Rep. 772 (1959).
126. 5 Race Rel. L. Rev. 528 (1960).
127. 1959 Annual Report of the Secretary of the Interior, p. 329.
128. 16 U. S. C. A. sec. 2.
129. 16 U. S. C. A. sec. 3.
130. Section 21 of the "Standard Concession Contract"; 36 C.F.R. sec. 1.60.
131. 36 C.F.R. sec. 1.91.
132. 16 U. S. C. A. sec. 10.
133. 43 C. F. R. sec. 254.10.
134. United States Government Organization Manual 1960-61, p. 266.
135. In 1935 there were 58,000,000 visitors. 11 Encyclopedia Americana 481.
136. Copies of correspondence are on file at the University of North Carolina Law School Library.
137. 36 C.F.R. sec. 311.1.
138. Copies on file at the University of North Carolina Law School Library.
139. Washington Post, Feb. 8, 1958, p. C-12, col 1-2.
140. 33 U.S.C.A. sec. 426.
141. 33 U.S.C.A. sec. 426e.
142. Letter from office of Deputy Director of Real Estate of the Office of the Chief of Engineers on file at the University of North Carolina Law School Library.
143. Southern School News, September 1960, p. 14, col 3.
144. United States of America v. Harrison County, United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi, C.A. No. 2262.
145. Annual Report of the U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare 1959, p. 96.

146. Id. at p. 78.
147. Id. at p. 97.
148. Id. at p. 97.
149. Id. at p. 100.
150. Id. at p. 102.
151. Id. at p. 104.
152. 42 U.S.C.A. sec. 291.
153. Annual Report, note 145, supra. at p. 109.
154. 42 U.S.C.A. sec. 273.
155. 42 U.S.C.A. sec. 701.
156. 42 U.S.C.A. sec. 711.
157. 42 U.S.C.A. sec. 1201.
158. Annual Report, note 145, supra. p. 140.
159. The statutes are collected in Greenberg, Race Relations and American Law, p. 373 (1959).
160. Loth and Fleming, "Integration North and South, A Progress Memorandum," pp. 81-82 (1956).
161. State of Arizona v. Hobby, 221 F. 2d 498 (D.C. Cir. 1954).
162. 42 U.S.C.A. sec. 291e.
163. "In the field of public education the doctrine of 'separate but equal' has no place. Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal. Therefore, we hold that the plaintiffs...are, by reason of the segregation complained of, deprived of the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment." Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483, 495 (1954).
164. Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch 137, 180 (1803).
165. Peters, The Southern Temper, pp. 178 ff. (1958).
166. Gunner Myrdal, An American Dilemma, p. 635 (1944).
167. Mitchell v. United States, 313 U.S. 80.
168. Morgan v. Virginia, 328 U.S. 373.
169. Henderson v. United States, 339 U.S. 816.
170. Browder v. Gayle, 352 U.S. 903.
171. Evers v. Dwyer, 358 U.S. 202.
172. Fitzgerald v. Pan Am. World Airlines, 229 F. 2d 499 (2d Cir. 1956). "Even to the orthodox there was doubtless something slightly incongruous about requiring a Jim Crow compartment on a Lockheed Constellation." C. Vann Woodward, The Strange Career of Jim Crow, 103 (1957).
173. Nash v. Air Terminal Servs., 85 F. Supp. 545 (E.D. Va. 1949).
174. NAACP v. St. Louis-San Francisco Ry., 297 I.C.C. 335.
175. Airports Policy and Procedure Memorandum No 41, April 6, 1956. He also ordered the end of segregation and discrimination in the facilities at the airports in Washington, D.C. and in Anchorage and Fairbanks, Alaska. 14 C.F.R. (1952 ed.) sections 570. 126, 580.126.
176. There has been much progress. In Arkansas, all railroads complied with the ICC order and removed segregation signs. In Jacksonville, Florida, airport facilities were desegregated and taxicabs began transporting Negroes. In Durham and Greensboro, the city buses ended segregation, as was true in many Texas cities. Loth and Fleming, "Integration North and South, A Progress Memorandum," pp. 84 ff. (1956).
177. The Supreme Court now has before it a case involving the arrest of an interstate Negro bus passenger for refusing to leave the Richmond, Virginia bus-terminal restaurant for "White" passengers. Boynton v. Commonwealth of Virginia, No. 7, October Term, 1960.

178. Quoted in Greenberg, Race Relations and American Law, p. 124 (1959).
179. Id. at p. 126.
180. Boman v. Birmingham Transit Company, 280 F. 2d 531 (5th Cir. 1960). See also, Henry v. Greenville Airport Commission, a case decided by the Federal Court of Appeals for the 4th Circuit on April 20, 1960, enjoining a South Carolina municipal airport from assigning Negro passengers to the "waiting room for colored folks." 5 Race Rel. L. Rev. 453 (1960).
181. 49 U.S.C.A. sec. 16(8).
182. Public Law 86-449, 86th Cong 2d Sess., set forth in 5 Race Rel. L. Rep. 237 (1960).
183. Boman v. Birmingham Transit Company, 280 F. 2d 531, 533, fn. 1 (5th Cir. 1960).
184. 18 U.S.C.A. sec. 241.
185. N.Y. Times, Nov. 20, 1956, p. 1.
186. United States Constitution, Art. 11, Sec. 3.
187. Report of the United States Commission on Civil Rights 1959, p. 534.
188. Id. at 386.
189. Testimony of New York Justice Polier before the Civil Rights Commission. Id. at 392.
190. Housing Act of 1959, Public Law 171, 81st Cong.
191. 14 Stat. 27 (1886), 42 U.S.C.A. 1982 (1958).
192. Buchanan v. Warley, 245 U.S. 60 (1917); Harmond v. Taylor, 273 U.S. 668 (1927); City of Richmond v. Deans, 281 U.S. 704 (1930).
193. Shelley v. Kraemer, 334 U.S. 1 (1948); Hurd v. Hodge, 334 U.S. 24 (1948).
194. Barrows v. Jackson, 346 U.S. 249 (1953).
195. 12 U.S.C.A. sections 1702 et seq.
196. "The Insatiable Market for Housing" Fortune magazine, February 1954.
197. Report, note 187 supra., p. 464.
198. See text at fn. 193, supra.
199. Report, note 197, supra. at 464.
200. Ibid.
201. However, it has no anti-discrimination clauses in its contracts with the brokers who act as its sale and rental agents. Id. at 469.
202. Id. at 469.
203. Ibid.
204. Id. at 465.
205. Id. at 465.
206. 12 U.S.C.A. sections 1702 et seq.
207. Greenberg, Race Relations and American Law, 473 (1959).
208. Id. at 487.
209. 42 U.S.C.A. sec. 501.
210. Report, note 187 supra., 475.
211. Id. at 476-7.
212. Id. at 477-80.
213. Id. at 481.
214. Id. at 484.
215. Loth and Fleming, "Integration North and South, a Progress Memorandum," p. 78.
216. Report, note 187 supra. 489-92.
217. 5 Race Rel. L. Rep. 562 (1960).
218. 38 U.S.C.A. sec. 694 et. seq.
219. Report of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights 1959, 497.

220. 38 C.F.R. sec. 36.4320(h)(5).
221. Report, note 219, supra. 497.
222. 38 C.F.R. sec. 36.4308(e).
223. 38 C.F.R. sec. 36.4515(e).
224. Report, note 219, supra. 498.
225. Id. at 499.
226. 10 U.S.C.A. Supp. 111, sec. 1269.
227. See Hackley v. Art Builders, 179 F. Supp. 851 (D. Md. 1960).
228. Letter from office of the Deputy Director of Real Estate, Office of the Chief of Engineers, on file at the University of North Carolina Law School library.
229. Ming v. Horgan, 3 Race Rel. L. Rep. 693 (Super. Ct., County of Sacramento, 1958).
230. Greenberg, Race Relations and American Law, 291-2 (1959).
231. Id. at 311.
232. Report of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights 1959, 134.
233. The most recent and most complete account is that of the Commission on Civil Rights, Id. at pp. 55 ff. See also Greenberg, Race Relations and American Law, pp. 133 ff; Emerson and Haber, Political and Civil Rights in the United States, pp. 142 ff.
234. Report, note 232, supra., p. 135.
235. 42 U.S.C.A. sec. 1971(c).
236. Public Law 86-449, 86th Cong. Title VI, set forth in 5 Race Rel. L. Rep. 240 (1960).
237. "To Secure These Rights" The Report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights, pp. 119-25 (1947).
238. 347 U.S. 483 (1954).
239. 349 U.S. 294 (1955).
240. Cooper v. Aaron, 358 U.S. 1 (1958).
241. Report of the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights 1959, 233 ff.
242. 5 U.S.C.A. sec. 316.
243. People ex rel. Woll v. Graber, 394 Ill. 362, 68 N.E. 2d 750 (1946).
244. Report, note 241, supra. 328.
245. Annual Report of the U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare 1959, 178.
246. Report, note 241, supra. 329.
247. Id. at 556.
248. Ashmore, An Epitaph for Dixie, 26-7 (1958).
249. Peters, The Southern Temper, 60-61 (1959).
250. Ashmore, note 248 supra. 44.

Research Department
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, Room 201
Atlanta 3, Georgia

"...the most powerful sermons of our time..."

The Episcopal Society
5 FORSYTH STREET, N.W.
ATLANTA 3, GEORGIA

Non-Profit Org.
U. S. POSTAGE PAID
Permit No. 758
Atlanta, Ga.

Press, etc Reid '62

THE NEW YORK TIMES, MONDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1962.

MINISTER WRITES 3 ANTI-BIAS PLAYS

Wayne State Chaplain Says He Aims to 'Disturb'

By DAMON STETSON
Special to The New York Times

BLOOMFIELD HILLS, Mich., Nov. 25 — The Rev. Malcolm Boyd, the Protestant Episcopal chaplain at Wayne State University, has made an unusual attack on racial prejudice in three one-act plays that have been presented here during the last three weeks.

The plays, written and produced by Mr. Boyd, have been put on before interracial audiences at the Will-O-Way Theater in this wealthy Detroit suburb. They represent a frank attempt, the author says, to disturb audiences and puncture smugness about human injustice.

"I've written these plays," Mr. Boyd said, "because I believe that the most powerful sermons of our time and culture are to be found in the theater, the novel and occasionally in the medium of film. I have something to say about race—or, as I prefer to call it, human—relations. Many people do not attend a church or synagogue; some persons who attend seldom listen in depth to sermons, or are seriously moved by them. I've employed the medium of the theater to speak about race, or human, relations."

Participating with Mr. Boyd in the plays are Cliff Frazier and Woodie King Jr., both Negroes, who are active in Detroit theatrical productions.

In the first of the plays, "They Aren't Real to Me," the audience is projected into the future. There has been a revolution, following centuries of enslavement of the whites by the Negroes, and the whites are finally free.

Mr. Boyd played the role of a white man who is one of the first of his race to qualify for an executive post in the new order. He works with two Negroes, one of whom is a moderate and sympathetic to his housing problems and the discrimination he faces every day from the dominant Negro group.

'Dirty Whiggers'

The other Negroe has a pathological hatred of whites and refers to them as "dirty Whiggers." He worries about white teen-age crime, whether the white race isn't biologically inferior and how best to preserve the purity of the Negro race. The reversal provides a simple yet thought-provoking impact.

In the second of the plays, "The Job," Mr. Frazier played a Negro celebrity hired by a white Hollywood producer to exploit race angles for promotion of a new movie about the Negro in America. This is a pointed satire aimed at the use of race as a "gimmick" with which to sell movies, plays, books or articles in magazines and newspapers.

The third play, "Study in Color," presents another reverse twist. Mr. Boyd, who is white, plays a Negro, and Mr. King a white man. They discuss color in separate soliloquies and then put on masks of colored stripes and colored polka dots in an effort to depict the absurdity of color as a criterion of knowing or classifying a man.

"The three plays," Mr. Boyd explained, "represent an attack on racial prejudice and the use of color as a means of labelling a man and thereby dehumanizing him. Too, they are designed to disturb audiences out of complacency about human injustice, to raise sharp questions about anthropology and the existential human condition and to harass an oversimplified commercial exploitation of race."

Served as Ad Man

Mr. Boyd was ordained a priest of the Episcopal Church after 10 years in Hollywood and New York in advertising, public relations, motion pictures and television. At Colorado State University, he organized and participated in several "espresso nights" as an expression of Christian evangelism on the campus.

In September, 1961, he joined 27 other Episcopal priests as a participant in the "prayer pilgrimage" which began in New Orleans and moved through Jackson, Miss., Sewanee, Tenn., and Dearborn, Mich. and wound up at the 60th general convention of the Episcopal Church, which was meeting in Detroit. He also participated in a sit-in in a segregated restaurant in the South.

In Detroit, Mr. Boyd has worked closely with Negroes and whites at Wayne State and has been outspoken in his attacks on housing discrimination and racial prejudice. In commending Mr. Boyd's direct approach to the problems of people in today's world, the Right Rev. Richard S. Emrich, Episcopal Bishop of Michigan, said:

"The danger of the church today is certainly not that it is too daring, too creative in its methods; but rather that it is too 'proper,' too 'respectable,' too cautious and even sometimes too stuffy. The simple fact is that it does not make contact with millions of people. . . . the church is for vast numbers an irrelevant holdover from a former age, an aloof group in the side-street of life, while the new life of a desperate world goes down the main street."

Headline from THE MICHIGAN CHRONICLE

"I Want It Black . . ."

Chaplain's Plays Pack Dramatic and Social Wallop

THE PRODUCTION KIT INCLUDES:

*Scripts for the three plays that comprise STUDY IN COLOR: They Aren't Real To Me, The Job, & Study in Color.
*Suggestions for local producers.
*Notes for the audience.
*Sample program form.
*Information on royalty charges for production of the plays. This can vary between $5.00 and $15.00 per performance.
*Order form for the tapes and extra copies of materials.
*A copy of BOY, another play by the same author with a similiar theme.

ORDER THE PRODUCTION KIT NOW FOR YOUR OWN READING....OBTAIN THE TAPES LATER TO GUIDE IN PRODUCING OR FOR A PROGRAM

TO: THE EPISCOPAL SOCIETY
5 FORSYTH STREET, N.W.
ATLANTA 3, GEORGIA

DATE_____

Please Send:

____ Production kit(s) for the Rev. Malcolm Boyd's three one-act plays entitled STUDY IN COLOR. ($1.50 each)

____ Set(s) of tape recordings (two reels) with the plays done by the original cast, plus comments by Chaplain Boyd. ($5.00 for a set of two reels.)

NAME _____ (PLEASE PRINT OR TYPE)

ADDRESS _____

AMOUNT ENCLOSED: $_____. Checks may be made payable to ESCRU

The Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity presents

THE REV. MALCOLM BOYD'S

STUDY IN COLOR

"THE MOST INTERESTING DRAMA IN THE AREA . . .
Frazier creates a complex figure . . . King is brilliant . . . There are no finer actors around . . . The richness of Rev. Boyd's background, the strength of his message and vitality of the presentation make this the most interesting drama in the area."
. . . E. M. Broner, Birmingham Eccentric

"VERY FEW WHITE MEN KNOW HOW IT FEELS TO BE A NEGRO.
Even fewer know how to competently translate this 'Negro-feeling' to the meaningful and interpretative language of the legitimate stage. The Reverend Malcolm Boyd—Caucasian on the outside, human being on the inside—knows.
. . . Lee Ivory, Tribune

"THE BITING WIT AND SATIRE IS INDICATIVE OF CHAPLAIN BOYD'S SENSITIVITY . . .
The field of race relations gets solid dissection with Chaplain Boyd's deft 'pen-knife' . . . The reactions have ranged from noticeable discomfort to electric enthusiasm."
. . . Mike Wahls, Michigan Chronicle

Three Plays About Race

WHAT ARE THEY? STUDY IN COLOR includes three one-act plays designed to be performed together. They are They Aren't Real To Me, The Job, and Study in Color, for which the series is named. Described in greater detail in a NEW YORK TIMES story reprinted on the reverse side of this leaflet, they have been selected for inclusion in the Off-Broadway section of Best Plays of 1962-63, edited by Henry Hewes for publication by Dodd, Mead and Co., New York. They were originally produced in Bloomfield Hills, Michigan, in the fall of 1962. Excerpts above are from reviews appearing in Detroit area newspapers.

HOW MAY THE PLAYS BE USED? Civic organizations, human relations agencies, Little Theater groups, or parish drama groups and other church organizations will find the production of Chaplain Boyd's plays to be an arresting and unique means of focusing on aspects in the field of race relations needing attention. "They are," in Boyd's words, "designed to disturb audiences out of complacency about human injustice, to raise sharp questions about anthropology and the existential human condition, and to harass an oversimplified commercial exploitation of race."

OTHER USES: While prepared in a fashion suitable for use by groups producing them, the scripts offer thought-provoking reading in themselves. Tape recordings of the original production (not for radio broadcast) may be used as the basis for a program-discussion, as well as a guide to the local production of the plays.

Behold, how good and joyful a thing it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!

Saturday Review

APRIL 20, 1963

Press, Radio, T.V. & Movies

PROBLEMS OF THE NEGRO WRITER

The American Negro author has traditionally concerned himself with themes based specifically on his experience as a Negro: his alienation from society, his anger as a victim of injustice and hypocrisy, and the futility of his search for the good life. With few exceptions, these themes have sustained a "Negro literature" that has tended to exclude itself from the central community of American letters. There have been recent signs, however, of a major shift in Negro writing from a crippling racial provincialism toward a wider involvement in American life. The dimensions of this shift and the attitudes behind it are explored here by Langston Hughes, poet, playwright, translator, and short story writer; LeRoi Jones, poet, and author of "Preface to a Twenty-Volume Suicide Note"; and John A. Williams, author of "Night Song" and "Sissie."

1. The Bread and Butter Side

By LANGSTON HUGHES

THE NEGRO writer in America has all the problems any other writer has, plus a few more.

I have been writing books for more than thirty years and have had the good fortune to be published by some of our major houses. During that time it has been my observation that publishers will bring out almost any book they believe is salable regardless of the race of the author. They will frequently even bring out a book they simply consider good. I doubt that a book by Willard Motley or Frank Yerby or James Baldwin would be turned down on account of the author's color. But if James Baldwin wrote six books a year and all six were about the Negro problem, I think perhaps some of them would be rejected—on the grounds of subject matter.

Just as a firm with two Japanese novels on their list might not wish to publish another in the same season, so prolific Negro authors who write exclusively about Negroes may find their acceptance limited. Shortly after his wonderful Negro story, "Health Card," in Harper's two decades ago, Frank Yerby decided he did not wish to be limited by racial subject matter. He extended his range. Result: a best-selling novel almost every year since then, plus numerous movie sales. However, until recently, novels by and about Negroes had almost no takers in Hollywood—a factor that helped to make publishers chary of such works unless they were sensational or of unusual quality.

Until 1962 there were no major publishers appealing directly to a Negro reading public. The Johnson Publishing Company, owners of Ebony and Jet, have now set up a branch specializing in books by and about colored people. The titles on their first list are selling well, so that house would not turn down a good Negro book just because it already has a couple in its catalogue this season. Johnson knows how to reach the Negro market; through their widely selling magazines, the company has the necessary publicity and promotional facilities. White publishers, as a rule, do not have the same know-how and have not much cared. But bias is not involved.

Where prejudice operates most blatantly against the Negro author is in the areas peripheral to writing: Hollywood, radio and television, editorial staff positions, and lecturing. Take lecturing, a lucrative field for famous (or even fairly well-known) white writers. Because many women's clubs and forums booking lecturers have teas or receptions following the programs, nine times out of ten, Negro speakers are not invited. Teas are social events: Negroes are not wanted, not even as star names. Many college lyceum programs, too, are booked by not very broad-minded officials. Not only in the South, but in the West and Midwest as well, there are campuses that have never yet had a Negro novelist or poet as a speaker.

For a long time not a single major publishing house in the United States had on its staff any Negroes except occasional clerical workers. It is only in these ever more democratic days since the Second World War that even clerical help has been employed. But now in a few publishing houses in New York there is a handful of Negroes working in capacities above the level of ordinary office routine. In radio and television, however, there are so few Negroes who are not janitors that one hand might have enough fingers to count them. When an author of color sells a novel to Hollywood, if ever he does, he is seldom called to California to work on the script. Almost all well-paying jobs in the mass media are still reserved for whites, no matter how celebrated the Negro author may be.

Everybody knows it is hard to make a living from books alone. Most Negro writers have been teachers. That is as near to a position related to writing as they can get. But a white writer with only an unprofitable first novel to his credit can usually get a fairly high-salaried job in publishing, radio, or TV without half trying. Thus he can make enough money in a little while to compose his next novel. Most Negro writers have to create at night after correcting a hundred student papers.

Added to job difficulties, the Negro writer, of course, suffers from all the other prejudices color is heir to in our USA, depending on what part of the country he lives in or travels. In New York, a Negro going to a downtown cocktail party given for a white fellow-writer may be told by the apartment house doorman, no matter how well dressed the guest may be, "The servants' entrance is around the corner." Such occurrences seem incredible in Manhattan today, but they are not. In the South, on the other hand, nothing boorish is incredible.

Once on a lecture tour I had hardly crossed the Potomac into Virginia when I stopped my car to buy some sandwiches and Coca-Colas. I knew I, a Negro, could not eat sandwiches inside the little roadside lunchstand where I had parked, but I thought I could at least enter and buy some to take out to the car. When I went to open the screen door, a man held it shut. "We have a hole cut for you folks around on the side," he said through the screen. Out of curiosity, I went around to the side of the wooden building. Sure enough, there was a square hole cut there with a sign over it: COLORED. But this is a dissertation on the problems of Negro writers, not of Negroes in general. Writers do have a few little special problems. Negroes however, have a great many more that are too omnipresent to be special.

2. The Myth of a "Negro Literature"

By LeROI JONES

THE MEDIOCRITY of what has been called "Negro literature" is one of the most loosely held secrets of American culture. With a few notable exceptions, in most fields of "high art" in America the Negro contribution has been—when any existed at all—one of impressive mediocrity. Only in music, and most conspicuously in blues, jazz, and spirituals—"Negro music"—has there been a significant contribution by American Negroes.

The most persistent and aggravating reason for the absence of achievement among serious Negro artists is that generally the Negroes who have found themselves in a position to pursue some art, especially the art of literature, have been members of the Negro middle class, a group that has always gone out of its way to cultivate any mediocrity, as long as that mediocrity was guaranteed to prove to America, and recently to the world at large, that they were not really who they were, i.e., Negroes. Because it drew its strengths and beauties out of the depths of the black man's soul, and because to a large extent its traditions could be carried on by the lowest classes of Negroes, and simply because the bearers of its tradition maintained their essential identities as Negroes, Negro music alone has been able to survive the constant and wilful dilutions of the black middle class.

Phillis Wheatley and her pleasant imitations of eighteenth-century English poetry are extreme and, finally, ludicrous departures from the huge black voices that splintered Southern nights with their hollers, shouts, arwhoolies, and ballits. The embarrassing and inverted paternalism of Charles Chesnutt and his "refined Afro-American" heroes is a far cry from the richness and profundity of the blues. And there has never been an equivalent to Duke Ellington or Louis Armstrong in Negro writing; even the best of contemporary literature written by Negroes cannot yet be compared to the fantastic beauty of Charlie Parker's music. In fact, it is only recently that formal literature written by American Negroes has begun to approach the literary standards of its model, the literature of the white middle class. Even so, only Jean Toomer, Richard Wright, Ralph Ellison, and James Baldwin have managed to bring off writing in this genre that could succeed in being regarded as "serious" writing, in the sense that, say, Somerset Maugham is serious writing. That is, serious if one has never read Melville or Joyce.

Literature, for the Negro writer, has always been an example of "culture." The Negro artist, because of his middle-class background, carries the artificial social burden of being the "best and most intelligent" of Negroes, and has usually entered into the arts to exhibit his familiarity with the social graces—as a method or means of displaying his participation in the serious aspects of American culture. To be a writer was to be cultivated, in the stunted bourgeois sense of the word. It was also to be a "quality" black man. It has had nothing to do with the investigation of the human soul. It has been a social preoccupation, not an esthetic one.

High art, first of all, must reflect the experience, the emotional predicament of the man, as he exists, in the defined world of his being. It must be produced from the legitimate emotional resources of the soul in the world. It can never be produced by evading these resources or pretending that they do not exist. It can never be produced by appropriating the withered emotional responses of some strictly social idea of humanity. It must issue from real categories of human activity, truthful accounts of human life, and not fancied accounts of the attainment of cultural privilege by some willingly preposterous apologists for one social "order" or another. Most of the formal literature produced by Negroes in America has never fulfilled these conditions.

Where is the Negro-ness of a literature written in imitation of the meanest of social intelligences to be found in American culture, the white middle class? How can it even begin to express the emotional predicament of black Western man? Such a literature, even if its characters are black, takes on the emotional barrenness of its model, and the blackness of the characters is like the blackness of Al Jolson.

If he wanted to tap his legitimate cultural tradition, the Negro writer should have done so by utilizing the entire spectrum of the American experience, from the point of view of his own emotional history in this country—as its victim and its chronicler, a man existing outside the boundaries of commercial diversion or artificial social pretense. But without a deep commitment to cultural relevance and intellectual purity this was impossible.

The Negro, as a writer, has always been a social object, whether glorifying the concept of white superiority, or crying out against it. He has never moved into the position where he could propose his own symbols, erect his own personal myths, as any great literature must. Negro writing has been "after the fact," based on known social concepts within the structure of bourgeois idealistic projections of "their" America, and an emotional climate that has never really existed.

In general, the most successful fiction of Negro writing is in its emotional content. The Negro protest novelist postures, and invents a protest quite amenable within the tradition of bourgeois American life. He never reaches the hard core of the America which can cause that protest. The intellectual traditions of the white middle class prevent such exposure of reality, and the black imitators reflect this. The Negro writer on Negro life in America postures, and invents a Negro life, and an America to contain it. And even most of those who have tried to rebel against that invented America have been trapped because they had lost all touch with the reality of their experience within the real America, either because of some hidden emotional allegiance to the white middle class, or because they did not realize where the reality of their experience lay. When the serious Negro writer has disdained the middlebrow model, he has usually rushed headlong into the groves of the academy, perhaps the most insidious and clever dispenser of middlebrow standards of excellence under the guise of "recognizable tradition."

There has always been a border beyond which the Negro could not go; there has always been a possible limitation to any dilution or excess of cultural or spiritual reference. The Negro could not ever become white, and that has been his strength. At some point, always, he could not participate in the dominant tenor of the white man's culture, yet he came to understand that culture as well as the white man. It was at this juncture that he had to make use of other resources, whether African, subcultural, or hermetic. It was this boundary, this no man's land, that provided the logic and beauty of his music. And this is the only way for the Negro artist to provide his version of America, from that no man's land outside the mainstream. A no man's land, a black country, almost completely invisible to white America, but so essentially part of it as to stain its whole being an ominous gray.

Were there really a Negro literature, now it could flower. At this point when the whole of Western society might go up in flames, the Negro remains an integral part of that society, but irrevocably outside it, a figure like Melville's Bartleby. He is an American, capable of identifying emotionally with this society, but he is also, forever, outside that culture, an observer.

If there is ever a Negro literature, it must disengage itself from the weak, heinous elements of the culture that spawned it, and use its very existence as evidence of a profounder America. But as long as the Negro writer contents himself with the imitation of the useless, ugly inelegance of the stunted middle-class mind, academic or popular, and refuses to look around him and "tell it like it is"—preferring the false prestige of the "black bourgeoisie" or the deceitful "acceptance" of buy and sell America—he will be a failure; what is worse, not even a significant failure. Just another dead American.

3. The Literary Ghetto

By JOHN A. WILLIAMS

ALMOST without fail, a novel written by a Negro is said to be one of anger, hatred, rage, or protest. Sometimes modifiers are used: "beautiful" anger, "black" hatred, "painful" rage, "exquisite" protest. These little tickets deprive that novel of any ability it may have to voice its concern for all humankind, not only Negroes.

After the labeling, and sometimes with it, comes the grouping, the lumping together of reviews of books by Negro authors. Sissie, my new novel, was officially published March 26; it has had four reviews like this already, three with James Baldwin's The Fire Next Time and one with John Killens's And Then We Heard the Thunder. I was hard pressed to discover who was being reviewed—Baldwin, Killens, or me. I had the same difficulty when I encountered reviews written only about Sissie, but whose leads almost invariably began with some reference to Baldwin. [EDITOR'S NOTE: See SR, March 30.]

Negro writers are nearly always compared to one another, rather than to white writers. This, like labeling and grouping, tends to limit severely the expansion of the talents of Negro writers and confine them to a literary ghetto from which only one Negro name at a time may emerge. Today it is unmistakably James Baldwin; no Negro writing in America today can escape his shadow. He replaced Richard Wright, who, in turn, may have replaced Langston Hughes.

Editors, too, have been guilty of labeling, comparing, and grouping. "Negro stuff is selling well!" I heard an editor say. So publishers have hastened to sign up Negro writers whose best qualification, often enough, was that they were Negro. Publishing has had its homosexual phase, which dies hard; its gray flannel-advertising phase, its war phase, its Jewish phase. It is now in its Negro phase. To illustrate shifting trends, six years ago an editor whose house is now the hottest because of its Negro talent, said, in essence, in a note to my agent (which was passed on to me—a sign of how grim the business of selling "Negro" books was) that it would be wiser if I were to set aside the obviously personal experiences of being Negro. Financially at least, the change in his point of view has been good for him.

The current trend toward more publishing of books by Negro authors, brought about by national considerations, has been beneficial to black writers. Nevertheless, much comparison of their work still exists in the editorial offices. This comes from my files; it is part of a report, dated seven years ago, on a book that I have since published elsewhere: "Mr. Williams is in the vein of Chester Himes, and to my mind achieves a similar power."

Excluding riding the trend, the other attitudes—labeling, grouping, and comparing—provide the biggest block to the expansion by Negro writers of themes and techniques (cared for so little by reviewers today). Perhaps that is the reason for the existence of these attitudes. They are automatic and no one thinks about them much except Negro writers. Either consciously or unconsciously, this kind of bigotry tells more about the reviewer than it does about the book he's reviewing.

A more specific example: In a recent

(Continued on page 40)

John A. Williams

LeRoi Jones

Langston Hughes

Negro Writers

Continued from page 21

article a writer discussed James Baldwin and me; we were said to be in midstream and about to drown. In our attitudes, I guess. The man did a thorough job, having researched magazines and brought what I had written in some of them to bear upon his subject, my novel Night Song. I was impressed. The white woman in the novel, Della, is a social worker who, after her day at the office, comes to the coffee house owned by her lover to help out. But, in view of the crisp way the writer handled his article, I could only conclude that he saw Della merely as a waitress because her lover was Negro.

The relationship between mixed couples is always more graciously accepted by the reviewers when related by a white author than by a Negro. Jack Kerouac's one-dimensional Negro girl and her white lover, John Updike's quiet, fleeting references to the same combination, and Robert Gover's hilarious team of Kitten and James Cartwright Holland are a few examples. But would One Hundred Dollar Misunderstanding have been quite so well received had Kitten been a Negro social worker instead of a whore, and the inability of man and woman, black and white, to communicate been put on an altogether different symbolic level?

I wish white writers would stop pretending they just can't reach Negroes; I want Philip Roth's little Negro boy in the Newark Public Library to be real, not a symbol of God only knows what, besides guilt. I want Pete Washington in Dennis Lynds's new novel, Uptown Downtown, to stop sitting around with his little Italian Catholic girl bemoaning to the point of being a bore the racial situation in America.

For I can smell the illusion of concern as quickly as I can smell a phony, and from the same distance. When you do me, do me right. Then some of the barriers to the expansion of America's Negro writing talent may fall.

NEW YORK POST, TUESDAY, APRIL 23, 1963

Press Story

Radio, T.V. & Movies

JAMES A. WECHSLER

In this season of press conventions, crowded with discussion of "the people's right to know" and the perils of "news management," it may be in order to talk about the state of journalism in the state of Mississippi, and especially about the adventure of two 21-year-olds publishing a weekly in Jackson called the Mississippi Free Press.

The paper, founded a little less than two years ago, has been coming across my desk through most of that interim. It is largely devoted to reports on the efforts of disenfranchised Negroes, in Greenwood and other battle fronts, to challenge the local oppressive despotisms under which they live. It also seeks to offer some enlightenment on the organizing campaigns of labor unions among the state's lowly paid working people.

For many months the paper's staff has consisted of Charles Butts, a former Oberlin College student (and son of an Oberlin faculty member) and Lucille Komisar, who attended Queens College here. Both cut short their college careers to run this enterprise, which provides for many of its 6,500 readers the first newspaper of any kind they have ever read.

* * *

The non-newspaper-reading populace of Mississippi is the largest in the land. In part, of course, this reflects the vast illiteracy rate. But it also dramatizes the alienation between the state's large Negro segment (about 43 per cent) and most of the Mississippi press. Only 12 per cent of the people of the state, Negro and white, read any daily newspaper. If the Free Press could achieve its present goal of 20,000 additional readers, it would become the fourth largest journal—daily or weekly—in Mississippi.

The problems of the two young people in charge seem far removed from some of the solemn subjects that have recently occupied editors and publishers; yet, in another sense, they go to a central question. For the truth is that "the people's right to know" and other variations on that theme require a journalistic revolution in Mississippi (and in some areas not a million miles from here). This is not to deny the existence of newspaper oases in the state—such as Hodding Carter's Delta Democrat and Ira Harkey's Pascagoula Chronicle, which recently became a daily (as well as that lively, intermittently issued commentary called Petal Papers, published by P. D. East).

But the existence of these scattered voices does not alter the basic condition of newspaper isolation from the lives of great multitudes of underprivileged Negroes and whites who comprise the bulk of the state's population.

That is the condition the Free Press is trying to remedy. The economics of its effort are both painful and simple. Mr. Butts and Miss Komisar draw salaries (irregularly) of about $20 a week, which partially explains how each edition can be published at a total cost of about $250. Many prospective readers simply cannot afford the yearly rate of $1 ($4 per year out of state); the two publishers-editors-reporters-managers have been trying to raise funds to underwrite subscriptions.

* * *

Over the telephone from Jackson yesterday, Butts talked animatedly and hopefully about the future of the project.

"We're finding many people in Mississippi who want to see a change," he said.

"The big lack has been a unifying voice.

"We don't want to be considered a Negro paper—and we don't want to be a charity paper. There is tremendous potential in Mississippi—it's like frontier land, and we want to be a part of the change.

"We are trying to overcome the idea that politics is 'white folks' business.'

"We're trying to tell Negroes how they can play a major role in the state. We're also trying to educate the people about trade unions; for we believe that is the key to raising the economic level here. In addition, a strong labor movement could be a significant political force in the state."

* * *

Butts believes the hope of change in the state hinges primarily on the pace of voter registration, and that this in turn will be decisively affected by the pace and intensity of federal support for the drive.

"Too many Negroes still remember how people were shot between the eyes when they tried to register," he says.

Neither Butts nor Miss Komisar feels any self-consciousness about their Northern origins in this deep Southern setting. They have encountered quiet congeniality among numerous whites in Jackson; they feel they are doing what many inarticulate Mississippians have wanted done, and that they are establishing communication with people to whom the printed word has long denoted either outright hostility or indifference. They also sound as if they are having a degree of excitement too many pillars of modern journalism no longer enjoy. They do not use the language of martyrdom.

When I asked Butts whether there had been any attempts to curb or harass his enterprise, he replied promptly that they had been remarkably free of trouble. Then he added:

"I guess those could be famous last words. I suppose something could happen tonight."

The American not only has to be successful; he must also be right. His striving for virtue through success leads to moral conflict, because of the need for conformity. Those organization men who conform against their will must suffer a deformation of the spirit; and they are inclined to attribute their distress to a lack of a sense of identity.

And when they declare their need for a sense of identity, ignoring self-contradiction, they merely compound their difficulties. For a preoccupation with one's identity can lead to a distressing self-dissatisfaction that cannot be resolved. He who asks himself, "Who am I? What am I supposed to be?" is likely to become aware of defects, real or illusory, that he feels no hope of changing. For what can he do — will into existence a quality he thinks desirable? If I tell someone to be strong, he right away feels weak; and if I tell him to be bold, he thinks himself timid. Even if he should carry out my command, his act will lack authenticity and have the quality of play-acting.

People sometimes pine for a desired state of existence, and it is astonishing how crippling this can be. One fellow I know wanted to be a "nice guy," and fell into a paralysis of action for fear of not being a nice guy. (One cannot be a nice guy, for that is a judgment, and for it to have significance it must be made by others.)

People sometimes set impossible standards for themselves and thereby bring about their own defeat. A friend of mine — also given to pining — wanted to be a musician, but gave up music because he knew he could never compose as well as Brahms. Another friend of mine yearned to be a writer, and I never knew why he didn't write until I learned that he wanted to be a great writer.

Such are the obstacles that arise when the self is conceived statically. Yet one is constantly subject to change at all levels of his being. His organic processes change him; his experiences change him. His life in society involves him in changing situations, and his responses are not fixed; though habit looms large, they are variable. His changing responses are felt subjectively as choice and freedom. And his choices will change according to his view of his situation and the possibilities he sees within it.

My conclusion is that it is useless — nay, harmful — to try to be anything; that is, to strive for a definite identity. A preoccupation with identity can lead to doubt, fear and depression, if not play-acting, pretension and absurdity, based on fantastic notions of what one is or should be. Action is what is needed, practical action, something well within the scope of one's powers. And perhaps in the end one can do more than he thought — and people may call it creative.

The Metatheatre 4/27/63

Theatre of Politics: the Negro

Lionel Abel Press, Rdio, Movies, TV, etc.

In the sixteenth century a play could be political—to some extent, at least —if about a king. For the love affairs of a king, in that century, had political, as well as romantic reference. Our age is quite different: it is practically impossible to conceive of a politician, a President of this republic, a leader of the CIO or of the British Labour Party, even thinking of himself as a lover. And if modern politicians do have personal feelings, these are bound to be without political reference. Does this mean that political plays in our time will have to be expressly and intentionally political? Not necessarily. But I think genuinely political plays can be written only when preceded by a political movement.

Of course there are now on our stage revues which touch sarcastically on contemporary facts, even political facts. I am thinking of The Premise, The Establishment and Beyond the Fringe. But if Vice President Lyndon Johnson can be enthusiastic about The Premise, how enthusiastic should we be about that revue's political bite and sarcasm? The Establishment is evidently quite happy about the success of The Establishment. And it is a sign of being well within the fringe to be seen at Beyond the Fringe. I do not mean that the politically sharp comments in these revues are not to be valued — only that they are without much political effect.

What else is of note—politically —in the theatre? There is Genet's new Lionel Abel is a playwright and critic whose book, Metatheatre, is recently published (Hill & Wang). His new play, The Next Golem, will be done next season under the direction of Wynn Handman.

The story of the crusading judge who broke Tammany's stranglehold on New York City and shattered Mayor Walker's career

THE MAN WHO RODE THE TIGER

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF JUDGE SAMUEL SEABURY

by Herbert Mitgang

The fascinating biography, by a member of the N. Y. Times editorial staff, of Judge Seabury, whose dedication to good government, as a lawyer and a judge, was climaxed by his inspired investigation of corruption in New York City government – the Seabury investigation that electrified New York and led to the Fusion Administration of Fiorello H. La Guardia.

"Mr. Mitgang has done an astonishing job. Through careful research and clear, crisp writing, he has brought back to life a fascinating episode in the city's history. THE MAN WHO RODE THE TIGER is a worthy tribute to one of New York's greatest citizens."—N. Y. Times

Illustrated • At all bookstores $6.95

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY

Good Books Since 1792

Philadelphia • New York

play, The Screens, already in English and about to be produced, which treats of the war in Algeria. But this play is anti-political, since Genet's point of view is that the degradation of the Algerian masses can never be redeemed by any kind of political action—even revolutionary action. What about Genet's The Blacks? Some insensitive observers have taken this for a political play akin to the kind of expression about the Negro problem we have gotten, and are likely to get for quite a while still, from Mr. James Baldwin. But The Blacks is about a black mass—the only real event in it is the ritual killing (symbolic, to be sure) of a woman. Moreover, the blacks in The Blacks are only symbolically black—perhaps to Genet this means they are the only real blacks—and though all the parts in the play are acted by Negroes, some wearing white masks, I think those actors not playing the parts of whites should be masked too, for to Genet, black against white means mask against mask. In any case, however enthusiastic about life or about death The Blacks may have made Negro audiences feel, it is certainly not a political work.

Probably the last truly political play seen in Europe or in this country was Sartre's Dirty Hands, and even that play was only partly political. In what sense? There were two main characters in it, and audiences were at liberty to decide which of the two main characters was the play's real protagonist. Jed Harris, who directed Dirty Hands on Broadway, elected for the Communist bureaucrat Hoerderer, casting Charles Boyer for the part. But Jean-Paul Sartre told me that he considered the real hero of the play to be the young bourgeois intellectual, Hugo. In any case, a judgment as to which character in the play is its true protagonist is not imposed by the play's own structure. And there is something else to be noted: Hoerderer, the Communist leader, is presented in political terms, that is to say, in terms of his political role. Hugo, the bourgeois intellectual, is presented in psychological terms, that is to say, in terms of his desire to play a political role. The same kind of dramatic analysis cannot be applied to both characters. Hoerderer is analyzed politically; Hugo is psychoanalyzed. So I should say the play is not thoroughly political, and yet it is unquestionably the closest to a really political play we have seen in almost twenty years.

The explanation, of course, lies in the lack of political movements in recent times of the kind we witnessed during the thirties. However, there have of late been political events that give promise of future effects—political and theatrical. For if there is no labor movement or Socialist movement on the march in this country, there are two new political developments: (1) the peace movement and (2) the movement for Negro liberation, which has expressed itself in the separatist trend of the Black Muslims and in the integrationist trend of the NAACP.

Of these, the Negro movement seems to me to be by all odds the more interesting. The peace movement, as some of its own leaders have admitted, lacks intellectual coherence. If you are concerned about the security of the people of this country, then you have to be worried about the possibility of Russian military superiority. And if you are indeed worried about that, you cannot be part of a peace movement. But if you refuse to be worried about the possibility of Russian military superiority, then how can you honestly represent yourself as being concerned with the security of the people of this country? The peace movement so far has not been able to resolve this contradiction.[1]

The Negro movement for liberation is something else again. The alternatives presented to Negroes by that movement—the separatism advocated by the Black Muslims and the integration drive headed by the NAACP—both have plausibility and interest and force. I can very well understand how difficult it must be for a young Negro to decide under which banner to march. The Muslims have a real appeal when they say: Let's not beg the whites to accept us—let's reject them! But one does not see clearly the values in terms of which Negroes could reject whites. Malcolm X has singled out New York's Chinatown as the type of nonintegrated community Negroes should aim at forming. But American Negroes cannot, I think, achieve any separation from American whites comparable to that of the Chinese, who probably never even thought of keeping themselves separate. The Chinese have their language, their customs, their manners, their holidays, their history—the greatness of China—to differentiate them from white Americans. Certainly the Chinese in Chinatown are not held together by hatred of the white race. And what but hatred of the white race could keep Negro communities separate from whites with whom they share the same language, customs, holidays, manners and history? Here, I think, is the weakness of the Muslim movement, and I do not believe it can endure, however strong its present appeal to the dignity and pride of young Negroes who do not want to wait indefinitely for just treatment.

But this is not the place to argue the merits of political tendencies in the Negro movement. My point is rather that both trends are important to dramatization of the American Negro, who in the last few years has taken on the stature of a truly historical figure. What pose will the [1]Does the fact that the peace movement lacks intellectual coherence mean that it cannot have some inspiration for the dramatist? I think so. For the peace movement presents itself as a movement of reasoned opposition: It is composed in the main of talkative women and not of wild men. Its most distinguished representative, of course, is Mr. Bertrand Russell, who did not have to get himself arrested (protesting American missile bases in Engand) in order to become dramatic. Bertrand Russell always was.

Natural History

If, at the bottom of the sea, the whales arrange Collectanea of human relics,
Bones all barnacled and the hearts by those slow strange
Deeps coralled in their spiny cases
To show life's prolix range of norms and features
With lightning-eels to shine on the drowned faces
Set, in the brine, in the taut grimaces

Of creatures who enact their inmost natures,
What, then, could the educative sign
In whale-calligraphy on harpoon handle inked
Say but, "This unfinned sport with little spine
Was fierce as froth asnarl on the crest of the surf is.
Habitat: Found only on the surface.
Tried beyond its depths to spout; believed extinct."

Daniel Hoffman

American Negro finally assume? This he himself has not yet decided, but it is very important for all of us what that pose will finally be. In any case, the Negro has become a dramatic figure, and there should be more good plays about him.[2]

A playwright recently remarked to me that the only kind of play treating American life which could have a structure not determined by Freudian concepts would have to be a play about race relations. For the issues between Negroes and whites are not Freudian issues — although Freudianized or Reichianized white intellectuals have tried to interpret them as such; cultural psychology is not the same as clinical psychology. There are political and social issues between Negroes and whites which it will take a long time to resolve, and only after these have been resolved would it be even possible to understand Negroes in Freudian, Reichian—or going still further back—in Ibsenian terms. The Ibsenization of the Negro is something which may take place in the future; I do not expect it to happen in our time.

I speak of Ibsen here because the American realistic theatre from O'Neill to Edward Albee was founded and determined by Henrik Ibsen. In fact, I think the American realistic theatre, apparently so dependent on Freudian concepts, would have developed exactly as it did even if Freud had never existed. Ibsen's own plays would have been quite sufficient to make Eugene O'Neill write The Iceman Cometh, Arthur Miller Death of a Salesman and A View from the Bridge, Tennessee Williams A Streetcar Named Desire and Cat on a Hot Tin Roof, and Edward Albee Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? I recently reread The Wild Duck and was astonished to see how much that play is determined by concepts I would have thought derived from Freud, except that Freud and his concepts came along a good while after the play. The characteristic emphases of Freud are to be found in Ibsen's masterpiece. There is the shameful fact suppressed in the subconscious of Hjalmar Ekdal; there is the revelation of the shameful fact to him by the idealistic and not too conscious Gregors Werle; and there is the cynical observation of a doctor — Doctor Reller — that it is not always wise to tell suffering people the truth about their sufferings.

The major emphases in The Wild Duck are point for point the ones made many years later in The Iceman Cometh, and the only superiority in the later work is that O'Neill's dramatic analyst, the salesman Hickey, is more interesting than Ibsen's fatuously high-minded Gregors Werle. If we are inclined to attribute to Freud some measure of influence on O'Neill's work — and there is little doubt that Freudian ideas did influence Mourning Becomes Electra, Strange Interlude and The Iceman Cometh — I suggest this qualification: if O'Neill was influenced by Freud it was because of Ibsen. Perhaps one could put the matter thus: Ibsen exposed O'Neill to Freud's ideas.

Ibsen had a similar effect on Arthur Miller and on Tennessee Williams. The more interesting case is that of Miller, insofar as this playwright at one time was committed to definite social and political views (I do not know Miller's views at the present time). Yet Miller, even when he was attracted to the political Left, made the dynamic and organizing ideas of his two most famous plays, Death of a Salesman and A View from the Bridge, not social or political ideas, but psychological notions derived from Freud. Since Miller's plays seem to have social meaning, even though organized on psychological lines, they lack the unity and definiteness of Williams' works, which are frankly psychological, openly Freudian.

But perhaps I should have said that Williams' plays are Ibsenian. For there can be little doubt that Ibsen outlined the fundamental horizon for any kind of drama in which the family unit is the widest collectivity envisaged. Now when a dramatic action is conceived in such terms, psychology is bound to be the privileged method of analysis. And since Ibsen himself did not need Freud to do the very things his successors in the American realistic theatre have done, we are entitled to think that his successors did not really need Freud either. So recent a play as Virginia Woolf is fundamentally an Ibsenian play, though perhaps Albee's is a negation, even a caricature, of this kind of play. The widest collectivity envisaged in Virginia Woolf is still the family; the only novel thing

---

[2] I did not see Fly Blackbird! when it was playing in New York; but I am told that, in addition to its air of exuberance, it had a social impact far exceeding that of the revues I mentioned above. Its "book" was about a freedom march, and the relevance, not to say hazards, of that form of political protest was undoubtedly what gave the show its bite.

The Materials

poems

by George Oppen

"This book, because of its excellence, and because it bears so directly on the concerns of young poets today, should remind us that the history of our poetry has yet to be written"—Harvey Shapiro, N. Y. Times Book Review.

"The precision with which Oppen sets down the images that inform these poems is like the articulation of form in cliff-flowers and shore-growing pines" — William Meredith, N. Y. Herald Tribune Book Review.

"Now these clean constructions move me again. They fulfill what he has promised to do with the poetic line, to keep it clean and succinct. He has never varied in his direct approach to the word as the supreme burden of the final poetic image" — William Carlos Williams.

"Oppen is among the handful of craftsmen writing verse in our time . . . The entire book resolves itself into a remarkable achievement in clarity and precision" — Gilbert Sorrentino, Kulchur.

"Oppen's lines are as strong and unadorned as steel girders. His constructions with words are as solid as stone or brick"—Dennis Powers, Oakland Tribune.

Paperbook Original, $1.25

Published by

New Directions & San Francisco Review

in Albee's work is that it is not about a real family, but about a couple who have failed to form one.

What Ibsen's plays lack, and what makes them essentially nonpolitical and ultimately middle class, is something that has been called "the consciousness of the forum." This kind of consciousness, which presupposes a wider collective unit than the family, has to be expressed in any truly political play; moreover, this kind of consciousness cannot be analyzed in Freudian or psychological terms. And it is this "consciousness of the forum" which society now lacks; it was supposed to be supplied in our time by the proletariat. Nowadays, members of the proletariat are very probably in the process of being psychoanalyzed. But a "consciousness of the forum" is surely present among the American Negroes; it is imposed upon them by their situation. Even if American Negroes would prefer to understand their feelings in terms of psychoanalytical — I almost said bourgeois — notions, I think history will not permit them such a luxury. They have to think — and are thinking, in fact — in much more political terms. The Negroes have to act upon the whites and on themselves, and this is something quite different from going to a doctor to be cured of one's irrational drives. While American whites have been lying on the couch, American Negroes have been asked by history — theirs and ours — to stand up.

A different kind of play from the Ibsen play is now possible to American dramatists, even to those who would like to deal with American life realistically. The kind of play I have in mind will be concerned with the actions taking place among American whites and blacks in the North and in the South. And let no one think it a small matter to be able to escape the influence of Ibsen in writing a realistic play. Consider that when so modernistic a playwright as Jean Cocteau wanted to write a play about a real family, he wrote, despite his insistence on "poetry of the theatre," and all the tricks of avant-gardism, what is an Ibsen play, Les Parents Terribles (Intimate Relations), which happens to be his best work.

But if it is almost impossible to get away from the Ibsen form when you are dealing as a dramatist with the family, very different forms become possible as soon as a wider social unit is envisaged. Chekhov's plays are different from Ibsen's, not merely because of the very different sensibilities of the two dramatists, but also because of the Russian playwright's special concern for the fate of the Russian intelligentsia and of the Russian aristocracy; these groups could not be represented in tightly knit structures like the plays of Ibsen. Inspired by the progressive and radical politics of the thirties, Clifford Odets found a model in Chekhov's plays, and was able to dramatize conflicts wider than those immediately felt within the family. Odets' Awake and Sing owes as much to Chekhov's Ivanov as O'Neill, Miller, Williams and Albee owe to The Wild Duck.

My claim is that the existing movement for Negro liberation has again made political plays possible; moreover, these possible plays might have some form other than the Ibsenian plays with which we are only too familiar. Now this is an interesting fact indeed. Some years back there were many Negro writers — James Baldwin was one of them — who resented the claim made on them by Negroes to use their literary talents in propagandizing for Negro rights. I think I understand why Negro writers resisted this claim on them; they felt it as limiting the kind of art they wanted to produce. But at the time I am speaking of there was not in evidence any new artistic possibility in the dramatization of Negro problems. What is new in the present situation, as a result of what Negroes have achieved in the North and in the South, is that the individual Negro, representing his fellows, has become dramatic, a historical figure.

By one of those unexpected ironies of history (which keeps it, by the way, from becoming uninteresting) the American Negro has suddenly acquired some of the characteristics — and value to the dramatist — of the sixteenth-century European king. Almost everything Negroes do or want to do, even the irrational things, have political meaning today. If a Negro falls in love with a white girl, politics is there; if a Negro elects to believe in Allah rather than in Christ, politics is present, possibly of a very drastic kind; when Mr. Meredith decided that he wanted to be educated at the University of Mississippi, we almost had a television rerun of the Civil War; two men are dead already, and no one knows what the consequences of Meredith's deciding to be educated at a very poor school are finally going to be. Practically everything Negroes do will have political meaning, and possibly grave consequences. For this reason alone Negroes cannot fail to be interesting now to sensitive dramatists, white or black.

Poets Without Prophecy

Hayden Carruth

Beginning with whom? — not Eliot — with Arnold perhaps? — well, beginning rather long ago the meaning of the words poem and poet shifted finally from a matter of substance to a matter of technique. Today we can find vestiges of that older way of speaking. In the country where I live people still say, "Oh, that's poetry," when you tell them a lie; and I suppose somewhere people may still exclaim, upon seeing a sunset, "How poetic!" We do not say these things. We consider them offensive. For us a poem is a work of art, a composition of verbal materials, a thing, and the poet is the maker who makes it.

Hayden Carruth's poetry has been collected in several volumes, most recently in The Norfolk Poems (Prairie Press) and Journey to a Known Place (New Directions). He has completed a novel for publication by Macmillan and is at work on a book about Camus under a Bollingen grant.

I don't want to suggest that we are wrong; certainly I don't want to excuse the sentimentality and unctuousness which were the end products of the old view. But I would like to point out that these end products were a long time in coming — centuries, in fact — and that there distinctly was something grand and ennobling in the idea that a poet was to be known not by his art but by his vision; something more than grand and ennobling, something essential. And we have lost it.

I don't know what to call it, precisely. It's hard to move back into that area of old custom without falling prey to the soft, foolish terms it spawned so readily toward its close. But let's extend to one another the charity of understanding and agree on an acknowledged orotundity: the "larger vision of humanity." Once the poet was our spokesman and not our oracle, our advocate and not our secret agent, or at least he was as much the one

Press, Radio, T.V. & Mag

Joe,
If possible, file this periodical whole. Might come in handy if we ever do report on Negro press.
Thanks,
SB

NEW YORK CHAPTER
THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE

NEGRO PRESS DIGEST
May 6, 1963

Contents

BLACK MUSLIMS	P. 1
BUSINESS & BOYCOTTS	P. 1
CHURCHES & RELIGIONS	P. 2
CUBANS	P. 3
EDUCATION	P. 3
EMPLOYMENT PROBLEMS	P. 5
ENTERTAINMENT & SPORTS	P. 7
FOREIGN NEWS	P. 8
KENNEDY & CIVIL RIGHTS	P. 9
MISSISSIPPI	P. 10
NAACP	P. 10
NATIONAL NEWS	P. 11
NEGRO LEADERSHIP	P. 12
NEGRO PRESS	P. 13
PERSONALITIES	P. 13
POLITICS	P. 14
POWELL	P. 16
PUBLIC ACCOMMODATIONS	P. 17
REAL ESTATE & HOUSING	P. 18
RELIEF & WELFARE	P. 18
UNIONS	P. 19
VOTING	P. 19
MISCELLANEOUS	P. 20

published by
The Community Information Committee
Robert L. Pelz, Chairman

Co-Editors
Mrs. M. J. Kleinfeld Mrs. Louise Levinson
Mrs. Marilyn Gilbert, Contributing Editor

NEGRO PRESS DIGEST

Statement of Purpose

The Negro Press Digest is published for the purpose of providing its readers with news and views of Negro newspapers and news magazines circulated in New York City. The Digest is not intended to present a cross-section of the content of the publications it reviews but focuses upon articles dealing with such matters as civil rights, civil liberties and intergroup relations. Emphasis is given to articles of local interest and national consequence.

News that has been adequately treated, in the judgment of the editors, in the daily press or on the broadcasting media is not duplicated in the Digest unless the Negro press reports such news from a distinctly different point of view.

The New York Chapter of The American Jewish Committee hopes that this publication will help fill an important need in intergroup relations, which is: improved communications bringing fuller knowledge of the problems, aspirations and frustrations of the Negro community as expressed in their press. This periodical, therefore, is designed to foster greater understanding and thereby further the development of truly effective human relations efforts. With this Digest, the New York Chapter of The American Jewish Committee fills a gap in local informational services even as the national American Jewish Committee's Yiddish and Christian press digests accomplish this purpose in other areas.

-- Robert L. Pelz, Chairman
Community Information Committee
New York Chapter
The American Jewish Committee

BLACK MUSLIMS

FINDS NEGROES PREFER INTEGRATION TO MUSLIMS

Chicago Daily Defender (March 28)

An Urban League official said that "The Black Muslims, like the American Nazi Party, the John Birch Society and the White Citizens' Councils will make the headlines..but they will not capture the hearts of the nation's..Negroes." However, the existence of the Muslims should warn us that if Negroes are persistently denied equal opportunity in all sector of life, they will begin to fight hatred with hatred. Most Negroes do not want a separate society in America.

THE GIANT KILLERS

Amsterdam News - Column: Another Angle by James L. Hicks (April 6)

Week after week a Negro leader will go on a radio or TV program to destroy Malcolm X but the result is always the same. Malcolm X comes out looming bigger while the Negro leader is himself demolished. These "giant killers" are not really as silly as they appear to be when they argue the white man's point of view against Malcolm X.. but they are fighting the wrong war in the wrong place at the wrong time. It is folly today for one Negro to declare war on another. It is the common enemy who must be fought.. the white men who deny black men the right to first class citizenship.

BUSINESS & BOYCOTTS

TWU OPPOSES AIRLINE MERGER

Amsterdam News (March 9)

TWU lawyer Clayton Sinclair said thousands of Negroes employed and living in norther cities would be forced to transfer to cities where racial discrimination is the tradition if the proposed merger of Eastern Airlines with American Airlines is approved by the Civil Aeronautics Board.

THE CHANGING SOUTH

Amsterdam News - Along This Way, Column by Roy Wilkins (March 16)

The acute problems resulting from Negroes fleeing the Southern Way of Life may be eased if the South heeds Governor Terry Sanford of North Carolina. He says his state has realized the importance of opening new economic opportunities for Negro citizens. He criticized the South for its failure to utilize the Negro's assets.

WIN $50 MILLION PLEDGE FOR NEGRO HOUSING

Chicago Daily Defender (March 26)

A group of Chicago Negro mortgage bankers obtained $50 million for Negro housing after a conference in New York with some big banks and insurance companies. It will be divided among 50 Negro mortgage firms throughout the country. The group didn't have much luck with insurance companies.

URBAN LEAGUE COLD-SHOULDERS WALDORF ASTORIA - Chicago Defender (3/27)
NEGROES BOYCOTT WALDORF - Amsterdam News (March 30)
BOYCOTT STAYS - New York Courier (April 6)

While New York's Waldorf Astoria Hotel is being picketed by the Congress of Racial Equality, the NAACP as well as the Urban League of Greater New York cancelled plans to hold fund-raising dinners and chose other hotels for the functions. It is charged that the Food and Beverage Department of the Waldorf practices discriminatory hiring. Out of 400-500 employees in that department, there were only three Negro waiters.

NEGRO FIRMS URGED TO EXPAND MARKET - New York Courier (4/3)
U.S. TELLS NEGRO BUSINESSMEN TO STOP BIAS - Jet (4/4)

According to a report released by the U.S. Department of Commerce (Problems and Opportunities Confronting Negroes in the Field of Business), Negro businessmen should set their sights on broader horizons in the mainstream of American business instead of operating in a racially restricted market.. change their concepts, attitudes and locations.. employ whites.

CHURCHES & RELIGIONS

MISSISSIPPI METHODISTS VOTE FOR SEGREGATION

Jet (March 21)

Supporting continued segregation, the Central Mississippi District Layman's Fellowship of the Methodist Church voted overwhelmingly for a resolution "to preserve each race in its rightful place before God".

INTERRACIAL MARRIAGE

Amsterdam News - Column: Another Angle by James L. Hicks (March 30)

Monsignor Adamo, Executive Editor of the Catholic Star Herald, granted permission for the reprint of his article in which he wrote: Today it is the Government, rather than the Church, which leads the way in dealing with the race issue.. but the Government will never venture into what is the heart and soul of the issue.. intermarriage.. the real acceptance of the colored. Marriage integrates as nothing else can. While no one would urge mass intermarriage, such marriages are moral and laudable. It is time to dispel the prejudices.

RULE NEGROES TRESSPASSED AT WHITE ALA. CHURCH

Jet (April 4)

Gerald Johnson, Lillie Montgomery and Donald Duncombe who tried to worship at a white Talladega, Ala. Methodist Church last April were convicted of tresspass.

CALLS RACIAL BIAS CALL TO CONFESSION

Amsterdam News (April 6)

Bishop Joseph H. Hodges of Wheeling, West Virginia, stated before the National Council of Catholic Women that unjust treatment of Negroes by Catholics is a matter for confession.

ALL MEN EQUAL, POPE JOHN XXIII TELLS WORLD - Chicago Defender (4/11)
POPE REASSERTS HIS BELIEF IN BROTHERHOOD - N. Y. Courier (4/20)

Pope John declared in his Holy Week encyclical that racial discrimination can no longer be justified doctrinally or in theory. He called for the elimination of every trace of racism. Pope John re-emphasized his frequently expressed statement that "all men are equal by reason of their natural dignity."

A NEW DAY IN HUMAN RELATIONS

Amsterdam News - Column: Along This Way by Roy Wilkins (4/20)

Recently Pope John struck out at racism in his encyclical when he said racial discrimination can no longer be justified. This is what civil rights forces in this country have been saying even before the Civil War. Catholic, Protestant and Jewish churches are becoming more and more active in the field of human rights.. and enactment of fair employment laws. The Jews have a long history of assistance over a wide area in the civil rights field, not only preaching the moral truth from their synagogues, but working day to day on problems at hand. Protestant colleges are slowly opening their doors. Now the spiritual head of Catholics the world over has reiterated and elaborated upon the racial and human stand of his Church. Let Greenwood, Mississippi, Birmingham, Alabama, and their police dogs hear.. Let the filibusters in the U.S. Senate hear.. Let the racists, white or black give ear.

CUBANS

CUBAN REFUGEES TAKE JOBS OF FLA. NEGROES - by John Britton, Jet (3/21)
NEGLECTED AMERICANS - Amsterdam News, Column: Along This Way by Roy Wilkins (March 21)

Nine years after the Supreme Court's Decision more than 2 million Negro children are still attending segregated schools. The Federal Government is aiding the State of Florida to educate thousands of Cuban refugee children in a program costing more than ten million dollars. For foreign children, there has been money and a solution to their problems. For American children who happen to be black, no help whatsoever. Parents and voters will not forget. In Miami, thousands of Cuban refugees are given jobs once held by or denied to Negroes. Miami admits that thousands of Negroes are unemployed because their jobs are given to Cubans who work for lower wages.

THE WORLD TODAY - N. Y. Courier, Column by George S. Schuyler (3/30)
HISTORY SHOWS - N. Y. Courier, Column by J. A. Rogers (4/13)

A Negro labor leader of Florida told on a television program of the hardships imposed upon Negroes by the flood of Cuban refugees. Negro unemployment has more than doubled. A Florida Negro mother with one child gets $32 a month on relief, while the refugees with no dependents get $60. The Negroes are reported as bitter.

EDUCATION

COLLEGE MEN NEEDED

N.Y. Courier - Column: My View by Benjamin E. Mays (March 16)

At present sixty percent of Negroes in college are women and only forty percent are men. More Negro men must be encouraged to attend college. Or, in the future, the more highly trained women will be bringing some higher pay checks than the men.

MANY HIGH SCHOOL TEACHERS FOUND WEAK IN HUMAN RELATIONS

Chicago Daily Defender (March 20)

A study of more than 1000 teachers in Midwest high schools found that many teachers, well-prepared academically, are inadequately fitted to meet the problems of human relations in the classroom. Some teachers have negative attitudes toward all minority groups, are distinctly aware of social and class differences and allow their own prejudices to become apparent in handling school problems.

FIND VA. NEGRO TEACHERS BETTER TRAINED THAN WHITES - Defender (3/20)

VA. NEGRO TEACHERS BETTER QUALIFIED THAN WHITES - Jet (4/4)

The Virginia Education Association reports that Negro teachers in Virginia are better trained than white ones. Many more Negro teachers hold regular and advanced degrees. A high school graduate in Virginia can start teaching at once and take 20 years to get a college degree. Lax certification and low salaries also contribute to poor calibre of teachers.

NEGRO, WHITE TEACHERS SEEK MERGER PLAN

New York Courier (March 23)

Money is one of the difficulties in consolidating the separate white and Negro Teachers Associations in Dade County, Florida, into one organization. The Negro group has more money in its teasury and owns property.

A VISIT TO GOD

Amsterdam News - Column: Another Angle by James Hicks (March 23)

NOT THE ANSWER - Editorial, Amsterdam News (April 6)

From the way people act when the Board of Education in Brooklyn is mentioned, God must live there. I wonder if he knows that New York State schools rank 35th in an illiteracy scale of the 50 states.. that in a study of adults in the nation who have completed high school or more, New York is AT THE BOTTOM half of the list.. that in 1961 every fifth New Yorker appearing before the Selective Service boards FAILED THE MENTAL TEST.. a rate exceeded only by the southern states and Hawaii! In the Presidential election of 1960, we ranked 32nd in a listing of presidential votes cast as a percent of the number of persons of voting age. It's time we got results for our money.. well trained boys and girls with better education. Until we get our dollars worth of the 647 million dollars yearly spent on education, neither this paper, nor any we have noted, will rally round our schools.

SPACE CITY FACES SCHOOL SEGREGATION SHOWDOWN

Chicago Daily Defender (March 28)

Two Negro technicians who work at the George C. Marshall Space Flight Center have applied under a Federal program to take courses at the Huntsville, Ala. unit of the University of Alabama. They were rejected for the spring term and have reapplied for summer session. The university is under Federal court injunction to admit qualified Negroes, but the Governor has vowed to stop all desegregation in his state.

JIM CROWED STUDENTS WON'T GO TO SCIENCE HIGH SCHOOL

Amsterdam News (March 20)

Not a single student from Harlem's two all-Negro junior high schools qualified for admission to the sought after Bronx High School of Science, but 14 Negro students attending integrated schools in the area have qualified for the science school.

CHARGES FLY IN FREE TUITION FIGHT -- DEM SENATORS FLAY CARLINO, STATE SCHOOLS

New York Courier (March 30)

Senators Watson and Thaler have challenged Assembly Speaker Carlino's statement that two percent of New York City's free tuition college students are Negro and Puerto Rican. They contend that his figures are manufactured or unlawfully obtained since the Civil Rights Law expressly prohibits any inquiry into a student's religious or social background. They also contend that the imposition of tuition in these colleges will sharply reduce the number of minority group students, as these are the ones least able to afford to pay.

SLUM TEACHERS

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (April 4)

It was socially offensive and educationally unsound to offer New York teachers a $1000 bonus to teach in slum schools and the United Federation of Teachers showed social responsibility in rejecting the proposal. Their alternative proposal was to use those funds for 10 pilot schools with small classes and extra services. Some schools operate successfully in slums; take a close look at how they do it.

NEGRO SCHOOL HEAD BLASTS BIASED THEORY

Chicago Daily Defender (April 8)

A Chicago school principal has blasted the theory that a Negro could not administer an all white staff in a predominantly white school. He has had no difficulty, even when he had to call in parents concerning problems with their children.

EMPLOYMENT PROBLEMS

CATERING TO MISSISSIPPI - N. Y. Courier (March 9)

U.L. TO PROPOSE 6 TRAINING PROJECTS UNDER U.S. MANPOWER DEVELOPMENT ACT

N. Y. Courier (March 16)

U.S. SUBSIDIZES SEGREGATION - Amsterdam News, Column by Jackie Robinson (March 21)

REPORT ON MANPOWER PROGRAM - Chicago Defender (March 21)

Proposals by Urban Leagues in six cities for establishment of federally-sponsored training and re-training programs in their communities, under provisions of the Manpower Development and Training Act of 1961, are nearing completion for submission to the U.S. Labor Department while that Department announced the graduation of first 38 trainees under the Act. Herbert Hill, NAACP labor secretary, however, bitterly denounced New York State for lagging behind in its use of the Federal program. Jackie Robinson chided NAACP and Roy Wilkins for allowing Government use of Negro taxes and Federal funds to underwrite segregated training programs in Mississippi. Washington Branch NAACP registered protest with Secretary of Labor Willard Wirtz for his approval of a Negro training center, pointing out this jimcrow program violates the fifth and fourteenth Amendments, and stressed that the standards are not even up to the now illegal doctrine of separate but equal.

RANDOLPH WARNS OF NEGRO JOB LOSS DUE TO AUTOMATION
Amsterdam News (March 23)
"ECONOMIC DISASTER" - New York Courier (March 23)

A. Philip Randolph, Negro vice-president of the AFL-CIO, warned that the economic health of the Nation's Negro community is extremely grave and shows signs of developing critical complications due to automation. He predicted an economic disaster for Negroes, a rise in unemployment which is already out of proportion with the population, and he urged Negroes to move President Kennedy to a deeper sense of the urgency of the economic plight of the Negro community.. move Congress to act upon the President's Youth Opportunity bill and federal fair employment practice legislation.

URGE JFK TO END RACIAL BIAS AT CAPE CANAVERAL
Chicago Daily Defender (March 25)

The NAACP has filed an affadvit with the President's Committee on Equal Housing Opportunity charging discrimination in the Cape Canaveral -Cocoa area of Florida and also filed complaints with the Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity charging job discrimination there. As a result of discrimination, it is charged, Negro citizens there are forced to endure substandard living, working and housing conditions.

WARNER BROS. FIRES NEGRO PRESS AGENT - Chicago Defender (March 27)
LAWYERS FLAY CONGRESSMAN KELLY FOR FIRING SECRETARY
Amsterdam News (March 30)

Two Negro "firsts" in their respective jobs have been fired. The Bedford-Stuyvesant Lawyers' Association, headed by George M. Fleary, has taken to task Congresswoman Edna F. Kelly for firing Mrs. Marjory Jackson, "the only Negro on a Congressional level" on her staff as of January 31. Vince Tubbs, who chalked up a "first" when he became press agent for a Hollywood studio has been "let out" by Warner Bros.

ORDERS END TO JOB BIAS IN WORK AT HOWARD U - Chicago Defender (3/27)
TICKER TAPE - CONFIDENTIAL -- Jet (April 4)
D.C. URBAN LEAGUE SEEKING QUALIFIED FINDS IT 'TOUGH' - Courier (4/6)

Students at Howard University discovered that contractors building a gymnasium there with Federal financing had not employed a single Negro workman. The Secretary of Labor ordered the employment of qualified Negroes within ten days. The shortage of skilled Negro workers is the result of jim crow apprenticeship policy of the unions, especially bad in the District of Columbia area.

THERE IS EVIDENCE

N. Y. Courier - Column: My View by Benjamin E. May (April 6)

The color bar is not as tight as it once was for the Negro college graduate. The competent student, who strives for excellence can find jobs in universities, industry and government.

NEW FRONTIER PUSHES FIGHT ON U.S. JOB BIAS

Chicago Daily Defender (April 9)

The Bureau of Printing and Engraving and the Treasury Department have developed a six-step program for further elimination of discrimination in employment: use of promotion registers to list those eligible for upgrading, posting of vacancy announcements, training to raise eligible workers to level of higher performance, non-competitive examinations where minimum qualification is sole requirement, monitoring of promotion practices in areas sensitive from a race relations viewpoint, prompt filling of vacancies.

ENTERTAINMENT & SPORTS

NEGRO BARRED -- NO 'GOLDEN GLOVES' IN TEXAS, SUH!

New York Courier (March 9)

The winner of the San Antonio, Texas Golden Gloves Boxing Tournament was barred from competing in the state-wide competition because he is a Negro. local custom has been to conduct the competition on a segregated basis, according to its sponsor, the Fort Worth Star Telegram. The local regional secretary of the NAACP hopes to prevail upon the national sponsors of the tournament, the Chicago Tribune, to reject fighters from any state which would bar any boxer because of race.

OLYMPICS AND RACE BIAS

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (March 13)

The International Olympic Committee has proposed that recognition be withdrawn from any nation practicing political, racial or religious discrimination. What purpose does athletic prowess serve if distortion of the mind becomes part of the cult?

OSSIE DAVIS SEES FUTURE MILLIONS IN PRODUCTION OF NEGRO MOVIES

Chicago Daily Defender (March 26)

Ossie Davis, who is filming his own "Purlie Victorious" says that the Negro market alone could recoup the negative costs on a Negro film and the art audience is also a potential market. Although there have been good films which dealt with the Negro situation, he feels the Negro can't identify with what he usually sees on the screen, where events are often treated in a heavy-handed manner.

COZY COLE'S CREW COPS KUDOS

N.Y. Courier - Article by Adolph Slaughter (March 30)

State Department officials were jubilant over the success of the jazz revue tour of a 14-man interracial group in fourteen African countries headed by drummer Cozy Cole.

VIEWS AND REVIEWS

N. Y. Courier - Column by George S. Schuyler (April 6)

Although historically the Negro played a big part in the winning of the West, only one Negro appeared in the picture "How The West Was Won", and he appeared as a bartender. Negroes were trappers, cowboys and soldiers. One must then conclude that the Negro was purposely left out -- again.

FOREIGN NEWS

WHY AMERICAN NEGROES ARE NOT GOING TO AFRICA

Chicago Daily Defender - Article by Homer Smith (March 11)
THE PEOPLE: REFUTES SMITH ARTICLE - Chicago Defender (March 20)

Africans wonder why American Negroes don't come over and help them. Before independence American Negroes couldn't get visas to African states. Now all they have in common is color, for American Negroes have a new language, culture, religion and mores. African countries need their skills but living standards in Africa are so low, payment for services so inadequate and investment opportunities so impractical that the improving environment for Negroes in America looks much better to American Negroes. In a Letter to the Editor, one reader insists that if blacks in America had enough money to take their families, they would rush to Africa since they are losing their love for the white man here.

AFRICAN AND AMERICAN NEGROES TRADE IDEAS

New York Courier (March 16)

At the Howard University Alumni Club of New York, a panel discussion on "Better Communication between the African and the American Negro Community" agreed that true African history should be taught in schools, that speakers from African embassies should be invited to talk about Africa, and that newly arrived Africans should be helped to get settled.

ASIAN STATUS IN AFRICA IN DOUBT - Chicago Daily Defender (3/20)
REPORT SUDANESE ATTACK NEGROES, CHRISTIANS - Chicago Defender (4/3)

Both Europeans and colored Asians are targets for the sharp upsurge of African nationalism. Indians have been told to become naturalized African citizens or pack up and return to India. Non-Africans must adjust to the changing order, African leaders say. In Sudan the Moslem-controlled regime is discriminating against both the Negro minority and Christians, according to a report to the UN Human Rights Commission. "Tens of thousands" of them have fled to neighboring countries, it is said.

U.S. NEGROES, AFRICANS PLAN STRONGER LINK - Chicago Defender (4/8)
'SAVING' THE AFRICANS FIRST - Editorial, N. Y. Courier (4/13)

The committee of American Negro leaders whoorganized the Arden House Conference last fall met with a representative of the African UN delegations to plan organization and financing of a new group to heighten the U.S. Negro's interest in African countries as part of the U.S. role in Africa. The Courier feels that this Save-Africa-First group might as well realize that the gravy train is slowing down as U.S. taxpayers see 6,000,000 unemployed in our midst, most of which are Negroes.

KENNEDY & CIVIL RIGHTS

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE HAILS JFK'S CIVIL RIGHTS MESSAGE, BUT ---

New York Courier (March 9)

NUL'S Whitney Young praised President Kennedy's Special Message on Civil Rights as the most comprehensive statement on the subject and one which reflects the urgency of time. However, it was viewed with some concern that there was no legislation recommended in the area of racial discrimination in employment to strengthen the program of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity.

JFK'S PROGRAM HAILED - Amsterdam News (March 9)
TAKES 1 HOUR TO REGISTER 1 NEGRO - Amsterdam News (March 16)

While some civil rights leaders hailed President Kennedy's civil rights program asking for new powers to safeguard Negro voting rights, Negro leaders were less enthusiastic. NAACP's Roy Wilkins said the document, although admirable, did not go far enough. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. said the message is contradicted by what is being done by the Federal government in impacted school areas in the South where the government is going along with segregation on off-post military base schools. Frank Robinson, CORE field secretary, recently shed light on some tactics employed in Kingstree, South Carolina, which pointed up the immediate need of governmental aid in helping the Negro attain his voting rights. Negroes are kept waiting for exasperating lengths, given difficult tests and are asked questions which violate their liberties.

MR. WILKINS REGRETS

N. Y. Courier - Editorial (March 16)

NAACP's Executive Secretary Roy Wilkins, while praising "admirable" aspects of Kennedy's first civil rights message to Congress, regrets "serious omissions" which he says weakened the over-all impact. The Courier also regrets the President's failure to ask Congress to do something forthright about civil rights especially discrimination in federally assisted housing both new and old. Representative Lindsey of New York said it was nearsighted to believe that discrimination will be solved in four years and that it is self-defeating to limit the Federal Civil Rights Commission's life to a period so short as to discourage able persons from seeking employment with the Commission.

JFK HAILS NEGRO PRESS' 136TH ANNIVERSARY

Chicago Daily Defender (March 19)

In a tribute to the Negro press on its 136th anniversary, President Kennedy declared that in spite of hardships Negro newspapers have "never stopped working toward the goal of equal opportunity".

A GOOD MOVE

Amsterdam News - Editorial (March 21)

President Kennedy is pressing in the right direction with his aid to medical education bill. Today the Negro population numbers twenty million.. has less than 5,000 Negro doctors and approximately 2,000 dentists. When one considers the strict segregation pattern followed in both Northern and Southern communities, the great burden on this handful of Negro doctors becomes apparent.

HISTORY SHOWS

N.Y. Courier - Column by J. A. Rogers (March 23)

In his special message to Congress, President Kennedy showed he fully realizes that Negroes are robbed of their rights. If the same conditions existed in a foreign land, this nation would rush to the rescue with funds. But there are political forces more powerful than he that prevent the solution here.

MISSISSIPPI

PENALIZING MISSISSIPPI

New York Courier - Editorial (March 23)

Although the NAACP has urged the President to withhold Federal funds from Mississippi - and this ought to be done - everybody knows it is not going to be done because Mississippi is a Democratic state and no Democratic administration can attempt it. But there is nothing against demanding such drastics.

TERROR IN MISSISSIPPI

Amsterdam News - Column: Along This Way by Roy Wilkins (April 6)

With guns, police dogs and arson, Mississippi white people are forcing their peculiar way of life upon Negro citizens who try to exercise their rights. The Federal government ought to step in, enjoin or arrest officials who interfere with vote registration, free registration workers who are jailed. For 100 years Mississippi has been telling the government and the Negro to go to Hell.. It's time a stand was taken.

NAACP

NAACP FIGHTING ITS CRITICS - Amsterdam News (March 30)

PREDICTS FAILURE FOR POWELL'S NAACP BOYCOTT - Chicago Defender (3/27)

Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP, predicted failure for Rep. Adam Clayton Powell's call for a boycott of the NAACP, because American Negroes know full well that the NAACP has been the principal factor in achieving substantial progress in race relations.. that white people who feel an obligation will continue to work with the organization for a just solution.

A GRAIN OF TRUTH

Amsterdam News - Column: White-on-White by Gertrude Wilson (April 6)

I am a Life Member of NAACP because I think it is one of the greatest organizations in the country.. represents democracy fighting for its life. Few people realize that segregation is a two-way street, and I do not want my children brought up in a false concept of what the world really is. It is not totally white; it is integrated, and in fighting for NAACP, I fight for my children. Although I regret Powell's criticism, I cannot understand why there has not been a Negro president of this organization in 54 years and I hope notice will be taken of the grain of truth which lies behind the accusations.

NATIONAL NETWORK OF PICKET TEAMS SET BY NAACP

Chicago Daily Defender (April 9)

The NAACP has called for the establishment of a nationwide network of picketing and demonstration groups ready to go into immediate action on word from national and regional offices.

WILKINS RAPS SOUTH FOR ITS POOR DESEGREGATION RECORD

Chicago Daily Defender (April 8)

Speaking in Greensboro, N. C. NAACP's Roy Wilkins said that school desegregation since 1954 has proceeded at a rate of less than 1% a year and will take 99 more years at this rate. He also said that Adam Clayton Powell's proposal to eliminate white membership in NAACP asks the Negro to do to the whites the very thing he complains was done to him.

NATIONAL NEWS

SIGNIFICANT COURT DECISION

New York Courier - Editorial (March 9)

Will the United States Supreme Court rule as generously in the cases in Albany, Georgia and elsewhere as it did in Columbia, South Carolina, where it ruled that Negroes were unjustly convicted on breach of peace charges in 1961 for demonstrating against racial discrimination?

NEGRO POLITICAL STRENGTH FINALLY ALIVE IN LOS ANGELES

Chicago Daily Defender - Article by A. S. "Doc" Young (April 3)

From 60,000 in 1940, Los Angeles' Negro population has grown to over half a million and Negro voters have sprung to life as a result of the swelling population, the large percentage of home ownership without a ghetto, growing maturity, and the emergence of capable Negro leadership. Numerous elective and appointive offices are theirs in Los Angeles with more to come since the power of Negro voters is snowballing under united leadership.

RUSSIAN FLAY TRAVEL CURB TO MISSISSIPPI

Chicago Daily Defender (April 10)

The Soviet newspaper Tass quoted a dispatch from its New York agency, saying "Racists continue terrorizing the Negro population and its leaders in the South". It concluded by stating that American authorities do not allow Soviet correspondents to visit the South because political terror there contradicts attempts of American propaganda to present the U.S. as a model democracy. A State Department official said travel restrictions are imposed on Russians in strict reciprocity for restrictions imposed on our newsmen in the USSR.

NEGRO LEADERSHIP

IS WEST COAST NEXT OBJECTIVE OF KING? - N.Y. Courier (3/9)
SELECTIVE BUYING PROVES SUCCESSFUL - Amsterdam News, Column: Home Plate by Jackie Robinson (3/16)
ST. PETE MINISTERS PLAN SELECTIVE BUYING DRIVE - N.Y. Courier (3/23)

Dr. Martin Luther King and Ralph D. Abernathy spent the opening week of the Western Christian Leadership Conference in Los Angeles to help familiarize community leaders and the public with the selective buying concepts of the organization. Meanwhile, in St. Petersburg, Fla., a group of local ministers is organizing a "selective patronage" campaign to be evoked after fruitless negotiations with top management in the soft drink, dairy and baking industries. The Tampa-St. Petersburg area has an estimated 100,000 Negroes yet not a single firm in the three industries hires a Negro in sales, public relations, promotions or merchandising. In a recent column Jackie Robinson quotes from a confidential market letter sent as a service to marketing and media executives; gives sensational proof of selective buying programs which have changed hiring patterns in such companies as Gulf Oil, National Dairy Products, Tasty Baking, Pepsi-Cola Metropolitan Bottling, Sun Oil and A&P. He also stated that, although all the Philadelphia newspapers refused to carry accounts of the boycott against the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, that paper was forced to improve its hiring practice. He credited ABC's Jim Haggerty with waging a one-man campaign to break the color line in TV.

LETTER TO FLOYD PATTERSON

Amsterdam News - Column: Another Angle by James L. Hicks (3/16)

In a letter to Floyd Patterson, James L. Hicks described a $50-a-plate dinner for the benefit of the Wiltwyck School and the Floyd Patterson Halfway House. Out of 300 diners about 158 of them were Negroes willing to carry their share and show support for the school which has proved invaluable to the less fortunate children of New York.

SELFISH LEADERSHIP

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (March 27)

George Washington University law professor Monroe Freedman in an address on the Howard University campus assailed Negro leaders for failing to take stands on civil liberty issues which do not directly involve race relations. He singled out opposition to the Supreme Court prayer decision and noted that the Negro can depend upon the Jewish community for help, as one Negro leader said, but the Negroes would not support the Jewish Community when it asked for an end to prayers in public schools. While there may be extenuating grounds for this ethnic selfishness, Prof. Freedman's observation is relevant, and we should examine our position in this matter.

A CUTE TRICK

Amsterdam News - Column: Another Angle by James L. Hicks (April 13)

Robert Weaver, the former chairman of the board of NAACP, and Jack Wood, Jr., the NAACP's special assistant on housing, will be on the same speakers program where they will have to perform a cute trick of double talking. Both will represent opposite viewpoints, both will keep from putting one another on the spot, both will protect their bosses or respective organizations. The whole thing is wrapped up in a letter NAACP sent to President Kennedy about the 1,000 Negroes in the Cape Canaveral-Cocoa area who have no decent place to live despite the fact that there are 300 vacant unused homes in the area which were financed by the FHA.. and Weaver is the head of FHA.. but he is also the fair-haired boy of NAACP.

NEGRO PRESS

THE NEGRO MARKET

New York Courier - Column by Claude Hall (March 9)

Negro newspapers, with some exceptions, are hard-pressed for survival. The fault is partly their own, not all being paragons of journalism. However, a greater measure of local and national advertising would advance the cause of the Negro market.

THE SHARPER SIDE OF NEW YORK

New York Courier - Column by Hazel Sharper (April 6)

Now that the newspaper strike is over, it would be a fine time for Macy's Department store to include the Negro Press in its advertising schedule as part of the concern Macy expressed for newspaper workers.

PERSONALITIES

CHARLAYNE HUNTER TO JOIN STAFF OF NEW YORKER - Jet (March 18)
NEW YORKER HIRES GA. NEGRO COED - Chicago Defender, Column by Ben Burns (March 21)

After her graduation in June from the University of Georgia where she was the first Negro coed, Charlayne Hunter will join the staff of The New Yorker Magazine. She will have earned her B.A. degree in journalism at the University.

WHITE STUDENTS' PROFANITY SURPRISING TO MEREDITH - Amsterdam News, 3/30
A LETTER TO MEREDITH - Column by Dr. Martin L. King, Jr., Amsterdam News (March 30)

At the University of Mississippi, James Meredith, while commenting on the profane language hurled at him before white teachers, parents and other adults, claimed he is perhaps the most segregated Negro in the world. In his column, Dr. Luther King Jr. reminds both Negroes and whites that Meredith's ordeal still drags on while he demonstrates the inexorable course democracy must take if it is to survive. Dr. King suggests that a flow of letters would show he is not alone in his loneliness.

WHITE LEADER IN THE NAACP

Chicago Daily Defender - Article by Morton Cooper (April 2)

Jack Greenberg, head of the NAACP Legal Defense Fund, was one of those on Adam Powell's griddle. He was chosen for his job by Thurgood Marshall when Marshall was appointed to the U.S. Court of Appeals. To critics of his choice of a white lawyer, Marshall replied: "As those who are fighting discrimination, we cannot afford to practice it." Under Greenberg's aegis the Defense Fund has not lost a single case in the higher courts. He sees law as a religion and says that without lawyers there are no civil rights. He has represented Negro plaintiffs in every kind of civil rights case.

GREGORY VERSUS MISSISSIPPI

Chicago Daily Defender - Article by Betty Edwards (April 10)

On his return from Mississippi, Dick Gregory addressed 200 Baptist ministers in Chicago. He told them that when dogs were used to keep Greenwood Negroes from registering, a minister had to be imported from New York to help fight for the vote. A local white minister addressed Greenwood Negroes pleading: "God didn't intend for us to mix... but God loves us all". Gregory called Chicago the most racially tense city in the country and told the ministers they were the only Negro leadership left because the others had been bought by the white man downtown.

PHILLY LAWYER

Amsterdam News - Column: Home Plate by Jackie Robinson (April 13)

Philadelphia Tribune publisher, E. Washington Rhodes, brings to our attention the remarkable history of David Levinson who has been a practicing attorney for 59 years. He has had cases in eight southern states in defense of the Constitutional rights of Negro people and has never accepted a fee for his involvement in fighting their battle. Mr. Levinson has clung to the belief that, in fighting for the Negro, he fights his own battle as an American and a member of a minority group.

POLITICS

CAPITAL COMMENT

N.Y. Courier - Column by Lynn Williams (March 9)

The Negro struggle for full citizenship has been rendered less dynamic by the unprecedented number of appointments of its leaders to high level government positions. It is ridiculous to consider, as in the past, that these tan appointees were selected because they became too influential and troublesome to those in power. Optimistically it may reflect the possibility that we are nearer our goal.

GOVERNORS CAN END BIAS

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (March 20)

A private research group in Washington, D. C. says that a state Governor can take effective action to end racial discrimination even if his legislature drags its feet, provided he has strong backing from the public. The question is how far and how effectively state officials will use their authority.

GOP AND THE SOUTH

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (March 25)

Pennsylvania's Governor Scranton admonished the GOP not to throw in its lot with the segregationists, since "the guarantee of human and civil rights is a moral issue". Ignoring his wise counsel, GOP leaders of reactionary stripe, ridicule the importance of the Negro vote. In the last election they left the impression that they were more committed to segregation than any rabid Democratic racialists. For the Republicans to abandon the party's historic tradition of equal justice is to commit hari-kari.

LEGISLATIVE SNAIL'S PACE

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (March 28)

There is a large majority in the Senate in favor of an effective civil rights bill. How can the 18 filibustering Senators keep them from imposing cloture and forcing a vote? The liberals do not fight hard and long enough; they make unnecessary concessions. At this snail's pace it will take a millenium to achieve equity and justice.

POLL TAX AMENDMENT - Chicago Defender, Editorial (April 2)

9 STATES NEED RATIFY ANTI-POLL MEASURE - N.Y. Courier (April 13)

Only nine more states need to ratify the anti-poll tax amendment to make it the 24th in our Constitution. President Kennedy has urged 23 Governors to press for legislative approval before the 1964 national elections. The revocation of this undemocratic practice would add meaning and reality to the concept of a free society.

WILKINS SEES NEGRO SHIFT TO GOP UNLESS DEMS SPEED RIGHTS AID

Chicago Daily Defender (April 3)

Speakers addressing the National Civil Liberties Clearing House conference called for a variety of measures by the Federal government to uphold law and order in Mississippi. Roy Wilkins said Negro voters may shift their support to the Republican party unless the Democratic administration speeds things up - or the Negroes may even go it alone politically in order to get their needs met.

DEMS BLAST ROCKY FOR HIS JFK BLAST

Amsterdam News (April 13)

Governor Rockefeller was accused by three Negro Legislators of criticizing President Kennedy on civil rights to cover up his own dismal failure in the field of civil rights and economic discrimination.. also pointed out that Republicans in the Legislature had voted solidly as a bloc opposing motions by 3 Negro Democrats to bring bills out of Committee to give SCHR power to initiate industry-wide complaints.. accused Rockefeller of failing to take full advantage of Federal Retraining program.. imposing tuition fees in universities and city colleges.. suggested he buckle down to his own responsibilities.

NEGRO VOTE WON ELECTION FOR DALEY, EXPERTS AGREE -Chicago Defender, 4/4

CHICAGO NEGROES SHOW VOTE MUSCLES IN MAYORAL RACE - Jet (April 18)

Political pros admit that only the Negro vote relected Democratic Mayor Daley in Chicago's recent election. Daley's margin of victory was 137,531 votes - 103,547 of which came from predominantly Negro precincts. The losing Republican candidate failed to campaign in the colored community and came out against open occupancy.

POWELL

"UPPITY NEGRO" - Amsterdam News, Column: White-on-White by Gertrude Wilson (March 9)

'DESTRUCTION' OF POWELL IS BIGOT GOAL? - Article by Robert Robinson New York Courier (March 16)

MR. POWELL'S COMEUPPANCE - N. Y. Courier, Editorial (March 16)

Miss Wilson's view is that Congressman Powell is considered the "Uppity Negro" in white men's minds. She feels that no other committee chairman is told how he should run his committee by other Congressmen, and that censure from the Senate floor is unheard of. Mr. Robinson blames the pressure of key labor figures behind the scenes who want to cripple Powell's committee's investigative activities and destroy Powell as a Congressional power. The Courier editorial maintains that Powell left himself wide open for this attack by his irresponsibility. It suggests that there must be other Negroes in Powell's district who are quite as intellectually capable as he and less vulnerable.

LETTER TO "A FRIEND", JACKIE ROBINSON CONTROVERSY RAGES
RABBI CHIDES POWELL
NAACP DOING POWELL PAMPHLET

All the above appeared in the Amsterdam News, March 30, April 6 and 13

Jackie Robinson expressed his opinion that Adam Clayton Powell has grievously set back the cause of the Negro, failed in his role as important national leader of his people. Robinson chided Powell for his views on Malcolm X tactics.. Letters from many Amsterdam News readers agree that races should work together. Rabbi Dr. Arthur Schneier joined the many who were outspoken against racism; thought responsible Negro leaders should disavow Powell and reaffirm their opposition to doctrine of race hatred. The NAACP will outline its position in a pamphlet to be published soon.

LAUDS ADAM POWELL FOR 'UNMASKING' NAACP - Chicago Defender (4/8)

GRAND MASTER BACKS POWELL - N. Y. Courier (4/13)

Supreme Grand Master of the Masons, Dr. Wm. Banks, praised Adam Clayton Powell for exposing the inner workings of the NAACP which were not generally known. Banks admitted knowing the NAACP board was integrated, but didn't know it was divided along policy lines, and felt Negro members should have more say.

THE REAL STORY BEHIND POWELL'S WAR ON TOP NEGRO GROUPS

New York Courier - Article by Evelyn Cunningham (March 30)

Underlying reasons suggested for Congressman Powell's blast of Negro organizations that are influenced or controlled by whites were: (1) that he was interested in having Negroes think and take a "hard look at their leadership", (2) his awareness of the dissatisfaction of young Negroes in existing Negro organizations, and (3) his annoyance with the failure of Negro leaders to support him when he has been in trouble.

POWELL TERMED 'HEADLINE SEEKER' BY TOP NAACP OFFICIAL HERE (3/26)

ABERNATHY HITS POWELL FOR ATTACK ON NAACP (4/1)

THE BIG POWELL DEBATE - Featured article (4/4)

All the above appeared in the Chicago Daily Defender

Top integration leaders and militant Negro citizens have taken exception to Representative Powell's call for a boycott of the NAACP. His chief defender is John H. Young 3rd of New York. John Young says Powell did not call for a boycott, but felt that the Negro is now mature enough to assume his own unrestricted leadership. The Urban League's Whitney Young Jr. resented Powell's view that Negro problems can be solved by compartmentalizing them within Negro society. Roy Wilkins pointed to the many dedicated white people who helped found and continue the program of the NAACP. Ralph Abernathy of the SCLC said that no one who believes in social justice is concerned with any particular race, but fights for the rights of all people. And Wilbur Daniel of the Chicago NAACP noted that white people - who caused the dilemma - have as much responsibility in the civil rights fight as do Negroes.

POWELL AND HIS CRITICS

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (April 2)

James Wechsler of the New York Post and many other individuals and organizations have angrily denounced Adam Clayton Powell's stand on the NAACP et al. We can understand their exasperation when a leader of Powell's calibre adopts bi-racialism; but isn't he saying that Negroes should be included in white councils where momentous decisions are made? Mr. Powell could have posed the question without dragging in the NAACP et al, and his thesis would then have gained public acceptance.

PUBLIC ACCOMMODATIONS

KENTUCKY DROPS RACE BARRIERS IN 73 TOWNS! -- BUT SWIMMING POOL JIM CROW STILL PERSISTS! - New York Courier (March 16)

APPROVE BILL TO END BIAS IN SWIMMING POOLS - Chicago Defender, Article by Simeon B. Osby (March 14)

According to a survey made by the Kentucky Commission on Human Rights, racial discrimination in municipally operated play areas has virtually disappeared except for a tendency to persist in swimming pools. In Illinois, the Househas passed by an overwhelming vote, and sent to the Senate a bill to amend the state civil rights code to include public swimming pools.

RESORT MUST REFUND $150 TO CLIENTS IF REJECTED

Amsterdam News (March 21)

An upstate resort which refused to accommodate a Negro family who had made reservations last year was ordered by the State Commission for Human Rights to turn over $150 to the victims.

REAL ESTATE & HOUSING

A NEW DEAL IN HOUSING

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (March 11)

Chicago's 5-man Urban Renewal Board recently approved a pilot plan for rehabilitation of old houses. The deciding vote was cast by the lone Negro member, even though the other board members in favor are bankers who keep mortgage money from Negroes. It is to his everlasting credit that he did not permit racial considerations to prevent his decision on the value of the project for the city as a whole.

NON-BIAS HOUSING IS KEY ISSUE IN MAJOR CITIES - Chicago Defender (3/11)
D.C. COMMISSIONERS SET TO BAN HOUSING BIAS - Chicago Defender (4/3)
ANTI-BIAS HOUSING MEASURE - Amsterdam News (4/6)

Legislation aimed at prohibiting racial and religious discrimination in the general housing market, and better enforcement of existing laws is pending in 13 states throughout the nation, and the District of Columbia, a survey by the National Committee Against Discrimination reveals. The report does not agree, as some circles contend, that housing discrimination and segregation result from low income and related disabilities of the Negro. There are thousands of non-whites who can afford to enter areas that are now all white.

WEAVER WARNS SUBURBS: PREPARE FOR NEGRO INFLUX

Jet (April 4)

The upward spiral of the Negro middle class, the increased concentration of housing and top schools in the suburbs is causing interest among Negroes who will live there in the years ahead, according to Robert C. Weaver. He further added that suburban community leaders had best prepare for an increase in Negro neighbors.

RELIEF & WELFARE

SCHOOL LUNCH BIAS PROBED BY MISS. CIVIL RIGHTS BODY

New York Courier (April 6)

Charges of discrimination against Negro students by local administrators of the federally financed free school lunch programs in Jackson and Greenwood, Mississippi have been levelled by members of the Mississippi Advisory Committee to the United States Civil Rights Commission. Some Negro students in Jackson do without food because they lack the funds to pay for a meal. In Greenwood, although fifty percent of the total enrollment is Negro, white students receive seventy-five percent of the free lunches.

NY RELIEF CONDITIONS BLASTED: 'INSULT', SNAPS WELFARE CHIEF (4/6)
HORWITZ REPORT CHARGES N.Y. WELFARE SYSTEM COULD BE NO. 1 CONTRIBUTOR TO DELINQUENCY (4/13)
Both above are from a series of articles in the New York Courier
BROOKLYN LAWMAKERS RESENT STATEMENTS ABOUT MINORITIES (4/6)
JONES CALLS HORWITZ REPORT "VICIOUS" (4/13)
Both above are from the Amsterdam News

The Horwitz report to the State on welfare conditions in New York City has been called a disservice to the destitute of the city. The report focuses its attention on the new-comers, particularly the Negro and Puerto Ricans, according to Welfare Commissioner James R. Dumpson. Assemblyman Steingut of Brooklyn criticized its "gross inaccuracies". Assemblyman Jones of Brooklyn called for specific remedial measures to correct conditions described... apprenticeship training programs for youth, a crash reading program, a housing program utilizing vacant or commercial space, and more cultural facilities for children. He called the report "vicious, whatever its intent".

UNIONS

32-HOUR WORK WEEK

New York Courier - Column: Horizon by P. L. Prattis (March 23)

I am opposed to all work weeks below 40 hours. The moral and therapeutic value of work has been completely forgotten or ignored in the period when collective bargaining has degenerated into stubborn stances over wages, fringes and shorter hours. Labor leaders have brought on automation, the thing they most fear, by forcing management to invent cheaper methods of producing than through high wages and fringe benefits.

$1 MILLION BIAS SUIT HITS BUILDING UNION - Chicago Defender, Article by Ted Coleman (March 26)

NIRB REPORT BACKS CHARGE OF UNION BIAS - Chicago Defender (March 27)

NIRB ON THE SPOT - New York Courier, Editorial (March 30)

The National Labor Relations Board will be on the spot if it refuses to act in accordance with the recommendations of its trial examiner, which vindicated the NAACP charge of unfair labor practices by some labor unions. Decertification is the only answer. Five members of the AFL-CIO building union have filed a one million dollar suit in U. S. District Court here against the union charging they were denied jobs and full participation in union affairs because they were Negroes.

FUTURE OF JIM CROW MUSICIANS UNION AT STAKE IN INTEGRATION BATTLE - Chicago Daily Defender (March 25)

50 MUSICIANS QUIT NEGRO UNION, JOIN WHITE LOCAL - Jet (April 4)

Some 50 members of Chicago's Negro musicians union joined the newly integrated but predominantly white Musicians Local. Efforts are being made to eliminate the International Federation of Musicians 38 segregated unions. Concern, however, was expressed over what will happen to Negro union officials if an eventual merger between the two major locals is consummated.

VOTING

THOUSANDS OF DIXIE NEGROES STUDYING TO WIN RIGHT TO VOTE

Chicago Daily Defender (March 25)

In order to pass voter registration tests, thousands of Southern middle-aged Negroes are studying under volunteer teachers, supported by a Ford Foundation grant, in order to win the right to vote. Thousands more must be roused from their apathy and recruited for classes.

ALABAMA AREA NEGROES VOTELESS FOR 50 YEARS - Chicago Defender (4/1)

None of 6085 Negroes eligible to vote in Wilcox County, Alabama is registered and have not tried to register, some for 50 years, because of the tradition of brutality against them and the resultant fear. The Civil Rights Commission reports that 2634 whites are eligible to vote and 2950 are registered (112%).

VOTER REGISTRATION

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (April 3)

The recent shooting of a Negro civil-rights worker in LeFlore County, Miss., has set off an intensive registration campaign for Negro voters. In 13 Mississippi counties, no Negroes are registered; in 42 others less than 10% of eligible Negroes are registered. The Voter Education Project is run by the four leading Negro voluntary agencies and has the endorsement of the chairmen, both of the Democratic and Republican National Committees. The Justice Department should extend its protective arms to them.

MISCELLANEOUS

LAWYER SAYS MORONS ALSO HAVE RIGHT TO INTEGRATE

Chicago Daily Defender (March 14)

A Washington, D. C. attorney told an Urban League meeting that "A Negro moron should have the right to go to any school that the white moron attends". He said the school cases were not being fought just for the bright Negro child.

HARLEM YOUTH SET TO RALLY AT CITY HALL - Amsterdam News (3/16)
MAYOR STRESSES NEIGHBORHOOD INTEREST IN FIGHT AGAINST YOUTH PROBLEMS
New York Courier (3/23)
UNITED HARLEM URGES JFK TO PUSH YOUTH BILL - N.Y. Courier (4/13)

Asserting that Harlem is united in its demand for a better life for its youngsters, the Harlem Neighborhoods Association, Inc. made public a letter sent to President Kennedy following the Harlem Youth Day Rally of 3,000 young people at City Hall. The letter urged the President to exercise his moral leadership to ensure passage of the Youth Opportunity Bill now before Congress. Mayor Wagner stated that the city government will spend the major portion of its energies and income on and in behalf of the youth of New York to meet the special demands of problems of children coming from severely deprived homes.

HOW BOMBING SPURRED SCHOOL INTEGRATION

Chicago Daily Defender - Column by Ben Burns (March 19)

Clinton, Tennessee's new high school was partially built with coins contributed from all over America after the old school was bombed. Violence always makes headlines and peaceful integration is forgotten. Desegregation is progressing quietly in Clinton and the rest of the county and even in another Tennessee county Negro students now attend the high school.

D.C. PASTOR RAPS RACISM - New York Courier (3/23)
D.C. CLUB BANS PEACE CORPSMAN - Chicago Defender (3/21)
PROBE D.C. BAN ON HOUSING BIAS - Chicago Defender (3/27)
D.C. RACIAL TENSIONS - Chicago Defender, Editorial (4/11)

A Unitarian minister spoke out recently against the deplorable racial situation in Washington. A Negro Peace Corps official, invited to address a Lions Club meeting at a private country club in Washington was turned away at the door by country club officials even though the Lions had welcomed a Negro speaker. District commissioners want to issue an order ending discrimination in housing in the D.C. area but must first submit it to the House District Committee, controlled by Southerners. Meanwhile racial tensions in the Capital grow sharper. Negroes feel the brunt of discrimination in employment, education and housing, all of which hamper them in improving themselves.

SAYS NEGRO "IMPROVEMENT" WON'T STOP WHITE HOODLUMS

Jet (March 28)

Rebutting Massachusetts Negro Attorney General Edward Brooke's urging Negroes "improve themselves", Providence Journal reporter James N.Rhea retorted "I am not at all sure that a bigot is any kinder to the Negro who has improved himself". Rhea reminded that James Meredith had spent considerable time in self-improvement which did not help him against the ignorance and violence of rabble at the University of Miss.

NEWSDEALERS EYE AMSTERDAM NEWS

Amsterdam News (March 30)

Newsstand operators expressed the opinion that expanded news coverage, coupled with evergrowing interest among white readers in the Negro's views, has sent demands for copies of the New York Amsterdam News soaring in areas where only mild interest had prevailed.

BROTHERS UNDER THE SKIN

Chicago Daily Defender (April 8)

If it is not true that Bonn is content to have German scientists help Egypt with missiles, the West Germans should repudiate the scientists. The Negro people have just as deep anxieties about revival of anti-Semitism as do the Jewish people. We both belong to the same fraternity of the persecuted. Our experience in Mississippi and the South convince us that race prejudice MUST be destroyed.

THE SOLID WALL CRACKS

Amsterdam News - Column: People in Action by Dr. Martin King Jr. (4/13)

The City Commission in Albany, Georgia, recently repealed the entire section of the city code that carried segregation ordinances. In the wake of the legal retreat the public library has been opened on a 30-day trial basis - integrated. There are no chairs and the reference rooms are not in use, but VERTICAL integration has been the prelude to full integration in library facilities in a dozen cities around the South.

Research for information on film —

Telephone 688-7510

NCCJ

Educating for Brotherhood

THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS AND JEWS, INC.

GEORGIA REGION
1144 Bank of Georgia Building
Atlanta 3, Georgia

DIRECTOR
Don McEvoy

Press, Radio, T.V. & Movies

NATIONAL CO-CHAIRMEN
Carrol M. Shanks
Robert D. Murphy
Lewis L. Strauss

CHAIRMAN EMERITUS
James F. Twohy

PRESIDENT
Lewis Webster Jones

EXECUTIVE VICE-PRESIDENT
Sterling W. Brown

HONORARY CHAIRMAN BROTHERHOOD WEEK
Governor Carl Sanders

GEORGIA CHAIRMAN BROTHERHOOD WEEK
Hon. A. J. Ryan, Jr.

GEORGIA REGION NATIONAL BOARD MEMBERS
Dr. S. Walter Martin
Dr. Herman L. Turner
A. J. Weinberg
Hon. Andrew J. Ryan, Jr.

ATLANTA ROUND TABLE CO-CHAIRMEN
Dr. Herman L. Turner
A. J. Weinberg
Robert S. Lynch

ATLANTA EXECUTIVE BOARD
Cecil Alexander
Louis Aronstam
J. Arch Avary, Jr.
Roy Collier, Jr.
Richard L. deGolian
Harry Dwoskin
Edgar J. Forio
Dr. Paul L. Garber
Abe H. Goldstein
George Goodwin
Edwin R. Haas, Jr.
Arthur I. Harris
Sinclair Jacobs
Gordon Jones
M. E. Kilpatrick
G. Albert Lawton
Armand May
Louis Regenstein, Jr.
Dr. Harry V. Richardson
Jacob M. Rothschild
Alex W. Smith, Jr.
Furman Smith
Robert Troutman, Jr.
Morton L. Weiss

COLUMBUS ROUND TABLE CO-CHAIRMEN
Louis T. Kunze
Aaron Cohn
S. A. Roddenbery, M.D.

SAVANNAH ROUND TABLE CO-CHAIRMEN
Thomas J. Dillon
A. H. Tennenbaum
Julius R. Holt

REGIONAL SECRETARY
Mrs. Billie M. Dell

May 24, 1963

To: Human Relations Agencies Personnel

From: Don McEvoy

Re: "The People Next Door"

Dear Colleague:

The NCCJ has just produced a new play entitled "The People Next Door". It is a clever, but powerful, study of the moving of a Negro family into an all-white neighborhood..... seen through the eyes of the children.

The Children's Theatre of Washington, D.C., presented this play on television recently, and a kinescope film was made of it.

On Tuesday morning at 10:00 A.M., in the Conference Room of the Dinkler Plaza Hotel, we are having a screening for persons who might find use for this film in program activities.

So, come on over. The coffee is free! The film is "first-run". Big premiere. Bring any of your staff along who can get away for forty-five minutes or so.

"—TO PROMOTE JUSTICE, AMITY, UNDERSTANDING AND COOPERATION AMONG PROTESTANTS, CATHOLICS AND JEWS, AND TO ANALYZE, MODERATE AND FINALLY ELIMINATE INTERGROUP PREJUDICES WHICH DISFIGURE AND DISTORT RELIGIOUS, BUSINESS, SOCIAL AND POLITICAL RELATIONS, WITH A VIEW TO THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A SOCIAL ORDER IN WHICH THE RELIGIOUS IDEALS OF BROTHERHOOD AND JUSTICE SHALL BECOME THE STANDARDS OF HUMAN RELATIONSHIPS." (NCCJ BY-LAWS)

There was a small anti-segregation demonstration this week in the one-time impregnable fortress of segregation, Jackson, Mississippi. Cameras and cameramen were present and the world was brought into that lunch counter, banked around it in tier upon tier of hypnotized observers, caught up in the drama to be played out there. Hundreds of millions of people the world over watched and saw segregation, saw racism, saw opposition to the Negroes' demands go down to crushing and overwhelming defeat.

The telephone calls and the letters indicate there was a national visceral reaction to the Negro youth lying on the floor and the white man kicking him. A national nausea welled up when a white woman poured catsup over the heads of the several Negroes and the white sympathizer sitting at the lunch counter. What the nation saw was an incredible victory of non-violence.

We shall continue in a moment but first this message from Pennzoil.

COMMERCIAL

We have learned something about ourselves, we Americans. We are not capable of meeting non-violence with effective violence. There are, possibly, some places in the world where the present sit-in demonstrations would be met with rifles, pistols, machineguns, or execution squads. Not here.

There was complete and utter frustration among the crowd of white people in that store in Jackson. When the Negro on the floor was kicked there was a stir of uneasiness among the jeering on-lookers, for the man who had delivered the blow with his foot had violated a fundamental precept of American life: you don't hit a man when he is down.

These non-violent tactics of the Negro are amazingly well inculcated. NBC, several years ago, sent its news cameras to one of the CORE headquarters where young Negroes were being instructed in the art of non-violent demonstration. We wondered whether it would work. Could the Negro refrain from counter-attacking with his voice, his fist, or his heart? And could the white bring himself to that ultimate violence which is the only effective response?

We have all read and heard about Ghandi's program of non-violent demonstration and protest in India, but that was India; and we were not sure it would work here. We have discovered that we, like the British, are not capable of driving a vehicle or a tank over the body of a protesting human being who lies down in the road.

There is a long way to go, of course, before racism is purged from our national and community lives, but the Negro has won his war. There is liberal potion of refreshment in all of this: the sudden and clear realization that we, Americans, are, after all, a civilized breed. The cruel among us are the exceptions.

Press, Radio, T.V. & Movies

MEMORANDUM

THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE
INSTITUTE OF HUMAN RELATIONS
165 East 56th Street, New York 22, N. Y. • PLaza 1-4000

from the desk of ISAIAH TERMAN
Director of Communications and Servicing

Read 7/26/63

TWO TV SERIES

1. On four successive Sundays beginning August 4 at 1:30-2 p.m. EDT, "The Catholic Hour" will present a series of "conversations" on the Second Vatican Council over the NBC-TV Network. James O'Gara, managing editor of Commonweal will host the series.

His guests will be Dr. Frederick Grant (August 4), a delegate-observer at the Council for the Anglican Communion (Protestant); Father Gregory Baum (August 11), professor of theology at St. Michael's College, University of Toronto, and editor of The Ecumenist; Father Frederick McManus (August 18), consultant to the Vatican Council's Commission on Liturgy; and Father Edward J. Duff (August 25) professor of sociology and ecclesiology at Weston College, Weston, Mass., and former editor of Social Order.

* * * *

11. On five successive Sundays beginning August 11 at 10:30-11 p.m. EDT, the American Broadcasting Company TV Network will present a series on the legal, economic, social and moral aspects of the race issue in this country. The series is entitled "Crucial Summer--the 1963 Civil Rights Crisis." Network news staff, visiting many parts of the country, will report via interviews, etc.

The points of view of segregationists will be heard on August 11 and of integrationists on August 18. Subsequent programs will be concerned with Civil Rights Legislation (August 25), the "March on Washington" (September 1) and a Summary (September 8).

Isaiah Terman

July 24, 1963
3abd

NB
MM
MC
MG
LD

Press, Radio, T.V., & Movies

Press Coverage of Morland pamphlet - "Tokenism"

August 1, 1963

SB CH

~~Papers which carried UPI story~~

New Haven, Conn. Register
Arkansas Gazette

Papers which carried AP story

The News, Lynchburg, Va. (Hoyt Harwell)
New York Herald Tribune
Danville, Va. Register
Newport News, Va. Press (Hoyt Harwell)
New Orleans, La. Times-Picayune (Hoyt Harwell)
Asbury Park Evening Press, New Jersey
Albuquerque, N.M. Journal
Oakland, Calif. Tribune
Trenton Sunday Times Advertiser, New Jersey

Papers that carried their own story

New York Times
Atlanta Journal and Constitution (Fred Powledge)
Lynchburg, Va. Advance
Memphis, Tenn, Tri-State Defender
Boston, Mass. Jewish Advocate
The Christian Science Monitor (Bicknell Eubanks)
The Washington Post (Susanna McBee)
~~Milwaukee, Wiss. Labor Press~~

SB CH

Addendum

Papers which carried UPI story

Boston, Mass. Advertiser
St. Louis, Mo. Post- Dispatch
Middletown, N.Y. Times Herald Record
Jackson, Miss. Clarion-Ledger
Houston, Texas Chronicle

Papers which carried AP story

Duluth, Minn. News Tribune
Roanoke, Va. Times (Hoyt Harwell)
Macon, Ga. Telegraph and News
Vallejo, Calif. Times-Herald (Hoyt Harwell)
Raleigh, N.C. News and Observer
Agusta, Ga. Chronicle-Herald
Long Beach, Calif. Independent-Press-Telegram (Hoyt Harwell)
Houston, Texas Post
Chicago, Ill. Chicago's American (Hoyt Harwell)
Washington, D.C. Star
Birmingham, Ala, News (Hoyt Harwell)
Minneapolis, Minn. Tribune
Chicago Tribune

Papers that carried their own story

Atlanta World
Cleveland Plain Dealer (Robert C. Doty

Papers that carried their own story, cont.

Middletown, N.Y. Times Herald Record
Memphis, Tenn. Commercial Appeal
Richmond, Va. Times-Dispatch
Omaha, Nebr. World-Herald
Chattanooga, Tenn. Times (Robert C. Doty)
Boston, Mass. Herald (Robert C. Doty)

COVERAGE OF KENNETH MORLAND PAMPHLET

Papers that carried UPI story

Chicago, Ill. Daily Defender

Papers that carried AP story

Morning Demonrat Davenport, Iowa (Hoyt Harwell)
Pensacola, Fla. News-Journal

Papers that carried their own story

New York Amsterdam News

Press, Radio, T.V. & Movies

news from 1010 wins
WESTINGHOUSE BROADCASTING COMPANY, INC.
7 CENTRAL PARK WEST, NEW YORK 23, N.Y. • JUdson 2-7000

FROM: Gerald M. Goldberg

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: August 13, 1963

WINS SEEKS ACTION IN SPURRING NEGRO AND PUERTO RICAN EMPLOYMENT; LAUNCHES ON-THE-AIR CAMPAIGN AIMED AT MATCHING INDIVIDUAL AND JOB

Interviews Sought for Qualified Job Applicants
With Wide Range of Skills and Experience;
"Job Opportunity" Campaign Already in Progress

WINS Radio, New York has launched an on-the-air "Job Opportunity" campaign aimed at securing employment for qualified Negro and Puerto Rican job applicants. Utilizing saturation spot announcement techniques, characteristic of the most successful radio advertising campaigns, the station is presenting to prospective employers the qualifications of individuals seeking a wide range of jobs in the New York metropolitan area.

In recent months, the need for jobs for qualified workers, representing racial and ethnic minority groups, has been singled out as one of the primary problems locally and nationally. An equally importent problem to which WINS is addressing itself is that of the over-qualified and under-employed.

(MORE)

The saturation spot campaign, which began on Tuesday, August 13, provides rotating multiple exposure for each job applicant in all time periods for at least one month.

A list of 21 individuals, representing a wide range of skills and experience, has already been submitted to WINS by cooperating civic and social agencies. The list will be increased to a minimum of 35 during the course of the one month pilot period.

The job opportunity project was developed by the Public Affairs Department of WINS in consultation with Madison S. Jones, Executive Director of the City of New York Commission on Human Rights.

Last month, a series of preliminary meetings was held at the station with cooperating agencies. In attendance were Commissioner James J. McFadden of the New York City Department of Labor; Mr. Ramon E. Rivera, Director of Job Development and Employment of the Urban League of Greater New York; Mrs. Olivia Frost, Research Associate of Harlem Youth Opportunities Unlimited, Inc., (Haryou); Miss Antonia Pantoja, Executive Director of Aspira; Mr. Louis A. Cardona, Coordinator, Employment Program of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico Department of Labor. Also attending, in an advisory capacity, were Mrs. Eleanor Chang Middleton, Public Relations Officer of the City of New York Commission on Human Rights, and Mr. Robert Gore, Assistant Community Relations Director of CORE.

(MORE)

Each of the cooperating agencies agreed to provide WINS with resumes of a cross-section of individuals currently listed in their files as job applicants. Represented in the pilot groups are men and women ranging from recent high school graduates, seeking employment as secretaries, typists and receptionists, to Masters of Business Administration, seeking executive positions in marketing, research, public relations and heavy industry. Only those people certified by the cooperating agencies are eligible for the project.

Bert Cowlan, WINS Director of Community Affairs, is coordinating the "Job Opportunity" campaign for the station.

The on-the-air announcements spell out the qualifications of an individual and ask that interested employers respond by writing the station on company letterhead. Replies are forwarded to the appropriate agency in order that an interview may be arranged. A parallel series of announcements asks that WINS listeners alert their employers to this project if they know of a job opening for which one of the on-the-air applicants appears qualified.

Since becoming a Group W (Westinghouse Broadcasting Co.) station a year ago, WINS has been increasingly active in public affairs efforts on a wide variety of community problems including civil rights. "This project," according to WINS General Manager, Mark Olds, "is a logical step in the evolution of our approach to community affairs in that it attempts to produce specific action. The success of this campaign will be measured, ultimately, by the public's involvement."

###

NEW YORK CHAPTER
THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE

NEGRO PRESS DIGEST
August 15, 1963 mat.

Contents

BLACK MUSLIMS	P. 1
BLACK REVOLUTION	P. 1
EDUCATION	P. 2
EMPLOYMENT	P. 4
FUND RAISING	P. 5
INTERNATIONAL	P. 5
MASS DEMONSTRATIONS	P. 6
MEDICINE AND HOSPITALS	P. 7
MORAL ATTITUDES	P. 8
NEGRO UNITY	P. 9
NEW YORK CITY	P. 10
PERSONALITIES	P. 11
POLICE BRUTALITY	P. 12
POLITICAL FIGURES	P. 12
POLITICS	P. 13
PRESIDENT KENNEDY	P. 14
REAL ESTATE AND HOUSING	P. 14
RELIGIONS AND CHURCHES	P. 15
SELECTIVE BUYING	P. 15
MISCELLANEOUS	P. 16

published by
The Community Information Committee
Robert L. Pelz, Chairman

Co-Editors
Mrs. M. J. Kleinfeld Mrs. Louise Levinson
Mrs. Marilyn Gilbert, Contributing Editor

NEGRO PRESS DIGEST

Statement of Purpose

The Negro Press Digest is published for the purpose of providing its readers with news and views of Negro newspapers and news magazines circulated in New York City. The Digest is not intended to present a cross-section of the content of the publications it reviews but focuses upon articles dealing with such matters as civil rights, civil liberties and intergroup relations. Emphasis is given to articles of local interest and national consequence.

News that has been adequately treated, in the judgment of the editors, in the daily press or on the broadcasting media is not duplicated in the Digest unless the Negro press reports such news from a distinctly different point of view.

The New York Chapter of The American Jewish Committee hopes that this publication will help fill an important need in intergroup relations, which is: improved communications bringing fuller knowledge of the problems, aspirations and frustrations of the Negro community as expressed in their press. This periodical, therefore, is designed to foster greater understanding and thereby further the development of truly effective human relations efforts.

-- Robert L. Pelz, Chairman
Community Information Committee
New York Chapter
The American Jewish Committee

BLACK MUSLIMS

YOUNG RAPS 'WHITE' PRESS FOR BUILDING MALCOLM X

Chicago Daily Defender (June 25)

Malcolm X and other Negro nationalists have been over-inflated by the white press, says Whitney Young of the National Urban League. Negro groups have refused to appear on public programs with the Muslim leader. The white press would not invite Sen. Javits to debate with George Lincoln Rockwell, Young opined. He said that Malcolm X has a very limited following. Young does not underestimate the potential for violence in the Negro community due to their intense frustration.

ISLAMIC EXPERTS PLAN TO MICROSCOPE MUSLIMS

Chicago Daily Defender (July 15)

News from Saudi Arabia indicates that the real orthodox Moslims are seriously disturbed over the un-Islamic teachings of America's Black Muslims. They are planning to send a delegation to the U.S. to disavow them publicly. The Muslim League's Secretary General insists "The Muslim religion knows no color boundaries. We are all brothers." A U.S. Islamic authority says that (Elijah Muhammad's) hate teachings are anti-Muslim, and that the Black Muslims are misusing the Moslem religion. Elijah Muhammad issued a statement against a newspaper article on this subject declaring that he has no proof that the Moslems in Arabia said anything of the kind, that he is not taking orders from them but from Allah.

MUHAMMAD SON CALLS FOR UNITY

Amsterdam News (July 20)

Akbar Muhammad, youngest son of Elijah Muhammad leader of the American Black Muslims, told a large audience "We must unite... the longer the delay of the unification of the NAACP, Urban League, Southern Christian Leadership Conference, CORE, and the Muslims, the longer the black man in America will be mistreated, beaten and murdered... We are not a racist group... Unity is the salvation for the black man all over the world". He told the crowd not to hate the color of man's skin but to hate what is under the skin.

BLACK REVOLUTION

FREEDOM'S FRATERNITY

Amsterdam News - Column: Another Angle by James L. Hicks (Reprint of column published in 1956).

I belong to the largest fraternity in the world.. with chapters in every country on the globe.. with members wherever people gather and stand up on their two feet. The members don't wear pins.. we wear Equality in our hearts. The dues are Eternal Vigilance. I pay my dues every day.. in restaurants, subways or at a ball game.. whenever I insist on being treated as a man... Eternal Vigilance is a heavy burden but the price is Freedom and I want to be FREE. Ours is the unpopular road of the non-compromising and my fraternity brothers stand behind the Congress and beg the compromising lawmaker to go back to the floor and practice what he has been preaching. That is my fraternity brother walking the rioting campus with Autherine Lucy.. or with Martin Luther King. There is no greater love.. no greater thrill.. than to be a member of the Fraternity of Freedom.

WE TOLD YOU SO

Amsterdam News - Column: Another Angle by James L. Hicks (June 29)

It seems everybody in the world suddenly woke up in the past few months to the fact that Negroes aren't acting as they have been in the past. Everyone wants to know what happened to the Negro. From CBS to NBC to Europe and all of North America, to the New York Times and the U.S. State Department, to the Soviet Mission to the United Nations.. they all have called or visited the Amsterdam News. Our answer is always the same.. "The Negro is in open revolt against the status quo in America". When we tell them that the revolt started five years ago, they find it hard to believe.. and yet our July 4th edition of 1959 told it to anyone who could read. No other paper in the nation told the story of the Negro Revolt but now every paper is willing to admit we were right.

THRUST FOR FREEDOM

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (July 15)

The black revolution's thrust for freedom is beginning to reach those who had ignored its meaning. They are raising angry voices, not against the die-hard segregationists with their vicious dogs and daily beatings but against what they call Negro extremists. Our white friends' strategy is to split our ranks. They are even using James Meredith to water down our demands. They applaud Governors Barnett and Wallace for defying the law, but denounce us for insisting on our rights. We have been tolerant far too long. We want our full freedom NOW.

"A PEOPLE'S REVOLUTION" - RANDOLPH

Amsterdam News (July 20)

In an eloquent speech, A. Philip Randolph, president of the Negro American Labor Council and a co-chairman of the March on Washington, told a bi-racial audience that "this is a people's revolution. We can't have a revolution without fire, or bloodshed." Randolph said that the Negro is committed to non-violence but added that there can only be violence "when the police create violence". He said, "This revolution will never spend its fury until the rampart of prejudice and racial discrimination has crumbled."

EDUCATION

THE TEXT OF OUR TEXTBOOKS

Amsterdam News - Column: White on White by Gertrude Wilson (July 6)

The textbooks given our children in our schools ignore the fact that the United States is a multiracial society. Thoughtful educators have been pleading for textbooks which would give the child in Harlem texts which would recognize his existence.. with maybe one or two Dicks and Sallys with brown skin. Will the New York Board of Education's own five page report on the use of textbooks in teaching children of minority groups be implemented in the purchase of new textbooks?

L.I. BOARD SHUTS JIM CROW SCHOOL

Amsterdam News (July 13)

Freeport, L. I., has become the first Long Island school district to desegregate a predominantly Negro school. The school board plans to shut down the Cleveland Avenue School and redistribute its 91 percent Negro roster among four predominantly white elementary schools, on the basis of available space and balanced class size.. the preservation of family groups with brothers and sisters attending the same school.

VIEWS AND REVIEWS

New York Courier - Column by George S. Schyler (July 20)

A major interest among Negroes ought to be lifting the standards of instruction in the schools they attend, with the aim of making them HIGHER than in white schools, rather than bleating about "token desegregation". Many Negroes are unemployed due to lack of skill. I suggest that the 40,000 religious congregations serving Negroes each provide one annual scholarship to a good trade school. This is something for parsons to do instead of rabble-rousing the people over what are superficial issues currently insoluble.

BIG INDUSTRIAL FIRMS HELPING TO FINANCE SCHOLARSHIPS FOR NEGROES

New York Courier (July 20)

Increasing numbers of donations are being made by leading American corporations to the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students, according to NSSFNS president Richard Plaut. A growing trend among Negroes is to aim for the higher paid professions rather than the traditional goal of teaching. How many of these young Negroes will eventually hold administrative positions will depend in large part on the encouragement of business itself. Since 1948, 9500 qualified Negro students have been helped by NSSFNS and have received almost $4,500,000 in total scholarships and loans. Plaut says business must play a larger and larger role in higher education especially for the Negro.

THE GENTLEMAN IS WRONG

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (July 22)

The unresolved issue of de facto segregation in Chicago's schools is driving the city to a major racial crisis. At the insistence of Clair Roddewig, president of the Board of Education, police barred the reentry of sit-ins to his office and were needlessly rough with the young people, after the pattern of police action in Birmingham et al. Last year the president of the University of Chicago, beset for a week by sit-ins, instead of summoning the police appointed 3 members of the faculty to inquire into the grievances of Negroes protesting segregation in university-owned housing. Mr. Roddewig has added fuel to a fire that might have been smothered by a similar procedure. The rough-necks are not the sit-ins but those who have made Chicago a segregated city. Remove the cause of the grievances and the demonstrations will disappear.

INTEGRATED DIXIE DREAM

Amsterdam News - Column: Poppy's Notes by Poppy Cannon White (July 27)

Whitney Young told a hard-bitten, hard-to-impress group of newspaper folk that they helped build up the prophets of dissension like Malcolm X on the one side, and the Barnetts and Wallaces on the other, with too much attention... whereas little attention is given to such things as a summer school in the state at Winston-Salem..where an integrated group of gifted children are happily working and playing together in North Carolina's Governor Terry Sanford's Dream School, which is backed by Winston-Salem industry. Students are selected from nominees by a committee which never knew the names or race.. tuition is nominal books are free. The community feeling could not be better. Too bad that the voice of the Governor of North Carolina is drowned out by the raving in Mississippi and Alabama.

9 YEARS SINCE DECISION: LESS THAN 1/2 PER CENT IN 11 STATES IN SOUTH IN DESEGREGATED SCHOOLS - Amsterdam News (July 27)

Although it is nine years since the Supreme Court decided that segregation in the public schools is unconstitutional, less than half of one percent of Negro pupils in eleven "resistant" states in the South are attending desegregated schools according to a recent study. When a Negro child applies to a white school for admission there are as many as twenty detailed considerations which communities use as a subterfuge to close their schools to him.

EMPLOYMENT

THE TIME IS NOW

Amsterdam News - Editorial (June 26)

We would like to make it crystal clear that this newspaper supports demonstrations such as took place at the new Harlem Hospital where Negroes picketed because of the lack of job opportunities given them in the building trades and unions in this city... that we feel they are right, that we congratulate the NAACP, the Urban League and CORE. We think Acting-Mayor Paul Screvane was right in halting the work until it becomes clear that Negroes are not denied the right to work on the job. The "wait", as Dr. King has often said, has always meant "never" when the power structure of the city has said it. The course is clear ... direct action.

WESTCHESTER COMMITTEE WARNS OF JOB BIAS WOES

New York Courier (July 20)

New Rochelle is sitting on a powder keg of racial unrest, civil rights leaders in the area say. A joint committee in Westchester county called a meeting in New Rochelle to outline the demands of ethnic groups in Westchester who have been denied job opportunities throughout the county. The committee is prepared to use injunctive powers where Federal funds are involved, and mass demonstrations where moral issues fail to live up to the promise of democracy. It has taken a complete job survey of Westchester county. Therefore, its feeling is that the time for surveys has run out.

FACT, NOT BLACKMAIL - ON TO D.C. - QUOTA SYSTEM

Amsterdam News - 3 Editorials (July 27)

No governmental agency has gone far enough to increase job opportunities for minority groups in New York State or New York City. Governor Rockefeller and Mayor Wagner have made steps in the right direction with announced new procedures for stronger enforcement of laws prohibiting jim-crowism and the withdrawal of city contracts where discrimination exists on city jobs. Meanwhile the picketing now going on shows that the actions taken so far by the Governor and Mayor are not satisfactory and that the real culprits are the unions. While there has been quite a bit of temporizing talk against the use of a quota hiring system for Negroes in New York, the fact remains that without a quota system, the Negro will never catch up and will remain ever outside, unemployed and unskilled.

FUND RAISING

LOOK CAREFULLY - Amsterdam News, Editorial (Both articles June 29)
POLITICAL POT - Amsterdam News, Column: Uptown Lowdown by James Booker

It is apparent that many affairs being held to aid the fight for civil rights in the South will not yield one cent to legitimate organizations involved in the struggle. So avoid frauds and mail your money directly to the group you want to help. Some groups will ask for an accounting of funds sent to aid Southern protest drives.

WE MUST HELP

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (July 17)

A little girl from Stamford sent 63¢ for the educational fund for the children of Medgar Evars, saying it was all she had and knew it would help. It did. The NAACP's $30,000 goal is now less than $600 away. Evars sacrificed his life for the cause of freedom; we should not recoil from the obligation to make his children's future safe.

INTERNATIONAL

CANADA NEGROES PRAISE 'UNIQUE' JFK ALA. STAND

Chicago Daily Defender (July 11)

Members of Canadian Negro organizations wrote President Kennedy that his "unique stand" in the "Alabama situation" would assure him a position of historical prominence, and urged him to continue the fight for change to help Negroes contribute to the U.S. and to the world.

AFRICANS SEE U.S. RACIAL CRISIS IN DIFFERENT WAYS

Chicago Daily Defender (July 25)

The prevailing racial crisis is attracting the attention of all categories of Africans, who call Negroes African Americans. And American Negroes are becoming more conscious of an African connection. The racial crisis draws much news space in Africa, not because it is worsening, but because it is headed for better race relations. In press pictures they see Negroes, who look like them but are well-dressed and educated, and feel they deserve more respect. Some African leaders praise President Kennedy's actions for civil rights, but feel it is inconvenient to be a Negro anywhere in the U.S. An Algerian who recently returned from study at a southern university here wrote about how difficult it is to implement democratic laws in states like Mississippi. He said he saw no African nationalism, except in the Black Muslims, and that American Negroes are just Americans striving to become more American than ever.

MASS DEMONSTRATIONS

WILKINS SEES DANGER IN MASS PROTESTS WITHOUT OBJECTIVES

Chicago Daily Defender (June 25)

Unless Negroes mass and march with specific aim in view, they should refrain from demonstrations, according to Roy Wilkins of the NAACP. In a speech to students at Douglass College he charged Northern Negroes with being apathetic and said two members of Congress told him they received practically no mail from Negro constituents about civil rights legislation.

SAYS NEGRO WON'T SETTLE FOR LESS THAN EQUALITY, JUSTICE NOW
Chicago Daily Defender (June 27)

CAN'T AFFORD TO SLOW DOWN! GO! GO! - Article by James Booker (6/29)

CORE IS COOL TO "PLAYING IT COOL" - This and the article by James Booker from Amsterdam News (7/6)

Louis Lomax told a Chicago audience that the American Negro is mad as hell and will only be pacified by freedom, justice and equality. He urged the white man to atone for past abuses, to get justice into the country without so many laws, to prevent Communism from winning by default. Elsewhere Negro leaders told the President that they cannot afford to slow down demonstrations and will continue them wherever racial conditions are not corrected. CORE agreed at its convention to ignore the President's suggestion of a cooling-off period. One speaker warned that tens of thousands of feet, both black and white will march into Washington if there is a filibuster, if legislation is either watered down or bottled up in committee.

BLIND NO MORE

New York Courier - Column by Rev. Malcolm Boyd (July 13)

The Detroit civil rights march...what did it prove? First, it proved that the "invisible man", the Detroit Negro, emerged to take his place in the sun. Secondly, the number of whites taking part in the march was disappointingly small. The view was a sea of black faces. Great lessons need to be learned by all whites when it comes to life in the Negro minority. Thirdly, the Detroit march revealed that unity of Negro leadership is a myth.. it is fragmented.

HORIZON

New York Courier - Column by P. L. Prattis (July 13)

It is amazing to me that Americans high and low, from the President on down, have somehow transformed peaceable assemblies into demonstrations and have asked Negroes to cease "demonstrating"; that is, cease exercising the right of peaceable assembly. There has been no violence.. but who was guilty .. and who provoked it? Negroes did not turn loose savage dogs nor turn on fire hoses against police, nor herd their oppressors into jails. Only one white person, the alleged murderer of Medgar Evers, has been arrested. Why not the hundreds of other whites who were violent? Total oppression may obliterate the Negro, but he will take the white American along with him.

TO MARCH OR NOT TO MARCH

New York Courier - Column: My View by Benjamin E. Mays (July 13)

To march or not to march is the much-debated topic. I am convinced that certain Southern Senators will filibuster, march or no march. The bill's chance of passage is just as good with or without marching. There may be enough opposition to the civil rights legislation to defeat the proposal under any condition. If the filibuster continues for a long time, there should be a march. If Congress fails to pass civil rights legislation, Congress will be endorsing one's right to discriminate. If this legislation is defeated, demonstrations will increase in momentum.

CHECK-REIN!

New York Courier (July 13) Editorial

How long will these mass demonstrations be pushed to the brink before the entire thing topples over it? Today we are getting action on a big scale. The Federal Government has been pushed into positive motion; the nation's religious phalanxes have belatedly moved into the forefront of the battle lines; industry and labor unions are at least giving lip-service to the principle of integration. Can Negro leaders and Negro organizations CONTROL these massive demonstrations now being contemplated in a number of cities during the coming weeks? Unless the proposed August 28th march on Washington can be rigidly controlled, the Courier opposes the demonstration.

MEDICINE AND HOSPITALS

THE CASE OF SEPARATE DINING FACILITIES IN CITY HOSPITALS

Amsterdam News (June 29)

Does the existence of separate dining rooms for professional and non-professional staffers of the city's 19 hospitals mean separation for professional reasons or segregation for racial bias? Some of the members of Local 420 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees Union contend it is only to maintain race bias, while the Hospital Department, admitting the dual system, says it is for professional reasons.. for mutual interest in discussing cases or patients.

THE STETHOSCOPE

New York Courier - Column by Earl B. Smith (July 20)

In spite of urban renewal, we will have Negro neighborhoods. This means that YOU need Negro physicians for Negro patients. This is not medical jim-crowism but direct confrontation with the cold facts of life. In spite of past brain-washing the word Negro does not mean inferior. In future there will be a place for every qualified individual in the profession of his choice. In conclusion, we need MEDICAL RENEWAL in all directions.

MORAL ATTITUDES

IN OUR OWN BACKYARDS

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (June 26)

With the quickening pace of the Southern desegregation battle, the challenge to Northern communities grows more insistent. Each time a Northern city tries to rationalize its quiet prejudices or "orderly" biases, it nourishes the self-righteousness of Southern mobs. It is out of such Northern retreats as the scuttling of the Deerfield housing program that Southern reaction gains new strength.

COMMUNISM'S BEST FRIENDS

Amsterdam News - Column: White on White by Gertrude Wilson (June 29)

Communism's best friends are the Southern segregationists and Northern bigots who say that the free enterprise system gives private business catering to the general public, license to discriminate because of skin color. If forcing men to welcome all customers is an infringement of basic freedom which will undermine our constitution, what of the laws which are afforded by government Health, fire laws, occupancy laws, loans guaranteed by the government, use of highways constructed by the people's money, and other benefits which aid and protect the business man.. all provided by the citizens of this country.. 10% of them Negroes? In a communist state, private enterprise would have no such privileges for private gain.. nor would it have the opportunity to refuse to serve a man because he had the wrong skin color.

'DEMONSTRATIONS'

New York Courier - Column: Horizon by P. L. Prattis (July 6)

How can you ever win a game where the other guy makes all the rules and changes them to suit himself? Article I of the Bill of Rights was written by white men and agreed to by white men. It's easy to persuade one's self that it was written FOR WHITE MEN. No other group seeking a redress of its grievances has been subjected to attacks by dogs, fire hoses, and electric prods. We contend against a foe who has deliberately enacted ordinances against us and who interprets those ordinances to suit himself.

A PROFOUND MORAL ISSUE

Amsterdam News- Column:People in Actionby Dr. Martin L. King Jr.(7/20)

Unfortunately in our nation the moral determination to deal with the evil of discrimination has been neither deep enough nor consistent enough. Northern communities which pride themselves as liberal and progressive centers in government and economics are as guilty as the South. Statistics show only 12% of the Negro families in America earn $5,000 or more annually, while 40% of whites do. It is not only immoral to deny any group fair pay and employment.. it is a deliberate strangulation of the physical and cultural development of its victims ..detrimental to our national welfare. There follows a deterioration of moral values generally which victimizes the white person as well with his false sense of superiority. Discrimination is not merely a political issue; it is a profound moral issue.

LITTLE SOUTHERN HELPERS

Amsterdam News - Column: Along This Way by Roy Wilkins (July 27)

If we are not careful, the Southern white segregationists are going to claim a share of our civil rights victory when the Great Day comes. The latest heavy assist was given by South Carolina's Senator Strom Thurmond when he strongly implied that Secretary of State Dean Rusk was "aiding" the Communists by testifying before a Senate committee in support of pending civil rights bills. The Negroes of this country could ask no greater aid for their cause than the opposition of Thurmond, Barnett, Wallace and Co. If they keep their health, their lungs and what passes for thought processes, we cannot lose the present fight.

NEGRO UNITY

STRUGGLE FOR POWER IN MISSISSIPPI

New York Courier - Article by James Rundles (June 29)

In the vacuum caused by the murder of NAACP Field Secretary Medgar Evers, a struggle for power is going on between three top civil rights groups. We are inclined to believe that all of the recently formed groups would do well to unite under the banner of the NAACP and present a united and purposeful front. At the rate we're going, the whole drive towards freedom by Negroes in this country will be in a state of organized confusion. It is hoped that the situation in Mississippi, regarding the split in the approach of civil rights groups can be remedied.

DISUNITY IS NO MEMORIAL

Amsterdam News - Column: Home Plate by Jackie Robinson (July 6)

THE MISGUIDED - Editorial in the Amsterdam News (July 6)

Roy Wilkins of the NAACP is alleged to have said that the NAACP does all the work and the other groups get all the publicity. It is dangerously foolish for our leaders to divide our ranks at a time when we need unity. If they allow themselves to become involved in a power struggle, we shall be lost. The Negro is roughly divided into 5 major organizations in pursuit of the same goal but, because they approach the problem differently, many people have come to erroneously believe that they are fighting against one another.. and this includes some misguided Negroes. Negro leaders themselves could do much to clear this confusion by spelling out their every move.

COME IN THE ROOM!

Amsterdam News - Column: Another Angle by James Hicks (July 13)

James Meredith was the perfect picture of a man who has lost his patience when he sounded off at young Negroes at the NAACP convention..

and Roy Wilkins was another picture of the same man when he took on Meredith in a battle of words. Negro leadership apparently has not learned how not to "put your business in the street" as they say in Harlem. In other words, don't let your tongue say anything that might cause you to get hit in your big mouth. They should say it in the "Room". The "Room" is a place where one Negro can straighten out another without letting others know what they are talking about.. instead of airing their differences in the press.

NEW UNITY BODY TO KEEP RIGHTS STRUGGLE 'SAFE'

Chicago Daily Defender (July 18)

A new organization known as the Council for United Civil Rights has been formed by the seven major groups which work for civil rights for Negroes. The group intends to raise $1½ million for operating expenses. Its aim is "to provide a cadre of experienced Negro leaders who will prevent things from getting out of hand."

ACCEPT NO COMPROMISE

Chicago Daily Defender - Article by Gerald D. Bullock (July 25)

Certain forces are trying to convince white and black civil rights leadership that civil rights legislation could be passed without the part about public accommodations. The colored citizen must demand that every phase of the civil rights bill before Congress be passed. Otherwise employers would again face the dilemma of joint or separate lunch and lavatory facilities, the block-busting real estate dealer, and racial segregation in schools. We must not toss away the God-given gift of human dignity.

NEW YORK CITY

NEW YORK QUIVERS ON BRINK OF OPEN VIOLENCE

New York Courier - Article by Thomas A. Johnson (June 29)

"BRONX IS A BOMB READY TO EXPLODE!"

Amsterdam News - Article by Les Matthews (July 11)

In the nation's largest city, angered by the burtalities committed against freedom fighters in the South and by reports of more subtle discrimination in the North, the Negro's long-trampled patience is worn to the breaking point. Several highly placed Negroes have said that unless changes are made soon in New York City, racial violence could result. Some white liberals shout about how things are in Birmingham, forgetting how bad things are in Harlem.

MR. BEAME'S SPENDING

Amsterdam News - Column: Home Plate by Jackie Robinson (July 20)

Appalled by an Amsterdam News headline which labeled New York City's Comptroller Abraham Beame as a "buyer of bias", Jackie Robinson investigated the story which was based on the fact that some municipal pension funds administered by Mr. Beame's office are invested in biased Southern industries. He found that New York civil rights executives consider Beame a man who believes in democracy rather than in political issues. All city administrators from the Mayor down are involved in voting to set policy. Beame considers it his social responsibility to investigate ways to change bad policy. He has asked CCHR to look into the situation. Regardless of other considerations, we must feel concern for the use of municipal funds being used to underwrite the very segregation we are fighting.

ACTION NOW

Amsterdam News - Editorial (July 20)

The report of the Mayor's Action Panel seems weak to most observers. In it the construction industry unions were directed to voluntarily integrate their unions by opening membership to Negroes and Puerto Ricans under threat of legislative action. Already the heads of unions are denying discrimination..but meanwhile, while constructions work goes on in the city, there is still a disparate number of Negroes on these jobs.. and that is why the clergy and other Brooklynites picketed until arrested. It is not enough to recommend and then sit back.. nor is "token" hiring enough. The total end of bias in the construction of the city is sought today.

MAYOR'S HEADACHE

Amsterdam News - Column: Another Angle by James L. Hicks (July 20)

I feel sorry for Mayor Wagner because he is a good guy in the Civil Rights fight.. a man who has gone out of his way to get to know Negroes and their leaders. The trouble is that the Negroes whom the Mayor has relied on to advise him have either been too busy being "accepted" at Gracie Mansion or have been too busy working out a trip to Puerto Rico to "study minority group problems" or getting grants to "study" Harlem.. while the man in the streets has grown tired of waiting for a fair deal at the hands of the Mayor's City Commissioners None of the Commissioners or the Negro leaders told the Mayor that Harlem's poor schools, bad housing and City job discrimination were the number one cancer of his Administration and had to be corrected before anything could be done in other areas. The Negroes on the steps of City Hall are there to tell the Mayor that New York is in a mess and that Wagner is in trouble.

POLITICAL POT

Amsterdam News - Column: Uptown Lowdown by James Booker (July 27)

Instead of the Governor and Mayor forming committees to investigate conditions of bias which anyone with eyes can see for themselves, and instead of weakening further the State and City anti-bias agencies, it would be a good idea to form a committee to investigate the existing committees and their officials to find out what they are doing. For instance, the Governor's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity in Apprenticeship Training, headed by Peter Brennan was formed a year ago. If his committee were active, there would be no need for the present committees.

PERSONALITIES

BLACK OR WHITE HAS NO MORAL VALUE BALDWIN TELLS STUDENTS

Chicago Daily Defender (June 24)

HIS OLD SCHOOL HEARS, HONORS JAMES BALDWIN

Amsterdam News - Article by George Barner (June 29)

Accepting a plaque as alumnus-of-the-year at Harlem's Frederick

Douglas Junior High School, James Baldwin told his young audience and old classmates that the original American slaves had made a journey that no other people had ever survived. Remember slavery and be proud of the auction block, he told them. He urged them not to confuse power with morality and to recognize that there is no moral value to either a black or white skin, but that color is a political reality used by politicians.

RALPH BUNCHE WISDOM

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (June 26)

Ralphe Bunche has been criticized for his refusal to engage actively in civil rights battles in the U.S. He maintained that his UN job was his prime function. Now his brilliant statement through the NAACP shows where he stands: "The Negro of today can be infuriated, but no longer can he be intimidated. This is the lesson of Jackson and of Medgar Evers." We are happy to have the wisdom of Bunche in our battle.

POLICE BRUTALITY

ALBANY RIGHTS FIGHTERS NEAR 'BREAKING POINT'

Chicago Daily Defender (July 1)

ALBANY BLOWING UP AGAIN

Amsterdam News - By George Todd (July 6)

Sweeping arrests of teenage demonstrators and many instances of police brutality are heightening tensions in embattled Albany, Georgia, where the situation is worse than ever after 18 months. A 15-year-old girl, said to have been brutally manhandled, spent 9 days in solitary confinement. The acting president of the Albany Movement said: "We don't have any confidence in the U.S. Justice Department."

VOW INTEGRATIONIST MUST BOW TO ALA. TROOPERS

Chicago Daily Defender (July 24)

A field secretary for SNCC, Landy McNair, reportedly was beaten by 10 State Troopers after they placed him under arrest for having an out-of-state driver's license. "You are going to respect Alabama State Troopers whether your a.. is black or white", a trooper told him. McNair and two co-workers were working in Gadsden for a coalition of CORE, SNCC and SCLC who will protest his arrest to the Justice Department.

POLITICAL FIGURES

DIXIECRAT DIRKSEN

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (June 24)

The unholy coalition of Dixiecrats and reactionary Republicans which has caused previous civil rights bills to be watered down is forming behind Senate Minority Leader Dirksen against any legislation outlawing segregation in private business. Mr. Dirksen has deliberately ignored the fact that 31 states have public accommodation laws whose constitutionality has been constantly upheld by the courts. The Republicans must help enact a bill with teeth in it or face a black revolution in which their own lives would be at stake. Our biggest enemy is Senator Dirksen who suffers with foot-and-mouth disease.

THE GOLDWATER WAGON

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (July 1)

The 1964 Presidential race has begun to move into high gear. The leading man in the Republican line-up is Senator Barry Goldwater, whose supporters assume a growing conservative mood in the country. This attitude would cause the Republicans to play down the civil rights issue, exploit the Cuba problem, the allies, unemployment and Kennedy policy. But the liberal Republicans believe their party cannot win on those grounds. We see no chance for it to win the 1964 election with Barry Goldwater heading the ticket. Unless Republicans have developed a suicidal urge, they will derail the Goldwater bandwagon.

SOUNDING NOTICE

Amsterdam News - Editorial (July 20)

Governor Rockefeller has sounded notice on the extreme right wing of the Republican Party that he still upholds the principles of the Party of Abraham Lincoln and will not bow down to a group from a "well-financed and highly disciplined minority" within. Warned Mr. Rockefeller, "A program based on racism or sectionalism would in and of itself not only defeat the Republican Party in 1964, but would destroy it altogether". It is time for others to speak out.

GOV. ROCKEFELLER

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (July 25)

The Democratic governors were playing politics at their conference in Miami to prevent Governor Rockefeller from forcing a showdown on civil rights. The Republicans achieved some measure of a political victory by putting the Democrats in the position of opposing a decision on civil rights. Should Governor Rockefeller win the GOP nomination and make the civil rights issue his battle cry, the Democrats will be in serious trouble.

POLITICS

UP TO CONGRESS - Amsterdam News, Editorial (June 29)
CONGRESS - IT'S YOUR MOVE NOW - Amsterdam News, Editorial (July 6)
CONGRESS MUST ACT - Chicago Daily Defender, Editorial (July 24)

In this summer of racial discontent Congress dares not turn its back on the issue that agitates the whole nation. Initiative in the field of civil rights has passed to the courts and to the executive branch largely because Congress over the years has failed to take meaningful action. Can Congress act on this central issue of American life now and recoup the initiative.. or will the decisions be left to the courts, the Executive branch, or street demonstrations and strife? President Kennedy, the United States Supreme Court and Attorney General have done their part to right the injustices to 22 million colored citizens. It is now up to the Congress to finish the job. This newspaper wishes to predict to the Congress that if 22 million colored citizens do not get equality now there will be a spontaneous, explosive revulsion everywhere which no city, police, state national guard, fire hoses or German police dogs can deter.

BARNETT, WALLACE DRIVE MAY BE GOOD OMEN FOR DEMS

Jet (July 11)

The movement for unpledged electors in Dixie states being whipped up by AlabamaGov. George Wallace and Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett may prove a good-luck charm for Democratic Party. With other Southern states like Georgia balking at the idea, Mississippi and Alabama currently alone in the anti-Kennedy crusade will find the going rough. Each time in recent years that the Dixiecrats went against the Democratic Party, a Democrat captured the White House. Each time they united with the Party, a Republican won.

PRESIDENT KENNEDY

LUNCHEON DATE

Amsterdam News - Editorial (July 20)

Of the 52 guests invited by the President to a White House luncheon for Prime Minister Menzies of Australia, six were Negroes at top level. Mr. Kennedy is practicing what he advocates in seeing that the American Negro is included in all aspects of American life and specifically where the office of the President is concerned. He deserves credit.

NOT SO NEW NEGRO

Amsterdam News - Column: Poppy's Notes by Poppy Cannon White (7/20)

The New Negro is the New Topic. Freedom is a flame far from new to the American Negro and the President for whose words the world waited was not Kennedy but Lincoln. Then, as now, some said that the President waited too long, and that in some ways the Proclamation fell short. However, perhaps future historians will say that the lingering bondage of second-class citizenship had its death knell in the moving words of President Kennedy July 11, 1963.

REAL ESTATE AND HOUSING

'MANAGED INTEGRATION' PLAN DRAWS MIXED REACTION HERE

Chicago Daily Defender - Article by Ted Coleman (July 2)

A mixed crowd of 2,000 attended a rally on renewal of Chicago's South Shore and were told by Philip Hauser, chairman of the Department of Sociology at University of Chicago that the managed integration system would solve the problem of rapid transition of neighborhoods from white to Negro after a Negro family has moved in. Some real estate men called this a quota system, but others felt that stable communities could be maintained if Negroes who moved in shared the high socio-economic, cultural and character standards of the present residents.

ANOTHER STEP FORWARD

New York Courier - Editorial (July 6)

The Urban Renewal Administration is taking two steps toward combatting racial discrimination in public housing. One, to make thorough studies of existing housing needs of racial minorities and to improve new housing. The other, to relocate displaced persons into integrated housing.. to prevent exchanging one ghetto for another. Thus the Administration has the power to prevent Jim-Crowism.

RELIGIONS AND CHURCHES

CATHOLIC WOMEN'S CLUB - Editorial (July 3)

CATHOLIC WOMEN END 40 YEARS OF RACE BIAS (July 10)

INTERRACIAL GROUP SETS MEETING TO STUDY NATION'S RACIAL CRISIS (7/11)

CATHOLICS WAGE BATTLE AGAINST DISCRIMINATION by Ernestine Cofield (7/23)

(All the above from The Chicago Daily Defender)

The anti-Negro policy of the Illinois Club for Catholic Women makes Negroes wonder how sincere the Catholics are about brotherhood, said the Defender editorial. When Catholic prelates have taken their stand for human equality, it is incredible that the club's president should use a statement by her housekeeper to argue that Negroes are not interested in associations outside their race. Within a week the rigid color line was dropped by the club, when the president's son announced that no one who shared its humanitarian program would be rejected because of color. Protests against the club were started by students at Loyola University which housed the club and were backed by John McDermott, director of the Catholic Interracial Council. Assistance came from picketing nuns. The Council also intends to look into banking practices, union policy, too few Negro doctors on its hospital staffs, and even experiments with selective buying. 57 national councils of the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice met in Chicago on July 27 as a sequel of the National Conference on Religion and Race, to map a course of action in response to racial tension across the U.S.

UNITED CHURCH'S UNITED CREDO

Amsterdam News - Column: Home Plate by Jackie Robinson (July 27)

Jackie Robinson gave praise to the United Church of Christ which went on record in support of an uncompromising credo which, if adopted by other large church groups, would make progress along Freedom Highway a reality. The credo speaks of job discrimination, taxpayers whose money is used to run the government but who are denied equal opportunities. It condemns prejudice in schools, housing, public accommodations, the financial community and even the church. It exposes the racist hypocrisy that integration is a smoke-screen for intermarriage and offers the full loaf of love, respect, understanding and justice.

SELECTIVE BUYING

LOCAL LILY-WHITE FIRMS RUSH TO INTEGRATE JOBS

Chicago Daily Defender (July 9)

Chicago business firms and merchants who have been reluctant to hire without regard to race or color, began a stampede to meet local NAACP demands for fair employment in order to avoid a gigantic "Selective Buying" program in Chicago. Agencies have reported a sharp increase in requests for Negro workers.

Articles on the "Selective Buying" drive, including one signed article by Betty J. Edwards: All the articles appeared in the Chicago Daily Defender, 7/8, 7/10, 7/11, 7/15, 7/22 and 7/23.

The NAACP national convention in Chicago approved a program of nation-wide "selective buying" against firms who follow biased hiring practices. Methods will be left to local chapters. The plan has been enthusiastically endorsed by prominent businessmen polled by the Defender and by a group of religious leaders representing several faiths. Governor Kerner's Executive Order banning racial discrimination in all licensed enterprises has stepped up the campaigns of civic agencies to end bias. The NAACP is making a survey of all businesses in Chicago whose hiring policies are "lily-white". 16 major anti-bias groups in Chicago have formed a Council to co-ordinate sit-ins, picketing and selective buying. The first targets will be the Motorola Company, including its showrooms, and the office of Sen. Everett Dirksen. Another target will be the Englewood shopping center where only 53 of 496 employees are Negroes, half of whom are porters. Future action will be directed against hospitals and public schools which either segregate or refuse Negroes.

MISCELLANEOUS

'ALL IS NOT LOST' KKK'S HEAD TELLS COURIER IN TUSCALOOSA

New York Courier - Article by Snow James (June 22)

The Imperial Wizard of the KKK told a Courier reporter after the Negro students were registered at the University of Alabama: "All is not lost. This was only one strike against us - there are lots more innings to play." The Klan openly plans insurrection and some believe the ambush of Medgar Evers was the first shot in the insurrection.

BLAND LIAR

New York Courier - Column: Horizon by P. L. Prattis (June 22)

Gov. Wallace of Alabama lied in answering questions of the "Meet the Press" television panel. If, as he claimed, Negroes were free to register and vote, the name of the Governor in Alabama would not be Wallace. He also lied in saying that most of the Negro population of the state favors segregation. Negroes have accepted this substitute for absolute slavery in order to stay alive and keep a job, but they have never favored it. But, a new day has dawned and the Southern Negro has discerned that it is no longer necessary to kid along with the Southern whites.

THE AMERICAN LEGION

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (July 8)

What is the American Legion doing in the present American crisis? This group so often makes its power felt on the side of ultra-conservatism when a crisis involves racial minorities. They need to be reminded that patriotism is the way of social advance. Let the liberal voices in the American Legion, if there are such, speak up for the advance of the democratic tendency in the national life.

CONFETTI

Chicago Daily Defender - Column by Lillian S. Calhoun appeared July 9, 17, 18, 22 and 23.

Out of 112 Chicago judges, only 6 are Negro. The Cook County Bar Assn. has been critical of these figures for years, but who listens? .... Only 1½ million out of 5 million eligible Negroes are registered in the South, of whom 115,000 registered in the Southern Regional Council's Voter Education project.... President Kennedy is working to get foundation support for a model school for Negroes in Prince Edward Co.... Bill Berry of the Urban League says leaders of all religions in Chicago are offering increasing support on racial problems - makes up for the "gentle, white moderates" who are scared away by the demonstrations.... CORE charges that jimcrow in schools is being intensified here. A survey should be made to assure that segregation is not being extended.... According to the latest Harris poll a majority of Americans back the civil rights package. The jazz that white folks are turning against Negroes and equality must be White Citizens' Council wishful thinking.... Lyndon Johnson's equal opportunity committee has sent questionnaires to construction unions, asking: "How many Negro officers? Are meetings segregated? Do you list racial discrimination with management, as a grievance?.... Mike Quill's Transport Workers Union recently gave Dr. King a check for $10,000 to end the cannabilism of segregation.

POLITICAL POT

Amsterdam News - Uptown Lowdown, Column by James Booker (7/20)

The NAACP's mass legislative lobby to Washington Aug. 6-8 to press for civil rights legislation will be a buildup for the mass demonstrations on August 28th.... Election of labor leader L. Joseph Overton as a candidate for the NAACP's national board of directors is a sign of the changing times in NAACP ranks.... Councilman J. Raymond Jones is pressing his attack against the small percentage of Negro students in the city's colleges.... The city's announcement of Esplanade Gardens at 147th Street is much to the credit of J. Raymond Jones and Rep. Adam Clayton Powell who early urged housing at a decent rental.

LOS ANGELES NO LONGER A 'BUSH LEAGUE TOWN'

Chicago Daily Defender - Article by A. S. "Doc" Young (7/24)

No longer can Los Angeles be called "a bush-league town" because of political immaturity. Even last year there was no Negro political representation among elected city officials, but now Los Angeles has three Negro councilmen and adjacent Compton has one who defeated candidates of all other races. Although Negroes form half of Compton's 75,000 people, they had previously been unable to muster strength to win an election. Election of these men (plus a Negro Congressman, two new Assemblymen and America's first big-city postmaster) is merely part of a trend that promises even greater Negro political participation from a growing Negro population.

WOMEN VOTERS PLAN RIGHTS DRIVE NEXT YEAR

Chicago Daily Defender (July 25)

Although the League of Women Voters of the U.S. is not supporting civil rights legislation now before Congress, the Illinois branch of the League plans to put it on its next year's program. The League in Illinois has worked in most areas of civil rights except housing. It would also like to interest more Negro women in joining.

ARE PUERTO RICANS NEGRO OR WHITE?

Jet (August 1)

State Superintendent of Education James Allen dropped a bombshell when he ordered school officials to report Puerto Ricans as white on a de facto school segregation report he wants by September. Ironically, Puerto Ricans, like Negroes, range in color from Nordic white to jet black.. which prompted a professor of Spanish on a visit to our States to remark "Call all Negroes white and the school is integrated automatically." ...But black Puerto Ricans would still face jim crow.

news from 1010 wins
WESTINGHOUSE BROADCASTING COMPANY, INC.
7 CENTRAL PARK WEST, NEW YORK 23, N.Y. • JUdson 2-7000

FROM: Gerald M. Goldberg

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: August 20, 1963

WINS COMPLETES ONE HOUR DOCUMENTARY-EDITORIAL ON CIVIL RIGHTS;

STATION TO EXPLORE THE REALITIES OF HATE AND PREJUDICE

Program to be Presented Twice -- August 25 and 27

To Insure Widest Audience Exposure

A full hour documentary-editorial on civil rights, narrated by WINS General Manager, Mark Olds, will be presented by WINS Radio, New York at 8:00 p.m. Sunday, August 25. "The Unfinished American Revolution -- Part II" ("Hate is a Wrong Way Street") will be repeated at 11:00 p.m. Tuesday, August 27 to insure maximum listenership. The repeat broadcast is deliberately timed for airing on the eve of the March on Washington.

The one hour presentation is a sequel to the widely acclaimed half hour documentary-editorial first presented by WINS on July 4.

"The Unfinished American Revolution -- Part II" takes a cold, unblinking look at the nature of hate and prejudice that exists in the United States today and advocates as a solution to the problems we all face , non-violence and the democratic way of life.

(MORE)

Actuality recordings of Alabama's Governor George Wallace -- "Segregation now! Segregation tomorrow! Segregation forever!" -- former Birmingham Police Chief Bull Connor -- "We had that nigger (Martin Luther King) whipped!" -- the Grand Wizer of the Alabama Ku Klux Klan; a spokesman for the Black Muslims; a member of a neo-Nazi party; some New York City construction workers; and Mississippi Governor Ross Barnett are among the challenging revelations of prejudice and hate presented in the course of the program.

Speaking on the dangers of prejudice and hate-mongering will be Rev. Paul Turner, the minister who was beaten up for walking Negro children to the integrated high school in Clinton, Tennessee, seven years ago; Bernice Johnson, a 19-year old director of the Albany, Georgia, Freedom Movement; Bayard Rustin, a Director of the March on Washington; Professor James Shenton of Columbia University; Vice President Lyndon Johnson speaking at the Gettysburg battlefield; and President John F. Kennedy.

The documentary-editorial isolates and analyzes, in depth, three of the most potent types of hate and prejudice: 1. the prejudice that confuses Communism and integration; 2. the prejudice that gives some white men a sense of superiority on the assumption that the Negro is different; and 3. the unreasoning hatred for the white man evidenced by some Negro groups. It is the WINS editorial viewpoint, as expressed by General Manager Mark Olds, that manifestations of these hates and prejudices are keeping "the unfinished American revolution" unfinished.

(MORE)

"The Unfinished American Revolution -- Part II" ("Hate is a Wrong Way Street") is a production of the Public Affairs Department of WINS Radio, New York. Narrator is Mark Olds, General Manager of WINS, material for this program was selected and written by Phillip S. Gelb. Bert Cowlan was executive producer and director.

There are no actors on the program, only real people in actuality recordings.

###

(MORE)

SELECTED PRESS AND COMMUNITY COMMENT ON

"THE UNFINISHED AMERICAN REVOLUTION"
Part I

The Voice of America in its world-wide, round-the-clock schedule of news broadcasts, features, and commentaries, is at pains to demonstrate that the executive branch of the American government and probably most of our national legislators and their constituents are in sympathy with the Negro drive for fuller human rights. As an example of the feelings of many Northern broadcasters, it would have been useful had the Voice picked up for international rebroadcast on Independence Day "The Unfinished American Revolution," a half-hour documentary editorial presented by WINS, a Group W (Westinghouse) radio station in New York City. With the commendable conviction of a commercial broadcaster, Mark Olds, the station's General Manager, personally narrated this July 4 program, which counterpointed quotations from President Kennedy's recent televised address to the nation on the question of Negro civil rights with tapes culled from the struggle in the North and South.

Short-wave listeners would have heard testimony of brutal ignorance and racist prejudice that recall still unredeemed irrationalities in the American experience of Negroes and whites. They would also have heard eloquent witness to courage and idealism among men, women, and children. They would have heard the American President, speaking for the whole nation, place the struggle for equal rights on the level of a moral issue, asserting that the nation would not be free until all its citizens are free. Foreign listeners who knew enough about the American broadcasting scene would have realized that such a radio editorial by a commercial broadcaster was in itself an unusual demonstration of concern for the unfinished American Revolution.

Robert Lewis Shayon, Saturday Review
August 10, 1963

While the orientation of broadcasting's news coverage has most certainly shown segregationists in a bad light, neither the networks nor many local stations (so far as is known from this view point) have actually taken an editorial stand. Group W's WINS Radio in New York did just that in this "documentary editorial" aired three times, with the final broadcast next Sunday (14) at 10 p.m.

WINS general manager Mark Olds narrated, interspersing his comments with excerpts from President Kennedy's forthright integration speech, and highly dramatic interviews with Negroes who have been deeply involved in the various demonstrations, jailings, etc. Olds capped the half-hour with a strong plea for understanding and sacrafice on the part of all citizens, "because, sure enough, this unfinished revolution; the revolution of justice and equality and dignity for every man, woman and child without regard to color or creed, the revolution that a world that wants to survive has been waiting for, this revolution is here with us-here and now. It may cause me some concern and even discomfort; it may make me, personally, worried and uncomfortable for a while-but I too will change a little, and act, and risk something. Unless you are willing to say something like this, then the American revolution is a lost cause."

(MORE)

Using the President's speech as a peg, Olds segued into interviews and pickups covering situations in Harlem, Nashville, Danville (Va.) and other centres of the Negro struggle. Point was made doubly forceful by the selection of very articulate and sincere Negroes who were able to vividly communicate their courage. Production and direction brought the whole off with dramatic impact sans sensationalism.

Variety, July 10, 1963

In airing "The Unfinished American Revolution,"...WINS will reaffirm its belief in "justice and equality and dignity for every man, woman and child without regard to color or creed." It also will tell its listeners that unless they are willing to speak up for the principle, "the American Revolution is a lost cause."

John Horn
New York Herald Tribune, June 2, 1963

So many good things had been heard about the documentary editorial on civil rights, "The Unfinished American Revolution," aired by WINS that I felt it should be shared with people here who had the misfortune to miss it. I appreciate receiving the tape.

The total response to it was as I had expected -- all as positive as my own. I have heard it several times now. The more I hear it the more confirmed I am that an outstanding job has been done. In content and drama it is moving and of great substance. It should be done again. Mark Olds' concluding lines are especially memorable.

George Norford, Television Consultant
New York State Commission on Human Rights

A very special event that we hope will be duplicated by other members of the Communications industry...if you are interested in the history of the Negro since the Emancipation Proclamation...if you are interested in what the City expects from its citizens...if you are a parent...if you have a job...we suggest you listen.

City Commission on Human Rights of New York

(MORE)

The program aired over WINS, "The Unfinished American Revolution," is a hallmark in Radio Documentary editorials. It seems to us here at CORE that those who heard it could hardly have left their radio sets unmoved. Your presentation put the public in direct touch with those who are attempting to accomplish the goals of America and it was done exceedingly well.

Congress of Racial Equality (CORE)

Congratulations on "The Unfinished American Revolution" program. My colleagues have asked me to tell you that they consider WINS' effort to promote equal rights for all Americans highly commendable. We are confident that your program will strike a responsive chord among Americans of good will.

Pursuant to our conversation last week, we would greatly appreciate permission to add the tape of this radio program to our list of available tapes for meetings and conferences dealing with racial tensions.

Frances P. Rosenberg
The American Jewish Committee

We want to express our congratulations for the wonderful job you...did on "The Unfinished American Revolution." I am delighted to see WINS taking such a forceful stand.

Jack D. Summerfield, General Manager
WRVR Radio

###

Newsweek 8/26/63

Press, Radio, T.V. & Movies

A Victim of Negro Progress

Their editorial approach ranges from almost shuffling subservience to strident militancy, the size of their staffs from one man to 35, and the quality of their products from promising to dreadful. But whatever their differences, the 133 Negro newspapers in the U.S. today —two small dailies, 131 weeklies, semi-weeklies, and bi-weeklies—face a common and paradoxical danger: the Negro press may well become a major casualty of the revolution it helped create.

Twenty years ago, when the seeds of today's revolution were being sown, The Pittsburgh Courier chain of Negro papers had an impressive circulation of 270,000; now, at the very moment that the race issue obsesses the nation, the Courier is down to 108,000. The Baltimore Afro-American chain has slumped from 230,000 in 1943 to 145,000, the weekly edition of The Chicago Defender from 161,000 to 35,000, and The Norfolk Journal and Guide from 77,000 to 35,000. There are 20 million Negroes in the U.S. in 1963, but the total circulation of Negro papers is barely 1.5 million. Only a few of the papers make money consistently.

The underlying reason for the sad plight of the Negro press is strangely simple: the dramatic struggle for integration on all levels has drawn the "white" press into areas once the sole province of the Negro press—and the Negro press does not have the resources to compete. Two decades ago, the speeches of Negro leaders earned little coverage outside Negro papers; now every word of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. and Roy Wilkins is reported and interpreted by the white press. Two decades ago, when Negro labor leader A. Philip Randolph planned a march of 50,000 Negroes upon Washington to protest discrimination in defense industries, the event might have gone unnoticed except for the steady coverage by The Pittsburgh Courier chain which dramatized Negro demands and helped President Roosevelt outlaw such discrimination. Next week, when 100,000 to 200,000 civil-rights demonstrators descend upon Washington, the wire services and the metropolitan newspapers will blanket the march.

Talent: Moreover, a sizable percentage of the Negro reporters on-scene in Washington will be working for white newspapers. Spurred partly by their consciences and partly by the need for qualified reporters to cover the Negro movement, white newspapers and magazines are searching more and more for qualified Negroes. The search is drawing the small supply of talent away from the underbudgeted Negro press (the average editorial salary at The Chicago Daily Defender is $105 weekly, compared with a $158 top minimum at The Chicago Sun-Times and Daily News). "Very few bright young Negroes even think of joining Negro papers," says Ted Poston, once a Courier staffer, now senior rewriteman at The New York Post. "The goal is to get on the white paper because of better pay and usually better standards of journalism."

Even the crusading passion that once marked the Negro press has been pre-empted by the liberal, white dailies. Starting with Freedom's Journal—founded in 1827 by John Russwurm, the first American Negro to graduate from college (Bowdoin), and the Rev. Samuel Cornish—the Negro press traditionally has been a voice of social protest —first fighting slavery, then the vestiges of slavery. "Every single gain the Negroes have gotten in the race-relations areas has been articulated in the Negro press," says Howard B. Woods, executive editor of the Negro St. Louis Argus. "Without it, there would have been no gains and no NAACP." But now the crusade against discrimination has become a staple of editorial columns throughout the country and many Negro readers prefer to see their hopes echoed there.

Ghetto: "Negro papers are the product of the ghetto," says Allan Morrison, the articulate New York editor of Ebony magazine, publisher John H. Johnson's Life-style monthly which thrives on the Negro's search for status. "When the middle class escapes the ghetto, it rejects everything to do with the ghetto, and it passes this rejection on to its children. Educated Negroes are reading the Negro press decreasingly."

What is left for the Negro press? It is now the society pages, the obituaries, and the inevitable classified ads that continue to draw readers to the

Newsweek—Jeff Lowenthal

Fred Ward—Black Star

Newsweek—Karl Fleming

Johnson, Stone, and Scott: Voices of praise and protest

Negro papers. "If you only read the regular press, you'd think Negroes never were born, never got married, and didn't die," says Defender managing editor Lee Blackwell. "Our readers are interested in their neighbors and if their neighbor is murdered they want to know about it."

Many Negro papers continue to run ads for magic potions, spiritualists, and lonely hearts clubs. Only a few cover anything but Negro news (The Baltimore Afro-American lists only the Negro batters and pitchers in its weekly baseball averages) and only four subscribe to a white wire service, UPI. Yet each has its own personality. Among the Negro papers:

▶Chicago Daily Defender: The angry man of the Negro press is the Defender's new editor-in-chief, C. Sumner (Chuck) Stone Jr., formerly managing editor of The Washington Afro-American. During his stay in the capital, Stone, 38, called many Negro leaders "Uncle Toms" and assailed the white press and politicians. "To justify my existence I must reflect the Negro community's sense of what we are becoming," says Stone, who has spiced the Defender (circulation: 26,000) with vitriol. "I'm a nigger, but I'm a proud nigger. If I don't push, nobody will."

▶Atlanta Daily World: At the opposite extreme from Stone is C.A. Scott, editor of the 31-year-old Atlanta Daily World (circulation: a steady 20,000). Scott's policy is "don't rock the boat." Dull reading and dismal looking, the 5-cent World is always thin, shies clear of racial controversy, relies on UPI for much of its major coverage, and is critical of sit-ins and demonstrations. "The Negro has got to quit getting mad and start getting smart," says 55-year-old Scott. "We have everything to lose and nothing to gain. What we want is goodwill. The less friction we create today, the less we will have to undo tomorrow."

▶The Norfolk Journal and Guide: Once the most successful weekly of any kind in the South, it is often called The New York Times of the Negro press. Yet it has slipped editorially since the death of founder P.B. Young last year. Now run by his son, the attractive, 15-cent Journal and Guide keeps national and nonracial news at a minimum and is a moderate in its editorials.

▶Michigan Chronicle: The best and one of the most successful of the Negro papers is The Michigan Chronicle (circulation: 41,210, an increase of 14,000 since 1958), which attributes its success to its role as a "community, family newspaper" with extensive coverage of local Negro achievement and society news. Whatever sensationalism the Chronicle offers appears in "Other People's Business," a lively column by June Brown, who spins anecdotes about local murderers and adulterers and offers advice ("Parents, when your child asks you, 'Where do babies come from?', don't tell him 'Babies come from being careless' "). But even the Chronicle's formula may fail in a future of increasing community integration.

As one step toward meeting the challenge of integration, Harry Harwich, a white publisher in a predominantly Negro suburb of Boston (Roxbury), has come up with a totally integrated weekly —filled with photos, social news, and little else. By its fourth issue last week, The New Boston Citizen had offended some of its readers with pictures of a mixed marriage, but boosted its circulation to 2,000. "Everything that happens in this community happens to whites as well as Negroes, so we're directing our efforts to the total community," says the Citizen's Negro editor, John Robinson. "We know there is a market for this kind of newspaper."

But no one is certain whether any market will remain in twenty years for the purely Negro press. "I can't escape the belief that the Negro press, by and large, up to the present day performed a great function and now, in an increasingly unsegregated world, it finds itself faced with the problem of reexamining its functions," says NAACP executive secretary Roy Wilkins, a former managing editor of The Kansas City Call. "Negro papers came into being as crusaders. And the minute they stop being crusaders and become chroniclers, they're done."

Back in Action

Mark Ethridge loves putting out newspapers, and next to that he loves talking about putting out newspapers, often all night long. As publisher of The Louisville Courier-Journal and The Times, he once fired his managing editor, Norman Isaacs, for deserting a bull session in his own house at 5 a.m. Ethridge rehired Isaacs a few hours later, but he put "acting" before his title, and, as an inside joke, kept it there.

For the past two years, the 67-year-old Ethridge has been trying to retire from active news management to devote even more time to talking about it. As a move in that direction, he stepped up from publisher to chairman of the board. But last week, he was heading back into action: he accepted the post of editor of Newsday, the Long Island tabloid, to fill the vacancy left by the death last month of founder Alicia Patterson.

Ethridge will probably run the paper only a few years, long enough for Joseph Albright, the capable 26-year-old nephew of Alicia Patterson and publisher Harry Guggenheim, to benefit from active association with him. "I agreed because of this old friendship for both of them and my admiration for Alicia," Ethridge said. A straightforward newsman, Ethridge plans to keep the paper independent. And he will still be able to talk: he will commute one day a week to the University of North Carolina to lecture on communications management—a daytime course.

Press, Radio, T.V.
Research & Movie
Files

SOUTHCENTRAL REGIONAL OFFICE

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE

Of B'nai B'rith

535 GRAVIER STREET, SUITE 806, NEW ORLEANS, LA. 70130

SOUTHCENTRAL REGIONAL ADVISORY BOARD

SIDNEY L. ROSENBAUM
Chairman

LABEL A. KATZ
ROBERT N. BANKS
Past Chairmen

NEW ORLEANS ADVISORY BOARD

BERNARD D. MINTZ
Chairman

ELDON S. LAZARUS
LABEL A. KATZ
SAMUEL I. ROSENBERG
MOISE S. STEEG, JR.
Past Chairmen

IRWIN SCHULMAN
Regional Director

NATIONAL COMMISSION

DORE SCHARY
Chairman

HENRY E. SCHULTZ
MEIER STEINBRINK
Honorary Chairmen

LEONARD ABESS
BARNEY BALABAN
HARRY BRANDT
SAMUEL DAROFF
JACOB K. JAVITS
PHILIP M. KLUTZNICK
HERBERT H. LEHMAN
LEON LOWENSTEIN
WILLIAM SACHS
MELVIN H. SCHLESINGER
MENDEL SILBERBERG
JESSE STEINHART
Honorary Vice-Chairmen

EDWARD GOLDBERGER
MOE KUDLER
ALAN R. MORSE
NORMAN NEWHOUSE
BURNETT ROTH
MRS. CHARLES D. SOLOVICH
Vice-Chairmen

BENJAMIN GREENBERG
Treasurer

HERBERT LEVY
Secretary

BENJAMIN R. EPSTEIN
National Director

PAUL H. SAMPLINER
Chairman, Executive Committee

DAVID A. ROSE
Vice-Chairman Executive Committee

•

LABEL A. KATZ
President, B'nai B'rith

MAURICE BISGYER
Executive Vice-President, B'nai B'rith

MRS. LEONARD M. SIMS
President, B'nai B'rith Women

•

ARNOLD FORSTER
General Counsel

STAFF DIRECTORS

NATHAN C. BELTH
Public Relations

OSCAR COHEN Program

ABNER J. KUPPERMAN
Fund-Raising

ALEXANDER F. MILLER
Community Service

J. HAROLD SAKS
Administration

LESTER J. WALDMAN
Organization and Planning

FF-
Atlanta Community

Dear Friend:

On Wednesday, September 18, 1963 you may have seen the CBS television show about Leander Perez of Plaquemines Parish, Louisiana, entitled The Priest and the Politician. This hour-long documentary details Perez's ideas and activities in the field of politics, segregation and discrimination. Of particular interest is his attitude towards the use of violence as an ultimate weapon.

Our office has obtained a print of this television show and is making it available to interested groups and individuals for viewing.

If you would like to borrow the film for showing, please let us know as soon as possible. Give us a date and one alternate date. Rental charge for this film is $10.00.

If you want a bird's eye view of Leander Perez -- and what he stands for and against -- drop us a note and we will get the film to you.

Sincerely,

Irwin Schulman

Irwin Schulman

IS:sh

"...Dedicated to translating democratic ideals into a way of life for all Americans in our time."

"Miss Smith of Georgia"

(Free, pay shipping costs going back -)

MISS JOAN TITUS

TIME-LIFE BROADCAST, INC.

TIME & LIFE BUILDING

ROCKEFELLER CENTER

NEW YORK 20, N. Y.

Statement of their appraisal to Joan Titus

Give list of people viewing it to Mac -

— Materials Division File 9/19/63

pointment as a delegate to the 22d Congress of the Communist Party.

And there are, everywhere in the memory, what might be called the old Russians: men building homes of crude lumber or adobe, women standing in shadeless fields tending a few cows, children waiting at the roadside to watch the big black cars speed by.

There are the people of the "new lands," sunburned, hardhanded, proud as they show what they have done to transform the endless Siberian steppes into millions of acres of wheatland.

There is the agriculture minister in the Ukraine—Mark Spivak, old Bolshevik, member of the party central committee, veteran survivor of Soviet politics—flushing with emotion as he describes his boyhood as the child of a poor peasant and tells how the Communist Party helped him to rise and prosper, and why it is good for Russia.

And there is Spivak again, real astonishment in his eyes as Orville Freeman explains that he became Secretary of Agriculture in the United States after winning three elections—and losing three elections.

This traveler's montage of faces is paralleled by a similar collection of conclusions—seemingly random and subjective, but all supported by factual evidence.

The potential of Russian agriculture is rich—if it can effectively be tapped. In this country, encompassing one-sixth of the earth's land area, there are resources to produce all that is needed, and more.

The Soviets have come a long way in 45 years—through chaos and bloodbaths, through a devastating war that forced them in many places to start all over again—from the primitive agriculture of czarist Russia.

They are at least in grain and other field crops, a "going concern." Their techniques may seem clumsy to Western eyes, but the production is there, and it will increase. It is not inconceivable that in a decade they will be competing with us in world export markets.

Soviet agricultural research, badly crippled for years by insistence that scientists accept the Lysenko theory of inheritability of environmentally induced characteristics, is now following the same general lines as our own—though researchers still pay lipservice to Lysenkoism.

The willingness of Lenin and Stalin to make the peasant pay the price of national progress—by starving and coercing him while they built Soviet industry—is brutally clear.

The size of Soviet farms is staggering. So is the size of Soviet farm bureaucracy. The conclusion is inescapable that both are too large for efficient operations.

The Communist Party has not been able to apply its principles and its machinery to animal husbandry, or to such specialized crops as fruits and vegetables, with any degree of success. It is questionable whether the Communist system can be successfully applied to livestock production.

Even in the production of grain crops, where the system can be made to work if there are enough machines and enough capital investment, Communist ideology has proven a balky engine—unless it is lubricated with capitalist "material incentives."

No matter what is done to boost production, consumers will not receive full benefits from it until the Soviet Government greatly increases its investments and effort in the farm-to-table segment of agriculture—in transportation, refrigeration, processing, handling and marketing.

As of now, this sector is the stepchild of Soviet agriculture.

Further progress in Soviet agriculture depends on the willingness of Russian leaders to increase the amount and the proportion of capital investment going into agriculture.

While past gains have been made by increasing acreage, future progress will depend on increasing yields—and this will require heavy investment in fertilizer, insecticides and weed-control chemicals, as well as improved seeds.

Even if such increases in investment are made—and Premier Nikita Khrushchev gives every indication of a determination to make them—there is another unknown factor: the ability of Soviet farmers to absorb new technology effectively.

Soviet agriculture cannot make any really spectacular further progress unless the system is modified. This conclusion is not based simply on any reflexive bias against communism, but rather on past performance—and on the admitted fact that Soviet leaders are still struggling to make their political and economic control systems for agriculture workable.

Finally, there is one conclusion that could be a heartening one for the whole world: There is enough work for the Soviets to do on their own farms to keep them, and their national resources, occupied for decades.

If they choose to look inward instead of outward for new frontiers to conquer, the Russian farmer and consumer, as well as the rest of us, will be the better for it.

Khrushchev held his hand up under his chin as he told Freeman, "We are fed up to here with rockets—we have enough rockets. * * * We are going to divert this money to agriculture." Khrushchev's people, no less than the rest of us, can only hope he means it.

ROSH HASHANAH GREETINGS

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, on the occasion of a new year in the Jewish calendar, I would like at this time to extend to the Jewish citizens of the world my sincere wishes for a prosperous year ahead. May it prove to be, for them and for all mankind, a year of genuine peace, security, and happiness. May it bring new hopes, new dreams, and new goals, while at the same time fulfilling the hopes, dreams, and goals of yesteryear.

Rosh Hashanah—the day of God's judgment of the world—is also a day on which the Jews pray not only for themselves, but for the people of the world at large.

In response, the American people as a whole join with them in the knowledge that peace, a traditional object of prayer on this occasion, is no longer a mere trinket to be talked about and played with, in the political sense. Indeed, it is fast winning recognition as an absolute necessity.

Let us then pray, and let us also remember that out of the strains of this era, if we but will it and have the faith to see it through, we can achieve even more than ever.

It is in the spirit of using this time of prayer as the springboard of the inspiration we need to go forward, that I extend to American Jewry my best wishes on Rosh Hashanah.

Press, Radio, T.V. Movie

CIVIL RIGHTS BROADCASTS

Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey. Mr. President, in this time of discussion, debate, and concern over the civil rights crisis, it is a pleasure for me to commend the efforts of a group of television and radio stations, RKO General Broadcasting, to add to public enlightenment on the subject.

RKO General Broadcasting, a national group of five TV and seven radio stations in New York, Los Angeles, Boston, Detroit, San Francisco, Washington, D.C., and Memphis, has developed, and is currently broadcasting, a series of statements by prominent individuals who present their ideas on how the civil rights crisis can be resolved peacefully and justly. An attempt has been made to give widely varying viewpoints. It is a pleasure to report, too, that the Voice of America is broadcasting these messages around the world. The series is called "In Search of a Solution: Civil Rights."

The premise of the series—a continuing national symposium—was set forth in these words by Hathaway Watson, president of RKO General Broadcasting:

> We consider the civil rights issue the most important on the domestic scene today. It is recognized that attitudes on this question differ, yet we believe that there is no disagreement on the desirability of resolving the crisis without violence and with a maximum of fairness to all. In the messages recorded to date we have found, as we expected, a diversity of opinions, which we welcome. For it is our hope that the expressions we broadcast will not only constitute a significant national and local consensus, but that they will offer original and constructive ideas for a solution of this problem.

It is noteworthy that RKO General Broadcasting, in developing the series, sent invitations to an extensive list of leaders in Government, including Senators and Governors of northern and southern States. In addition, invitations were sent to leaders in education, religion, business, labor, the arts and the law, and to the heads of the major Negro organizations. I was gratified to be included among those invited to participate.

The series was conceived by, and is under the supervision of, Martin Weldon, director of public affairs for RKO General Broadcasting; and Mr. Weldon has provided me with a set of the statements so far recorded and now in process of being broadcast, on varying schedules, on the RKO General Broadcasting stations: in New York, WOR AM/FM-TV; in Los Angeles, KHJ AM/FM-TV; in San Francisco, KFRC AM/FM; in Washington, D.C., WGMS AM/FM; and in Memphis, WHBQ AM-TV.

I am pleased to call to the attention of the Congress of the United States these statements, broadcast by RKO General Broadcasting, in regard to solution of this urgent national problem.

I ask unanimous consent that these statements be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FRANCIS CARDINAL SPELLMAN, ARCHBISHOP OF NEW YORK

> The inequities inflicted upon the Negroes in America have been a festering problem in our society for many decades. There is simply no reason why the color of a man's skin should limit his opportunities in a society that boasts of freedom.
>
> Visiting our soldier-sons all over the world, I have seen white and Negro soldiers serving our country, suffering the same hardships and confronting the same hazards of war. Yet contrary to every Christian principle and in defiance of the glorious American ideal of equal justice for all, some of those same Americans who risked their lives for you and for me are denied the right to vote, the right to receive an adequate education, the right to live where they desire.

They are denied these rights for only one reason—the color of their skin. It is lamentable that some Americans who would die together, will not live together. This is an outrage which America cannot tolerate. Doors cannot continue to close in the faces of Negroes as they search for jobs, as they strive for membership in some unions, as they seek the chance for specialized job training. Surely the spirit of justice and equality which lives in the very heart of our great Nation will not permit these inequities to continue.

The tradition of America is to get things done promptly, but also to get them done peacefully. That is the American way. We must accomplish what has to be done working together, as one people with a common ideal, calmly but with determination to progress and to succeed in making our ideals a reality.

DR. DAN M. POTTER, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF THE PROTESTANT COUNCIL OF NEW YORK CITY

The solution to the problems of integration seems to me to be in the realization that in this 20th-century America no human being can be a complete person, a truly fulfilled individual, unless his circle of friends and associates includes members of other races, religions, and cultures.

When the world is two-thirds nonwhite, how can anyone claim to be a complete person when he doesn't personally know some members of that majority? It's simply old-fashioned to be restricted to our "own kind."

We may have to walk a picket line at first to get acquainted, give our children the opportunity to go to school and church with members of other races, or get the chance ourselves, if white, to work with Negroes and Puerto Ricans at all levels in our company or union. You can come even closer home by becoming a foster parent for a Negro child, one of those hundred orphans just waiting for a little human love, a family for their own.

So if we want to be complete, fulfilled persons, we must wake up to the way the world is * * * the way it's always been, really, ever since God created of one blood all nations to live together on the face of the earth. I wonder how long we have left to wake up to reality? If we recognize this basic truth and act accordingly, our social tensions will soon pass, and we'll all be healthier, happier, and more mature people.

DR. JUDAH CAHN, RABBI, METROPOLITAN SYNAGOGUE OF NEW YORK

The long hard years since the founding of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People culminated in the historic 1954 Supreme Court decision which removed the "separate but equal" blot from the pages of American history. But even more important it also vindicated the faith of the NAACP in the strength and the justice of American democracy. The NAACP won its victory not on the barricades, not in street brawls, but within the confines of the judicial process which is the greatest safeguard of personal freedom in American democracy.

Today our civilization and our personal fortunes of free men are more dependent on the strength of law and order than ever before in our history. The time has come for increased action on two fronts. First, we must continue, within the framework of our legal system, to give every citizen of the United States not only equality before the law but the right to utilize his talents and abilities in every area of life. Second, and of equal importance, Negro and white citizens alike must continue to be unswerving in their devotion to democracy.

We have reached a point in this great American revolution when the tactics used must be weighed in the light of the victory which is inevitable. We must be sure that the impatience and frustrations which still exist are not used to destroy the very things for which we fight: the responsibilities and privileges of democratic living.

ROY WILKINS, EXECUTIVE SECRETARY OF THE NAACP

The civil rights crisis can be and will be resolved peaceably and justly. The alternative is chaos, revolution, and a racist dictatorship. Fortunately, our governmental system provides the means by which this crisis can be resolved.

We are now engaged in a massive effort to secure enactment of the President's civil rights bill. Negroes have been deprived of rights by legislative action. Legislation is required to restore those rights and to open up new vistas to Negro citizenship.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has given top priority to enactment of a pending bill providing, among other items, equal employment opportunity, protection of the right to vote, acceleration of school desegregation, and equal access to public accommodations. To fail to pass such a law is to invite intensified turbulence in Main Street, U.S.A.

Court action, like legislation, has proved helpful in leveling racial barriers. The U.S. Supreme Court decision of 1954 in the school cases demolished the constitutional basis of racial segregation. Political action has also been productive of certain gains in civil rights.

Revival of the American tradition of seeking redress of grievances through public demonstrations has focused international attention on the evils of segregation and has helped to break down some racial barriers.

The NAACP has utilized all of these means and will continue to do so in the firm conviction that through them civil rights will be peaceably attained.

SENATOR HARRISON A. WILLIAMS, JR., OF NEW JERSEY

Americans have talked for many, many years about full equality for all citizens. This year, a full century after the signing of the Emancipation Proclamation, we certainly should realize that good intentions are not enough. Now we must act.

Congress has before it a legislative package sent to it by the President. We should get to work on this bill at the earliest possible date. It not only would end obvious injustices, such as the denial of public accommodations on the basis of race. It would also get at the economic injustices facing Negroes.

Vocational training for job opportunities may sound like the long way around to racial equality. But I think that the President's call for great increases in this program is a very necessary part of our all-out attack on discrimination.

Even if we in Congress do our job promptly, much more must still be done in every community, by every citizen. In my home State of New Jersey, many individuals are now at work finding their own local answers to such questions as unequal opportunity for education. The going is not easy. Good will is not enough. Much patience and skill are going into the effort, too. But these Americans have discovered that true equality will require involvement by every thoughtful citizen. And I am sure that includes you.

SENATOR JACOB K. JAVITS, OF NEW YORK

That the civil rights struggle is the gravest emergency facing our country on an almost continuous basis right now everybody agrees.

I think everybody could agree, too, that the executive department—whatever may have been its failings—has done a great deal in the civil rights field. I've pointed out many of its insufficiencies but it's done a lot in suits and in the willingness to send troops, if need be, into areas like Mississippi and Federal marshals, etc.

Certainly our courts have done their full part in charting what ought to be justice to American Negroes—beginning, of course, with the famous 1954 school desegregation decision. Where we have had the lag has been in the Congress and that's where the battle is being fought now. I think the demonstrations which we have seen have on the whole been peaceful, though there have been incidents of violence—I think there's been more violence to prevent the demonstrations—by racists and by misguided police departments, working under statutes which have no business being on the statute books of any State or any municipality. The violence has been used more to repress the demonstrations than by the Negro demonstrators themselves. But nonetheless, there has been some violence. On the whole, however, the movement has been relatively peaceful and I think it has this great distinction, and I think it's been so effective for that reason.

Now no one wants to prevent our citizens from voicing their proper grievances and protests. What we want to do is to give those grievances and protests a sense of justice, a sense of being redressed, and that's where the Congress comes in. And that's why what happens in the Congress is the most important in getting civil rights legislation now; and the most important vote to be taken in the Congress on civil rights will be the vote in the Senate of the United States—which must be two-thirds, 67 out of 100 Senators—to close off debate and thereby end the southern filibuster against civil rights legislation which is inevitable and which has traditionally killed it off in the Senate when it became really meaningful. We have had civil rights laws in 1957 and 1960. They were all right, but they didn't fill the bill, as we can see from the present situation. When such legislation threatens to fill the bill, that's when the southerners feel a call to arms and when they really fight.

I believe that the President's civil rights package is an excellent beginning. The package, as you know, would give the Government the right to bring a civil suit to enforce a citizen's right to attend a nonsegregated public school. It would extend the life of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission for 4 years. Very importantly, it would help us with the voting right; and finally, it would include the much-controverted public accommodations section, which would give people—specially Negroes—the right to free access to hotels, motels, restaurants, and places of amusement which do a substantial business in interstate commerce.

I don't think that's enough. I think what has to be added is the general power of the Attorney General to seek injunctions in all cases involving the civil rights of Americans; and that, for example, involves cases in the administration of justice—the so-called police brutality cases and cases in which an effort has been made by police departments under illegal, unconstitutional statutes to suppress the rights of Negroes to peaceably assemble and seek the redress of their grievances. I think we need an FEPC (Fair Employment Practices Commission), as the denial of opportunity for a job is one of the most important rights which is often denied to Negroes in this country—including the right of serving as an apprentice.

I think we've got to make it mandatory that the President shall cut off any Federal funds to any State program in which racial discrimination occurs. And let us understand that this now occurs in hospitals, that it occurs in employment, that it occurs in housing, that it occurs in respect of the dearest equal opportunities to which a Negro is entitled.

I would also extend the Civil Rights Commission permanently.

This package of laws in my opinion is the minimum necessary. It would enable the Negro to move his protests against inequality from the streets into the court, and that is what we want. That is the function of law.

It is very, very important that all of us realize that this is going to be one of the toughest fights of the age—that every Senator and every Congressman needs the support of every articulate American who at last feel the stirrings of conscience that there must be justice to our Negro citizens, justice which can no longer be denied.

SENATOR THOMAS J. DODD, OF CONNECTICUT

We are in the midst of a great national crisis over the long-smoldering question of civil rights which has suddenly ignited and burst into flames in all sections of the country. How can we resolve this crisis peacefully and justly? I believe we can do this only by removing the injustices against which our Negro citizens so properly protest. And the way to remove these injustices, all else having failed for so long a period of time, is for Congress to enact legislation which will make the protections set forth in the Constitution a reality for every American.

We need not pioneer in the establishment of new rights or privileges. The Constitution has done that for us. We need only to pass legislation that will put the Constitution into effect for millions of our fellow citizens. And when we do this, the crisis will pass, the riots and demonstrations will cease, because justice will have been done.

Millions of Negroes are today being denied the right to vote, despite the express provision in the Constitution that no citizen be denied the right to vote because of his race. I and many others have introduced legislation to correct this dreadful situation by requiring that all local voting officials live up to the Constitution, and I believe we will succeed this year.

Millions of Negro children are presently denied the right to attend public schools on the basis of equality with white children. Almost ten years ago this business of segregated schools was stricken down by the Supreme Court as unconstitutional. Since then, progress in desegregation has been painfully slow and completely nonexistent in some areas. Again, the solution clearly lies in legislation which will bring the full power and prestige of the U.S. Government into the struggle to end this form of discrimination.

Another odious form of discrimination is the refusal to serve Negroes by restaurants, hotels, theaters, and other places of public business. I think you will all agree that to have Americans being refused service in places of public business solely because of their race is morally wrong and legally untenable. That is why those of us in Congress who oppose discrimination in all of its forms are moving to end this abuse.

It would have been better, of course, had the problem of racial discrimination been worked out in the hearts and minds of the American people, in their homes, their churches, their schools, and their communities.

But 100 years have passed since the Emancipation Proclamation and these problems have not been worked out. The precious rights of Americans can no longer be trampled upon without grave damage to our Nation and to the integrity of our national purpose. That is why the President's civil rights program must be enacted. The time has come for America to fulfill her promises.

SENATOR ALLAN J. ELLENDER, OF LOUISIANA

I have been asked to comment briefly on methods for resolving the so-called civil rights crisis. Let me say that the issue is impregnated and embalmed in politics; it always has been, and no doubt always will be. Following Reconstruction, it became good politics to persecute the South. As Negroes migrated to the North, minorities soon learned the value of bloc voting, and politicians became dependent on their support. As a result, legislation which is neither needed, desired, nor constitutional is introduced and pushed in the Congress.

I refuse to admit that the Nation is facing a crisis today. Additional legislation will merely serve to generate more hate between the whites and blacks. Current events have been contrived by a few misguided leaders. The means of dealing with the situation can also be contrived by men of patience, understanding, and good will.

Toward this end, I would suggest that the administration refrain from giving its support to the demonstrations which have occurred all over the Nation, and speak out strongly in favor of maintaining law and order.

Second, instead of concentrating their efforts in breaking down local law and custom, the Negro leadership should be encouraged to prepare their followers to assume the responsibility which is borne by good citizens everywhere. We hear much about civil rights, but little about civil responsibility. Negroes will share in the fruits of our economy only to the extent that they are willing to prepare themselves to undertake the task ahead.

SENATOR CLIFFORD P. CASE, OF NEW JERSEY

Federal action on civil rights is imperative. For one thing we should pass a public accommodations law. Nothing so affronts and strikes at human dignity as the refusal of services extensively held out to the general public. The concept of a public accomodations law is not new. It's as old as the common law of England. It's as old as the Bible. It's already the law in more than half our States. And this is only one of several measures which Congress must enact. More effective authority for the Attorney General to protect all citizens in the exercise of their constitutional rights, the outlawing of discrimination in employment, the denial of Federal funds for programs such as worker training when they are operated on a segregated basis. These, to me, are essential parts of meaningful civil rights legislation, and much more is also needed. Legislation alone, of course, won't solve the problem; but it is the necessary underpinning for the really great effort that we must make in all parts of the country at all levels of society. In the last few years the gap between the living standards of whites and nonwhites has been growing. This is a reversal of the trend during the war and postwar period, and it's fraught with danger. Unemployment at a rate far higher than among whites. Less schooling, less income, shorter life expectancy. These are the unhappy facts of life for nonwhite citizens. We must act to close this gap or the standard for all is threatened. Our nonwhite citizens represent a source this country has hardly begun to tap. They can and they want to contribute to building a stronger economy, a better society for all. We must meet the challenge that now confronts the country, not grudgingly, but affirmatively and resolutely. It's an opportunity to free in the true sense not only our fellow citizens but ourselves from the burden of a conscience too long uneasy with the knowledge of injustice too long condoned and wrongs too long unchecked.

MR. HYMAN H. BOOKBINDER, DIRECTOR OF ELEANOR ROOSEVELT FOUNDATION

Eleanor Roosevelt once asked: "Where, after all, do universal human rights begin?" and answered it thus: "In small places, close to home—so close and so small that they cannot be seen on any map of the world." The present civil rights crisis can be resolved peacefully and justly only if each of us, as Mrs. Roosevelt asked, makes it a matter of our own personal and local concern.

It is a sad fact of life, however, that few of us know just how to cope with the human rights crisis through which we are now going. If all of the tensions and sacrifices of the present revolution are not to be wasted, we must quickly develop the know-how, the skills, the special understanding which will bring lasting and meaningful results. In every local chamber of commerce, there is urgent need now for qualified, sympathetic, knowledgeable people. How do we motivate and train Negro workers for skilled jobs? How do we prepare the community for open occupancy? How do we achieve integrated schooling in a de facto segregated community?

These are the kinds of questions which cannot be fully answered on the picket line or the protest march—important as this direct action may be to get basic concessions. But for real, lasting gains we must develop people with skills in a variety of fields—education, psychology, sociology, human relations.

The foundation, created to carry on in Eleanor Roosevelt's tradition, will do what it can to develop skilled, knowledgeable leadership to help us through this difficult crisis and to assure permanent victory.

SENATOR PHILIP A. HART, OF MICHIGAN

What should be done to resolve the civil rights crisis? The most effective answer, of course, would be to change the minds and the hearts of men so that the Negro is simply treated like everyone else. Because that, basically, is what this struggle for equal opportunity is all about.

When a Negro approaches a school superintendent, a voting registrar, an employer, a restaurant owner or an innkeeper, he doesn't want to be judged while he is still 50 feet away.

That's why the civil rights legislation now before Congress—legislation in the fields of public accommodations, fair employment practices, voting rights, and school desegregation—is so important.

Will it change the minds and the hearts of men? In itself, of course not. These laws have been on the books for years in Michigan and other Northern States where discrimination certainly has not totally disappeared.

But they do have these effects: they open the doors to swifter progress.

Men find they can work together on an equal basis without disrespect. They find that schools can be integrated without a breakdown of educational standards, they find they can share a pleasant restaurant dining room without discomfort, they find they can go to a polling place together and share a common political purpose. They can find, in short, that it is possible to be decent to each other.

I am convinced that once we have established equal opportunities in these fields—education, voting rights, public accommodations, housing, and employment—the fear and distrust that breeds discrimination will begin to drain away.

So certainly, these civil rights bills are not ends in themselves. They are simply an essential first step toward the final solution I mentioned earlier: changing the hearts and the minds of men.

SENATOR PATRICK V. MCNAMARA, OF MICHIGAN

Within a few weeks the Congress of the United States will come to grips with the overriding, political, and moral issue of our time: the drive of the Negro American, for the equal rights promised all Americans under our Constitution.

Many people are wondering whether this civil rights crisis, coming a hundred years after the Civil War, can be solved peacefully and with justice. Now in connection with the civil rights crisis we have heard a great deal about rules and regulations, Supreme Court rulings, Presidential orders, Attorneys General's rulings, and Agency regulations. But it seems to me that what we have overlooked is the most important rule of all, governing human conduct. That is the golden rule. When it gets down to the basic issues that's what the civil rights fight is all about. Are we going to do unto others as we would have them do unto us? I believe that we can and that we must apply this Golden Rule of conduct to those American citizens who are seeking the equality promised them under the Constitution but denied them in practice. The civil rights program of President Kennedy and other legislation before the Congress would be implemented by the Golden Rule. I am particularly impressed with the emphasis the President's program places on education, job opportunities, and voting rights, because I believe these issues are the keystones to our civil rights structure. And I believe further that they can be enacted into law and thus become a just solution to the civil rights crisis that now confronts us.

GOV. NELSON A. ROCKEFELLER, OF NEW YORK

I appreciate greatly the opportunity to discuss the civil rights crisis and the peaceful and just solutions that every American wants to find.

I think we ought to start out by making it clear that this isn't a crisis that relates to today or this year alone. This is a crisis that has been going on for a hundred years in our country. It relates basically to our spiritual heritage of the worth and dignity of every individual and his freedom of opportunity, his equality of opportunity, his rights as an American citizen. As long as those rights are not realized by all Americans, as long as there are hurdles and barriers which prevent individuals in this country, for no cause of their own, from having that opportunity of equality, then this crisis will continue.

Now we go to the question of the solutions. Having worked all my life to try to further the cause of equality, it seems to me that one can break his down very simply into various facets.

First there is the question of the law, the law of our land, whether it is a State law or national law. I think that we have to—and as Governor of one of the 50 States I have worked very hard to—bar, by legal means, in statutes of the law passed by the legislature, all forms of discrimination. I am proud to say that even before my time New York State has been a pioneer in writing civil rights legislation. And at this last session in January, February, and March of this year, we completed in New York State the final measures necessary to legally bar discrimination and the measures necessary to give the executive branch the power to enforce those measures.

It seems to me that both nationally and statewide this is something that has to be done if we are going to make a reality of this American dream for all people. However, that doesn't mean, in and of itself, that one has accomplished the end result by simply passing legislation. That simply sets the legal and moral climate, although the moral climate is set by our belief in our heritage and faith in the Judeo-Christian philosophy.

There are really two major areas that one can break this down in certain parts of the country where the law has not been written that bars discrimination. There we have the aspirations of minority groups who seek to achieve equality of access and rights, whether it is in employment, whether it is access to places of public accommodation or private accommodation, whatever it may be. So that in those areas where this has not been achieved, the goals are immediate for the minority groups. They want to get legal right to access.

This, in my opinion, we, as Americans, in consonance with our heritage, must do.

In areas like New York State, where this action has been taken legally, everybody, regardless of race, creed, color, or national origin, has access.

But the big problem in our area here is opportunity for employment. This has two facets—one, the need for a full employment economy. This is true for the entire Nation. As long as there are men and women who want to work who cannot find jobs, we will not have a full employment economy. And as long as there are prejudices, then those in minority groups will find it even more difficult.

In the United States today the unemployment rate among Negroes, for instance, is twice as high as it is among whites. Therefore we have to go right to the heart of this question on employment, both in increasing and accelerating employment opportunities through an expansion of our economy and the rate of growth, and to eliminate these prejudices which exist. To do that we've got to go right back to the basic area of training—education in our schools. Without education today, the opportunities of employment are automatically limited. Then there is the question of training—the question of apprenticeship, free access to apprenticeship and admission to unions to remove vestiges of discrimination there. Then there is the vestige of discrimination in employment. That must be eliminated.

This can be done in a positive way by employers who seek to find the individuals to whom they can give opportunities for employment.

Only if we are consciously aware, as a nation—as, in my opinion, we are today as never before—that our moral responsibility and our legal responsibility is to insure equal opportunity, can we realize this goal. And we have got to take positive steps, conscientiously, as Americans, in every phase of our life—and particularly in employment—to remove these barriers in every step of the way through apprenticeship, through education, through training, through union membership, through employment, and through advancement. Through this opportunity, given to all, we can see the American dream become a reality for all Americans.

GOV. GEORGE WALLACE, OF ALABAMA

The so-called civil rights matter that has been bandied around by politicians (and it has been a political issue) has of course, in my judgment not helped the Negro citizens in this country at all. In fact, it has worked against their interests, and this, of course, I regret.

I, as Governor, am very sad to know and see the demonstrations that we have in the streets, the danger that has been brought to the lives of the citizens of those respected cities where the demonstrations occur. In my judgment, this is not in the interest of anyone. Politicians have so long misused the Negro citizen of this country by inviting him, for instance, to come to the largest cities of the United States above the Mason and Dixon Line, telling him it was the land of milk and honey, and when he arrived there he found unemployment and he is living stacked upon one another and he doesn't like it. And I think the politicians in those various cities and States who have misled him ought to be defeated themselves for office. And they ought to approach this matter in a practical, sane, commonsense plan and leave the politics out of it. I've heard so many politicians say that I must speak in this way because I have so many people who believe in this who voted in my area, but I don't believe in it. There has been so much hypocrisy in it. We people here in Alabama have not been hypocritical in the matter, we have practiced one system and practice the same system. We preached and practiced the same system; that has not been the case in many parts of the United States. I feel that the solution to the problem is a matter of expanded economy, a matter of educational approach, and that we are doing in this State.

We're providing more trade-training facilities for Negro and white students and providing additional funds for education at all levels for all races. We feel that this in itself is the answer to these problems. I have traveled all over this country and I have been talking to industries who are going to expand in the Southland and we have announced around $225 million worth of new industries in Alabama in the last 6 months. Hundreds and thousands of Negro and white citizens of this State will find industrial job employment as a result of these efforts on the part of myself as Governor of Alabama and other officials in this State, both local and State. Not a single one of the agitators such as Martin Luther King have an industrial development committee. I've never heard of an industrial development committee, of the NAACP, or CORE, or any organization of that sort, and if they spend as much time talking to people who are going to expand industries to bring their industries to the South where so many of the Negro citizens live, in order that there might be more opportunities for jobs in the Southland, it would do a lot more good than encouraging people in insurrection and guerrilla warfare in the streets. I'd like to give you one instance here. I see where they are having trouble getting jobs in other parts of the country. But for instance, in Alabama we are building two State buildings, next to the State Capitol, and you can go look for yourself, we have more Negro workmen working under contract with the contractors building those buildings than there are white, this is significant. But you can go to other parts of the country and you do not find this. Any skilled workman in Alabama, white or Negro has no trouble finding employment because of his color. And this, we of course, are proud of. We shall continue to work for more jobs in Alabama and for more educational opportunities for both groups, because we shall continue in State government to provide additional and better care for the tubercular patients of both races and the mentally ill of both races because that has been the practice of our people here and shall continue to be so.

We feel that this is one of the great issues involved in this matter of so-called civil rights (and you know we have 18 pages of civil rights bills legislation already enacted.) We have the Constitution of the United States which itself guarantees the civil rights of our citizens. We don't need any more legislation. The so-called civil rights legislation pending now would destroy property rights in this country. It would also tell people who can work and who cannot. It will take jobs away from one group and give them to another. In my judgment, as Governor of Alabama, I see this as a dangerous precedent. We believe that local people should handle local problems particular and peculiar to that particular section. We feel that the people of New York and Pennsylvania should work to solve these problems within their own State and that we should solve them within the State of Alabama. This has been the practice and the custom for the last 100-odd years, and we feel that the Supreme Court and the Federal Government attempting to do away with local government is not in the interest of white or Negro citizens either.

Our hope and prayer is that God blesses all the citizens of Alabama of this Nation both white and Negro.

REPRESENTATIVE JOHN V. LINDSAY, OF NEW YORK

Your question is, What should be done toward a peaceful and just settlement of the civil rights question in the United States? A tough question. First of all it must be made clear that the chief responsibility is local. No matter what the U.S. Congress does or doesn't do, the fact remains that it is on the shoulders of the citizens of each community to examine his conscience to see to it whether or not he or she has done all that they possibly can do to make the necessary adjustments in their own communities, to satisfy these very legitimate pressures that have been building up. The No. 1 area of relief is jobs. Jobs is the first and foremost subject that must be taken up in order to solve this question. And job legislation is the first kind of legislation that we should have in the U.S. Congress. There are a great many areas where legislation can help, but none so great as in the area of job opportunities. This pertains to both management and labor, because if the labor market can be opened up to minority groups and particularly to the Negro population of the United States then we'll begin the solution to this nagging problem of equal opportunity under the American system. I predict that there will be legislation affecting jobs. FEPC is important and we will push for it in the House of Representatives and in the Judiciary Committee of which I am a member. We will be pushing for some other legislation too, but let's not forget that the legislative approach is only part of the answer. The rest of it is on the shoulders of each of us back home.

MR. STANLEY H. LOWELL, CHAIRMAN, NEW YORK COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS

America is going through a social revolution today and the struggle to achieve its objectives—equality and equality of opportunity—is the responsibility of every American, no matter his color or race.

Every one of us should ask himself—100 years after the Emancipation Proclamation and 180 years after the adoption of our historic Bill of Rights—whether any American receives less than his fair share of job opportunities, schooling, and housing solely and only because of the color of that man's skin, or his race or religion. To the extent that this is true, we are not living up to our own image of ourselves as a land of freedom and equality. This is where the achievement of equality of opportunity is the responsibility of all. At the New York City Commission on Human Rights of New York we are committed to this fight for freedom. How about you?

VERY REV. STURGIS RIDDLE, DEAN OF PROTESTANT CATHEDRAL, PARIS, FRANCE

Science, religion, and a basic human instinct in everybody who has not been taught falsely, all agree with a Bible truth: "God has made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on the face of the whole earth."

Our problem is to enlighten and win over a minority in our country who do not yet recognize or who are not yet ready to practice this truth of science, religion, humanity, and Americanism, to show them that our country cannot hold up its head or keep its respect and leadership in the free world if we do not recognize and practice this truth.

Who is going to change heart and attitudes, more important than laws, who is going to turn on the spotlight of this truth?

Why, every parent, every teacher, every minister, every editor, every judge, every lawmaker, every employer, every neighbor, every community leader, every molder of public opinion, every decent American, white or black, practicing in thought, work, and deed what we have preached so long.

I believe that if every one of us will get into this act to enlightenment—and more and more are getting into it, this crisis in civil rights, this black mark on the American conscience and our world leadership, so long brewing and long overdue, will be resolved peacefully and justly.

I believe it will be, because most of us want it that way.

MR. BENJAMIN EPSTEIN, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF THE ANTIDEFAMATION LEAGUE OF B'NAI B'RITH

Our Nation urgently requires a new birth of freedom.

The civil rights crisis in which we find ourselves today must be solved in justice and can be solved in peace.

This is not a Negro or white problem, but an American problem.

The President's civil rights program is essential and urgent. It deserves our full and active support. We must have laws which will eliminate barriers preventing minority groups from developing their talents, and enjoying full citizenship.

However, laws will not be enough. We need an aroused citizenry, determined to overcome, once and for all, the cultural heritage of prejudice and discrimination. It is up to business, political, religious and community leaders to take the initiative. When demonstrations take place, it is an indication that community leadership has failed. It should not be necessary for demonstrations to be held. Activated by peaceful intent, we must recognize that they are in the great American tradition for the redress of grievances.

As we have seen, demonstrations have served an important purpose. Demonstrations which are planned and carried out peacefully to correct these injustices, are legal and constructive. But the evils of discrimination in our society should be eradicated before the picketing starts. Reason and justice demand that the deprivations of rights be corrected around the conference table, by the action of community leadership, and by passage and enforcement of laws. It should not be necessary to demonstrate in the streets.

The time to act, the President has said, is now! Let us act so that the dream of freedom will be realized for every man.

MR. LEO PERILS, DIRECTOR, AFL–CIO COMMUNITY SERVICE ACTIVITIES

There has been some nonsense spoken and some mistakes made in the fight for civil rights. But this has always been the case. This has been the case in our early struggles for trade union organization. Still, unionism has prevailed and workers, as a result, have achieved a measure of dignity and security.

The same will happen with our Negro fellow citizens if they will continue to wage the good fight for dignity and security. Some nonsensical talk and a few errors in judgment are a small price to pay for first-class citizenship.

The heart of the matter is first-class citizenship. No democratic society can endure unless people of all races, colors, and creeds have equal opoprtunities to achieve first-class citizenship in employment, in housing, in education, in public accommodations, in social service, and right across the board in every phase of our national life.

But first-class citizenship can be achieved only by changes from within as well as by changes from without. By changes from without I mean legislative and social action to open the doors to first-class citizenship. And by changes from within I mean the burning desire to inform ourselves, educate ourselves, and to assume the responsibilities of first-class citizenship. This is not only the Negro's fight. It is our fight as well. It is a fight for a democratic America. Of course, we, in labor, will continue to wage this fight to help solve civil rights problems in our own house as well as in our national life.

MAX J. RUBIN, PRESIDENT OF THE NEW YORK CITY BOARD OF EDUCATION

In striving to achieve integration, the school system has an important responsibility.

The objective must be genuine and sincere.

The limitation upon its efforts is that of feasibility.

No school system can singlehandedly overcome the factors that surround it, including segregated housing areas. Schools should be located in fringe areas wherever possible. Zoning should be more flexible.

Such programs as open enrollment should be expanded and encouraged. Greater effort must be made to attract minority group candidates to teaching.

The human relations unit must be expanded to work with local councils to adapt patterns offering integration opportunities. The curriculum should recognize more effectively the contributions made to our society by minority groups.

While these efforts are in process we must seek substantially to strengthen the educational quality in the schools of the disadvantaged neighborhoods. New ideas will be developed and all should be given earnest and sympathetic consideration. The New York City school system has pledged and will continue to fulfill its commitment to these objectives.

MR. A. N. SONNABEND, PRESIDENT OF THE HOTEL CORP. OF AMERICA

The current crisis in race relations goes far beyond the crucial challenge of expanding opportunity for Negroes and other minority groups. At the present time there is no active organized force in the local communities concerned with the task of developing and enlarging job and housing opportunities.

Therefore, I now urgently propose that the Federal Government, in cooperation with local communities, set up throughout the country a system of local boards to expand opportunity for Negro and other minority groups. These boards, functioning like the local draft boards and war manpower commissions of World War II, should be made up of a cross section of community leaders and businessmen, Negro and white, who have the influence and resources to make possible the expansion of opportunity.

Such boards should have the full backing and support of Federal and State Governments in carrying out both short- and long-term programs. In each community these boards would seek to develop inventories of job opportunities. They would work to persuade employers to create new areas of job possibilities. They would take immediate practical steps to reduce the many barriers that stand in the way of Negroes and other minority groups and they would undertake arbitration of issues which create community tensions and conflicts.

I propose a number of other important steps to achieve full equality of opportunity.

1. A White House Conference on Race Relations, convened by President Kennedy, to bring together national Negro and white leaders who will develop means of coping with the race relations emergency.

2. The establishment of a Bureau of Intergroup Relations within the U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, to act as a national coordination service for intergroup relations agencies.

3. Initiation by the Federal Government of long-range psychological and social research into American race and group relations problems.

Americans hold dear the principle of equal rights for all. It is our task now to build a living reality out of the American promise of equal justice and opportunity for all men regardless of race or creed.

MR. GUS TYLER, ASSISTANT PRESIDENT OF INTERNATIONAL LADIES GARMENT WORKERS UNION

A first step in dealing with the present civil rights crisis is legislation guaranteeing equal access to voting, housing, jobs, education, and public accommodations. Reform through legal channels makes unnecessary revolt through extra-legal channels. The most crucial area is employment.

First, we need fair employment legislation and practice, judging a man by his brain or brawn and not by his skin or kin.

Second, we need full employment. An equal opportunity to be unemployed is no opportunity at all. If growing unemployment forces us to ask, "Who shall be thrown out of work, a white man or Negro?" We will sharpen rather than lessen racial tension.

Finally, as a greater job opportunity is created, Negroes must be prepared to qualify. Such preparation will require cooperation of three groups: Government, the white community, and the Negro community.

To the Government falls the responsibility of providing greater educational facilities to train and upgrade the less skilled. To the opinionmakers in the white community falls the responsibility of helping to correct the image of the Negro as an "inferior." A new image of the Negro as a worthy citizen will help stimulate the aspiration. That is a necessary prerequisite of self-development. Finally, the Negro himself must reach out to prepare himself for his new status—for opportunity and rights that will automatically carry with them challenges and responsibilities.

In all this, let's remember: The Negro has been patient for at least 100 years. The white community must also be patient.

MALCOLM X, EASTERN MINISTER OF THE BLACK MUSLIMS

The Honorable Elijah Mohammed has the only peaceful solution. He says that 20 million ex slaves must be permanently separated from our former slave master, and placed in a land that we can call our own. Then we can create our own jobs, we can control our own economy, and solve our own problems, instead of waiting for the white man to solve these problems for us. In our own land, we can set up farms, factories, and businesses. We can establish our own industry, and our own government, and become an independent nation in our own right. And once we are separated from the jurisdiction of this white Nation we can then enter into trade and commerce for ourselves with other independent nations. This is the only permanent solution to this cancerous race problem. In our own land, we can establish our own agricultural system. We can grow food to feed our people, we can raise cattle and use the hide, and the leather, and the wool to clothe our people. We can dig clay from the earth and make our own bricks to build homes for our people. And we can turn the trees into lumber and furnish the homes for our people. Once 20 million ex slaves are back in our own homeland, we can stop begging the white man, we can stand on our own feet, because we will then have something to stand on. Trying to force ourselves into this white American society will lead to nothing but increased violence, bloodshed between the 20 million ex slaves and their former slave master, and may even provoke a bloody race war which today could develop into international repercussions and involvements. So Mr. Mohammed said that if our pepole are not allowed to go back to Africa, to our own people, since we cannot get along here in peace with whites, then some of this American Continent should be separated and let us go there, where we can then stand on our own feet, solve our problems in that manner, and have separate territory for ourselves.

MR. FRANK E. KARELSEN, VICE PRESIDENT, PUBLIC EDUCATION ASSOCIATION

To resolve the civil rights crisis the Congress must, of course, pass the civil rights legislation, inclusive of a Fair Employment Practices Act. This, however, will provide only a legal basis for meeting the problem. To effectively resolve the inequalities now existing it is above all things necessary to raise the economic level of the Negro American. His depressed economic status hinders every phase of integration and perpetuates slums. Jobs must be made available in all fields of gainful employment, including the professions. The Negro, however, must be equipped to take the employment when available. This requires education in primary and secondary public schools, including important technological training. Unfortunately, the facts are that in the slum areas of the cities, and in most rural areas as well, such education is not available. This condition exists because States and local governments are not supplying and in most instances cannot supply the necessary funds. To solve the problem, therefore, it is vital for the Federal Government to appropriate not less than $5 billion a year for Federal aid to education in order to correct this shocking deficiency in our democracy. These funds will not only help to solve the Negro American problem but will give to all of our citizens the educational opportunity necessary for the very survival of our Nation as a democracy in this era of ever-increasing automation and international competition.

MR. WILL MASLOW, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, AMERICAN JEWISH CONGRESS

A social revolution is now in progress in the United States. The spokesmen for 18 million Negroes, one-tenth of our population, are demanding that the pledge of full equality set forth in the 14th amendment at long last be redeemed. What this submerged 10th of our population demands is simply that discrimination against Negroes in employment, in housing, in education, in voting registration and in places of public accommodation end. The Negro demands equality now, not 20 years hence. He is fed up with the snail's pace at which his legitimate grievanecs are being redressed and his bitterness finds outlet in mass rallies, and sit-ins.

What is desperately needed at this moment is an immediate demonstration that America recognizes these legitimate grievances that demonstration can be best provided by the enactment of the Kennedy civil rights program without crippling amendments. While this legislation will not by itself undo decades of deprivation and will need to be supplemented by compensatory programs to enable Negroes and Puerto Ricans and Latin-Americans to take advantage of the new opportunities that may be created, it will be a signal that finally, 95 years after the 14th amendment was ratified, we are beginning to move in the direction of equality.

A stalemate in Congress of the enactment of token laws will result in further bitterness. It will undermine the position of those Negro leaders and Negro organizations who seek to focus Negro resentment upon constructive goals. It will shift the battles from the legislative halls to the streets and play into the hands of racist movements like the black muslims.

All Americans must therefore, in this moment of racial crisis, convince their Senators and Representatives in Congress that immediate enactment of the Kennedy program is our top domestic priority.

DR. JOHN SLAWSON, EXECUTIVE VICE PRESIDENT, AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE

On many occasions in the history of our country we have declared disaster areas in entire geographic regions.

Today we have a similar situation, not in a geographic area, but in a very important population segment of our country—more than 18 million American Negroes. For over 300 years Negroes have been deprived of their elementary rights. As a result of this cumulative disregard for his person, we are now faced with a situation that need to be similar.

This concentration has to be achieved by means of a crash program in behalf of the Negro. This is of particular importance in vocational training and education. Unless there is a mobilization of vocational training and educational facilities in the interest of the Negro, it will not be possible to place Negroes in skilled jobs. And, since the unskilled job market is rapidly contracting, the compelling need for intensive training for Negroes becomes a necessity. The same may be said for education. We need competent teachers able and willing to put forth the effort that will be needed to make up for the tragic losses caused by neglect and obstruction over many generations.

Training and education should receive priority. Just as we have developed a Peace Corps for service abroad, should we not initiate an equality corps of skilled teachers and technicians, who would work to expand opportunities for Negroes throughout the Nation? It is really more than a question of disaster or emergency; it is, in fact, a matter of morality.

POSSIBLE SOVIET BID FOR AMERICAN WHEAT

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, today's New York Times carries a report that representatives of the Soviet Union have approached American traders with offers to buy wheat.

The same issue of the Times reports that Secretary of Commerce Luther Hodges favors a reappraisal of the U.S. policy, which in the past has hindered the sale of U.S. agricultural commodities to the Soviet bloc.

I have believed for some time that we are working against our own self-interest in discouraging the sale of our agricultural produce to any country willing to buy it. It is easy to understand why we might want to restrict the sale of strategic war materials but it would seem to me both in our interest and in the interest of the Soviet bloc for us to meet their needs for food imports, while at the same time meeting our own needs for agricultural markets.

I am pleased to note that at the recent White House Conference of more than Press, Radio, T.

+ Movies

NEW YORK CHAPTER
THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE

NEGRO PRESS DIGEST
September 25, 1963

Contents

BLACK MUSLIMS	P. 1
CONGRESS	P. 1
DEMONSTRATIONS	P. 2
EDUCATION	P. 3
EMPLOYMENT AND UNIONS	P. 4
FOREIGN OPINION	P. 6
INTERMARRIAGE	P. 6
POLITICAL FIGURES	P. 7
REAL ESTATE AND HOUSING	P. 8
SPORTS AND ENTERTAINMENT	P. 9
THIRD PARTY	P. 10
TRAINING PROGRAM	P. 11
THE NEGRO LOOKS AT HIMSELF	P. 12
THE NEGRO LOOKS AT HIS WORLD	P. 13
A WHITE LOOK AT THE NEGRO	P. 15
MISCELLANEOUS	P. 16

published by
The Community Information Committee
Robert L. Pelz, Chairman

Co-Editors
Mrs. M. J. Kleinfeld Mrs. Louise Levinson
Mrs. Marilyn Gilbert, Contributing Editor

NEGRO PRESS DIGEST

Statement of Purpose

The Negro Press Digest is published for the purpose of providing its readers with news and views of Negro newspapers and news magazines circulated in New York City. The Digest is not intended to present a cross-section of the content of the publications it reviews but focuses upon articles dealing with such matters as civil rights, civil liberties and intergroup relations. Emphasis is given to articles of local interest and national consequence.

News that has been adequately treated, in the judgment of the editors, in the daily press or on the broadcasting media is not duplicated in the Digest unless the Negro press reports such news from a distinctly different point of view.

The New York Chapter of The American Jewish Committee hopes that this publication will help fill an important need in intergroup relations, which is: improved communications bringing fuller knowledge of the problems, aspirations and frustrations of the Negro community as expressed in their press. This periodical, therefore, is designed to foster greater understanding and thereby further the development of truly effective human relations efforts.

-- Robert L. Pelz, Chairman
Community Information Committee
New York Chapter
The American Jewish Committee

BLACK MUSLIMS

MUSLIMS SET SAT. RALLY UPTOWN

Amsterdam News (August 3)

After issuing invitations to prominent Negro leaders to a Muslim rally, Malcolm X stated "If capitalistic Kennedy and Communistic Krushchev can find something in common on which to form a united front... it is time for the so-called Negro leaders to submerge their trivial differences and seek a common solution to the problem posed by forming a United Black front".

CHURCH BUSY BEING BUSY WHILE MUSLIMS LURE 100,000

Chicago Daily Defender (August 29)

Eric Lincoln, Clark College administrator, told a Methodist Conference that the church has stood idly by while the Muslims have recruited 100,000 "ex-Christians". He warned that to abandon the Black Muslims would leave thousands of Christians converted to a doctrine of hate and black supremacy, and urged a positive program to meet the implications of the movement on its own ground.

CONGRESS

'TO SECURE THE RIGHTS OF ALL CITIZENS'

Chicago Daily Defender - Column: Today and You" by Gerald D. Bullock (July 30)

No sooner was the President's civil rights legislation proposal announced then the ire of the dear old Southland rorared forth from Eastland to Russell to Dirksen. Dirksen does not always act like a Dixiecrat, but he usually votes like one. Dirksen's home state has had for three quarters of a century one of the most comprehensive civil rights laws. It doesn't work very well, chiefly because of the kind of voter constituency which elects Dirksen to office. In the current crisis what will the civil rights leadership do? Will they refute the insultingly spurious arguments of the Dirksen's, Eastlands and Russells or will they compromise?

POLITICAL OVERTONES - CONGRESS DRAGS ITS HEELS - CONGRESS MUST ACT

All the above from the Chicago Daily Defender - Editorials (8/1, 8/14, 8/27)

The civil rights issue in Congress at this point is whether proposed legislation should be based on the 14th Amendment or its commerce clause, but Harvard's Dean Griswold said Congress can compromise with a combination of both provisions. Will Congress face up to its responsibility by finding a solution for the problems of racial tension? The initiative in the field of civil rights has passed to the courts and the executive because Congress has failed to take meaningful action. Can Congress recoup the initiative or will it rest with the courts, the executive, demonstrations and police brutality? This "standstill Congress" has been dragging its heels in increasingly extended sessions for two years. This year it may last into December.

DEMONSTRATIONS

WARN FOLLOWERS ABOUT WHITE MODERATE "FRIENDS"

Jet (August 8)

Commenting on the suggestion that continued demonstrations will cause civil rights advocates to lose the support of white moderates, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. repeated his warning against moderation.. said ".. the great stumbling block is not the KKK or White Citizens's Council, but the white moderates who are more devoted to order than to justice... moderates who feel they are our friends but who feel they can set a timetable for our freedom. If we lose them in the process of pressing for equal rights, then they are not our friends anyway." Rev. Gardner C. Taylor warned "They say we are going too fast.. well, we've been going slow for a hundred years."

'LAWLESS DEMONSTRATIONS'

Chicago Daily Defender - Column by Gerald Bullock (August 13)

Columnist William S. White is currently agonized by what he calls "frequently lawless Negro demonstrations". He calls the long-suffering colored citizen an "extremist" for peacefully seeking to obtain his rights. White conveniently disregards the fact that demonstrations have been largely racially mixed. Unfortunately he speaks for significant sections of the citizenry, blinded by prejudice, who believe the only acceptable Negro is one who suffers abuse in acquiescent servility... Negroes are adopting "wrong" attitudes toward the majority group and are getting out of "their places". There are still a lot of such places to get out of.

NO TAPERING OFF ON RIGHTS AFTER 'MARCH' VOW LEADERS

Chicago Daily Defender - by Lillian S. Calhoun (August 26)

Although Chicago civil rights leadership has been tied up with preparation for the March on Washington, all leaders vow a hard-hitting drive thereafter. One of them said: "Unless there are substantial changes in Chicago, I expect people will not be able to drive on the streets this fall. There'll be that many demonstrations."

CONTINUE THEM

Amsterdam News - Editorial (August 17)

The supreme answer to critics who bemoan the current wave of civil rights demonstrations came from Manhattan Borough President Edward R. Dudley when he said: "I will ask these critics to search their consciences and see if they will not agree that, without the demonstrations, the Negroes would not have made one-tenth of one percent of the progress they have made in the last five years." It should be added that the demonstrations will continue where needed until the Negro reaches his goal of complete equality.

OMNISCIENCE

New York Courier- Column: Horizon by P. L. Prattis (August 31)

Regardless of whether the March on Washington is a success or failure in terms of influencing civil rights legislation passage, the mood and feeling of American Negroes will not be changed.. nor will that of the thousands of white Americans who stand behind them.. until the rights of the Negro are recognized. Pundits may theorize and theorize but the millions who seek freedom will not be impressed.. they will march and they will demonstrate. It is pure error to say that Americans have settled their differences peacefully. The Civil War was only one example of the violence employed to settle differences.

EDUCATION

WEAK EDUCATION BARS DIXIE NEGROES FROM ARMY - Jet (July 25)

IT IS A FACT: NEGRO SCHOOLS ARE INFERIOR - Chicago Defender (8/26)

Many Deep South Negroes may not be getting enough education to qualify for military service, according to an Army "draft map" dated 1962.. showing acceptance rates for draftees ranged from a low 30.4% in South Carolina to a high of 68.9% in North Dakota. The Chicago Urban League's research department charges that for every dollar spent on all-white schools in Chicago, only 86.6 cents is spent on integrated schools and 81.2 cents on all-Negro schools. Teachers in Negro schools are paid almost 20% less than those in white schools. Negro schools are over-crowded and have less non-classroom facilities (lunchrooms, gym).

ANOTHER PYRRHIC VICTORY

New York Courier - Editorial (July 27)

The so-called victory in the Board of Education decision to allow a Negro child to transfer to a high school with fewer Negroes enrolled, for the sake of less emotional stress, may set a bad precedent. Now, white parents can demand transfer of their children out of schools where there is a large Negro enrollment, because of the "emotional stress"... When Pyrrus defeated the Roman legions and lost most of his army in doing so, he lamented, "One more such victory over the Romans and we are utterly undone."

SEGREGATION BREEDS ARROGANCE: BERRY

Chicago Daily Defender (August 5)

Chicago's segregated school system has been blamed for the bitter racial situation where thousands of whites, many of them teenagers, have violently protested the presence of 3 Negro families in Englewood (Ill.). Edwin C. Berry, Urban League director here, says it is due to the arrogance which segregation instills in white children. The racial outbreaks were the city's worst since 1950. Priests and ministers were hooted as they tried to calm the crowds, but have since made some headway.

TIME TO ACT

Amsterdam News - Editorial (August 31)

The City Commission on Human Rights has decided to attempt solving the problem of the City's racial imbalance in its schools. Until now, this controversy was treated like a game by people who had little authority to act. Superintendent of Schools, Calvin Gross, despite his obvious sincerity, did nothing but listen to complaints... in the possible hopes that talking about the problem would make it disappear. It is not for the parents to tell the Superintendent how to correct the ills. If he cannot do the job he is well paid to do, he should say so and another will be found to do what has been ORDERED, not asked for.

CANADIAN LANDLORDS PREFER COLORED STUDENTS

McMaster University (Hamilton, Ontario) officials bemoan the fact that they haven't enough colored students to meet the demand of landlords who prefer them to white students. The landlords claim a colored student in their homes is an education as well as valuable character-building for their children.

EMPLOYMENT AND UNIONS

TODAY AND YOU

Chicago Daily Defender - Column by Ma rjorie Lord Dunnegan (7/29)

Despite a membership of 50,000 in A. Philip Randolph's Negro American Labor Council formed in 1960, little has been accomplished. Big Labor continues to prate loudly of dedication to Democracy, but with the exception of the United Automobile Workers, they have been unable to find Negroes qualified to sit on their executive boards. The NALC, meanwhile, is losing favor with its disgruntled membership. Too many local and international union staff employees hold top NALC jobs, are easy targets for pressures from big union bosses. Officers drawn from the mass of membership would not be so vulnerable.

NO MORE IMMIGRANTS!

New York Courier - Editorial (August 3)

It is hoped that Negroes are not so interested in the civil rights controversy that they will fail to oppose President Kennedy's immigration proposal. With the shift of the bulk of immigration from western to eastern Europe, it will bring in more skilled labor, which will compete with the Negro. Very few skilled workers emigrate from non-white countries. The well-being of the U.S. Negro since World War I has been due to the restriction of immigration. With the additional problem of automation the Negro should fight the Administration in this effort, and demand less, rather than more, immigration.

'MURDEROUS COMPETITION'

New York Courier - Editorial (August 3)

A current paradox is the great agitation for more and better jobs for Negroes while there are an inadequate number of qualified Negroes to fill them. There remains a murderous competition, according to a personnel officer of Union Carbide, in finding competent Negro stenographers and secretaries. This would not exist if Negro leadership, now taking to the streets, had been applying its talents to increasing the supply of skilled workers.

OUTRAGE NOT TO BE TOLERATED

Chicago Daily Defender - By Gerald Bullock (August 6)

New York's Cardinal Spellman says "Racial bias is an outrage that cannot be tolerated." This may be the most important statement of the year. New York has been considered by Negroes to be the fountainhead of the blanket of racial discrimination that smothers the colored worker. Much of the labor hierarchy is either Catholic or Jewish. Jewish leadership has recently tried to do something about bias in their organizations. The same is hardly true of Catholic leadership and hence the importance of Cardinal Spellman's statement.

GERALD BULLOCK

Chicago Daily Defender - Column by Gerald Bullock (August 8)

In Los Angeles City, Councilwoman Rosalind Wyman has succeeded in having the Council enact legislation that called for exemption of arrested demonstrators from the usual prohibition in qualifying for civil service jobs. As a result there is civil service job safety in Los Angeles for the patriots, North and South, who have fought with such persistent dignity for the rights of all Americans. Perhaps it is regrettable that one of the Negro councilmen did not formulate the resolution; Mrs. Wyman is white.

PEACE CORPS AT HOME

New York Courier - Editorial (August 24)

With the unemployment of Negroes being stressed, it is heartening that the U.S. Senate has approved the domestic peace corps, known as the National Service Corps. It will scarcely make a dent in the current unemployment... simply an encouraging gesture and helpful to the Democrats in 1964.

MORE NEGRO AIRLINE HOSTESSES

New York Courier - Editorial (August 24)

There is a heavy turnover annualy of airline stewardesses generally, due largely to the fact that many of these expensively trained girls marry too soon. Things being what they are racially, Negro hostesses are a good investment from the airlines' viewpoint because they would be less likely to quit for marriage, and yet be just as efficient and personable. This large preserve of white supremacy is resented by the increasing group of Negro air travelers and the growing number of qualified girls.

"AND SPEAKING OF JOBS!" - Amsterdam News, Editorial (August 24)

In spite of all the speeches and high sounding platitudes made by Vice-President Lyndon Johnson and his number one Negro, Hobart Taylor, we submit that after all the years of their operation we know of no instance where these gentlemen have taken a government contract away from a racially biased firm. Getting more jobs for Negroes is closely entwined with the elimination of discrimination in employment and the easiest way to further this cause is to cancel government contracts with firms who refuse to hire Negroes under a fair employment system.

FOREIGN OPINION

FOLLOW INDIA'S EXAMPLE TO END RACE BIAS, NEWSMAN TELLS U.S.

Chicago Daily Defender (August 5)

P. R. John, a Malayan correspondent, in Chicago under a State Department program, said that the burden of the racial problem is upon the government and told how India's caste system was completely broken down by a series of laws whereby, for example, 50% of the jobs in government are reserved for Untouchables, and they can compete for the other 50%. In a recent case where a high caste schoolmaster segregated low caste children, he was sentenced to 6 months in prison. "This is how India solved the same type of segregation problem which exists in the U.S. today", he said.

WILKINS SETS CHINA STRAIGHT ON NEGROES

Amsterdam News (August 31)

In reply to a Chinese Communist message of felicitations voicing "Support to American Negro people in their struggle", Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP, dispatched a cablegram telling the Chinese that Negro Americans look forward to the day when they can felicitate Chinese citizens gathered in a huge protest demonstration in Peking. Wilkins pointed out that the March was welcomed by Kennedy and that the demonstration was in support of the civil rights legislation proposed by the President.. that racial practices in parts of our country are contrary to the national government policy of non-discrimination. Full texts of both cablegrams are being sent to all members of Congress.

THE NEGRO MARKET

New York Courier - Column by Claude H. Hall (August 31)

Nowhere in the whole of American Big Business can one find a single individual who would openly endorse a program of apartheid.. yet the heavy investors in South Africa form a "Who's Who" of American business like General Motors, Chase Manhattan, Firestone, Kaiser Aluminum. It seems the talk about democracy is just so much poppycock and Americans would invest in Hades if such an investment would yield a return. All this proves that the dollar is more highly regarded than any ideals we piously advocate regarding the dignity and freedom of mankind.

INTERMARRIAGE

THE CIVIL RIGHT THEY ALL DUCK

New York Courier - Editorial (August 17)

Almost everybody ducks the discussion of intermarriage between people of race, color and national origin because of its political implications. Even President Kennedy, when asked if he intended to promote legislation abrogating state laws barring intermarriage, was tongue-tied and never did answer the question. There are 27 states which bar marriage between whites, Orientals and Negroes. Freedom to marry is no less important than freedom to travel, reside, learn and work. Black and white recognize that the issue is so explosive that it can blast all the other desired rights to smithereens. It would at least show sophistication and honesty to discuss it!

I WONDER IF CHARLAYNE HUNTER'S DADDY WANTED HIS DAUGHTER TO MARRY ONE

Chicago Daily Defender - Column: A Stone's Throw by Chuck Stone, Editor-in-Chief (September 4)

For years whenever a liberal white person dared to defend Negro rights he would be slapped in the face with the nasty question: "Would you want your daughter to marry one?" Few white people had the courage to say Yes. This put the whole problem of racial equality in the bedroom. No matter how we lighten our skins or produce brilliant and outstanding men, we are not considered worthy to marry even the lowliest white girl, But, man, have they married ours! If you're going to marry my daughter, give me the right to marry your'n. Still, I wonder - do you really think Charlayne's father wanted HIS daughter to marry one?

POLITICAL FIGURES

SOUTHERN IMAGE

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (August 7)

The testimony of Governors Wallace and Barnett at the Senate hearings dismayed a lot of people who love the South. When Southerners and Northerners mingle together at conferences, the typical Southerner leaves upon his Northern colleagues impressions that are hard to reconcile with the narrow, provincial, mean and rancorous image created by the two governors. These spokesmen represent a vanishing breed, and there lies the hope for a new South in step with the national goals.

POLITICAL SUICIDE

Chicago Daily Defender (August 13)

Governor Rockefeller plunged into the 1964 Presidential elections, charging that certain GOP groups have a policy of "writing off" Negro and other minority votes. Sen. Goldwater countered "I am not for giving up anybody's vote". Goldwater's memory must be very short. He has often called the Negro vote "inconsequential". His supporters are all of the extreme right and want to make the GOP a "white man's party". Let them try. We will walk with them in the funeral procession.

'DIXIECRAT PHILOSOPHY ROOTED IN APARTHEID'

Chicago Daily Defender - Column by Gerald Bullock (August 15)

Senator Goldwater bitterly resents the segregationist label even while opposing the Civil Rights bill intended to outlaw segregation. He wants to be known as a liberal, fighting for "individual liberty" i.e. 'right of the individual to discriminate as he pleases'. This kind of liberalism would forever stifle true civil liberties and prevent the realization of civil rights for minorities. It would infect this nation with racist dogma. It is inconceivable that the American people will not by a vast majority repudiate Goldwater's definition of a liberal.

POMPOUS BARRY

Amsterdam News - Column: White-On-White by Gertrude Wilson (8/17)

Characterless, cloying, Senator Barry Goldwater looms on the horizon as possible Republican presidential timbre like a Gilbert and Sullivan pompous ass who doesn't understand what American Negroes are talking about... Referring to the March on Washington, Goldwater threatened that a disturbance could adversely affect civil rights legislation. He is virtually admitting that Congress doesn't think, it simply reacts to pressures. Negroes are no longer sitting on the sidelines waiting for confirmation of what, under the Constitution and Bill of Rights, is inherent in citizenship, and therefore theirs anyway. That spirit of Congressional rebellion is as nothing to what the country will see if this minimum bill is not passed.

REAL ESTATE AND HOUSING

OPEN OCCUPANCY - PHANTOM LEGALISM

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorials (August 1, 13.)

Proponents of Open Occupancy have given unanswerable testimony against segregated housing to the City Council. We warn all who are responsible that there will be no racial peace in Chicago until Open Occupancy becomes a law. The city has ample authority to enact legislation; there is no law against open occupancy. But the racists are busy invoking phantom legalisms in order to perpetuate indefinitely their lily-white traditions.

LANDLORD FOUND GUILTY OF TRYING TO ESTABLISH RACIAL QUOTA SYSTEM

New York Courier (August 3)

In a decision of the State Commission for Human Rights, a Syracuse landlord was found guilty of discriminatory practice in refusing to rent an apartment, in an eight-unit building, to a Negro army medical officer. His refusal was based on the fact that he had one Negro tenant, and that white tenants would move out if another Negro were to move in thereby making way for an all-Negro occupancy and thus creating a segregated building. The commissioners opinion also asserted that the quota system violates the American ethical principle of freedom of choice and encourages tokenism toward erecting a balanced community.

ADS FOR NEGROES HIT BY NAACP LEADER HERE

Chicago Daily Defender (August 6)

Carl Fuqua, executive secretary of Chicago's NAACP said several ads for new housing sub-divisions picture Negro families "with the obvious purpose of indicating that these are homes for Negroes." Ads "for colored only" were abandoned here 10 years ago, but "for colored only" is now being achieved with pictures.

REAL ESTATE BROKERS HEAR OF NEGRO PLIGHT

Chicago Daily Defender (August 27)

Earl Schwulst, chairman of the Board of Directors of the Bowery Savings Bank, New York, addressing the National Association of Real Estate Brokers, said that grievances must be kept constantly before the conscience of white Americans who have political and economic power. "The N egro...has learned that pressure for his rights is beginning to pay off," he said. He will not let his frustration lead him into acts which will strengthen the hands of those who oppress him, he added.

WHERE TO?

Amsterdam News (August 31) Editorial

Out in Malverne, Long Island, "For Sale" signs went up all over the lily-white community as white owners announced they would sell their homes in protest of an order by the State Commissioner of Education calling for racial equality in Malverne schools. Where are they going? They had better start learning what many of their cousins in the South already have learned.. that a person can run from the laws of this land.. but he can't hide!

SPORTS AND ENTERTAINMENT

NAACP CRACKS DOOR IN HOLLYWOOD HIRING - Amsterdam News (August 3)

WHAT'S HAPPENING WITH ENA? - Amsterdam News, Column: In The Wings by Dave Hepburn (August 3)

An "area of agreeableness" has been reached in preliminary conferences between the NAACP and the Association of Motion Picture Producers on demands for the more general inclusion of Negroes in movie and TV production.. with a "reasonable time" period for substantive gains" before any boycotting or demonstrations by Negroes. With Negro performers, the networks are always afraid to take a chance no matter how much talent the performers have while the Johnny Carsons or Keefe Brasseles come out of nowhere and get a try for stardom. Seems that the Negro performer has to be letter-perfect before he gets a chance.. but the white performers keep rolling merrily along.

ACTORS EQUITY ACTIVITIES

New York Courier - Editorial (August 10)

Three years ago, when Actors Equity decreed that none of its members would perform before racially segregated audiences, it was predicted that the legitimate theatre would die in the South. Since then, there have been increasing numbers of performances in such states as Alabama, South Carolina and Mississippi, without uproar, demonstrations, or violence, with integrated audiences. This remarkable revolution did not win a headline!

FUTURE OF NEGRO IN SPORTS WORLD APPEARS TO BE BRIGHTER THAN EVER

New York Courier - Column: Sports Beat by Wendell Smith (August 17)

In the days of slavery, sports was one area in which the Negro was given an opportunity to exhibit his skills. The first American boxing champion was an ex-slave, in 1875 a Negro jockey won the Kentucky Derby. Since the Emancipation Proclamation, and particularly since World War II, Negro athletes have played a major role in the fight for equality and civil rights. The future is even brighter, with the possibility of Negroes attaining positions such as baseball club manager, football team coach, basketball coach and also within the front offices of the sports world. Fans have been resentful when outstanding athletes are victimized by bigotry and discrimination. This has helped force down the color line in southern training camps.

THIRD PARTY

SERIES OF ARTICLES BY EARL CONRAD, INVESTIGATING THE FEASIBILITY OF A CIVIL RIGHTS PARTY. Chicago Daily Defender (August 5,7,8,12)

THE TIMES PARALLEL THOSE OF EARLY REPUBLICAN DAYS: If non-voting Negroes knew they had a party of their own, a new vote would come out, forming a new force which could team up with one or the other party or even form a third major party. There is no room for the notion that third parties can't succeed. In our camp there are great forces, a national reservoir of protest and courage, involving not only black millions, but four times as many whites. How can we harness all this good feeling? Is there any reason why parties in America have to be main-masted by whites? If we want to be at a policy-making level we must organize this independent force. We can always withdraw our candidates and vote with the major parties.

A CIVIL RIGHTS PARTY CAN BREAK THE PARTY COALITION: The factor which withholds liberation from the Negro is the two-party coalition in Congress. One way to smash the filibuster is a national Civil Rights Party. There is no reason why filibuster itself cannot be brought into disrepute right now. The first piece of business of a Civil Rights Party would be to end filibuster. Filibuster is a trick which says: "This is a Jim Crow Congress. Let's keep it that way." The present unorganized mass of protestors, standing together on a few fundamental principles, can bring about the completion of the Negro revolution by ending the filibuster and thus dissolving the Republican-Democrat coalition which it holds together.

THE QUESTION OF 'READY': Negroes have become tremendously political people. To be forced to equate their social condition with their color was to develop automatically a unique political awareness. We have thousands of activities ready and waiting for the right organization through which to function. There is a real opportunity for great realization during the next decade. Once more for the first time in a century, the black man is Number One on the American agenda. The only thing I can see to contain all these talents and energies is an actual political party. The core of it would be the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, the seven national organizations and their pooled memberships.

THROUGH REAL UNITY A CHALLENGING CIVIL RIGHTS PARTY COULD BE BORN: The broad civil rights movement needs room in which to breathe, which does not seem to be there. The situation requires a coast-to-coast unified apparatus, resembling the present major parties. A political party containing millions of black and white actives, with the black phalanx central to its existence, would at once elevate all social-human values. It would have strength and people respect power. A new national Civil Rights Party must convert civil rights from a phrase into a condition of living. It could decide the next election, compel a realignment of the two old parties, end the white power structure and make its own policy for the black millions. Maybe we have both major parties on the run, and maybe not, but what's wrong with a third name on the ballot? This is the age of Civil Rights - if we win them.

OUR ENEMY IS AT WORK

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (August 15)

It is vital that the Civil Rights Movement react swiftly to menacing developments on the political scene. A Business-Industry Political Action Committee is raising millions to finance campaigns for conservative candidates for Congress. This is an open collection of men of wealth uniting to defeat our own choice of legislators. None of them has ever been heard of as a friend of civil rights. As the big money moves in to stop our forward march, we must mobilize the one thing we have - people, votes, masses and their political power. There is no time to lose. We hope our readers will make known to us their views about the National Civil Rights Party proposals that have been in our columns.

NEW YORK GROUP WOULD FORM ALL-NEGRO PARTY - N Y Courier (August 31)

FREEDOM PARTY FORMED TO PUSH RIGHTS FIGHT - N Y Courier (August 31)

FORM NEW PARTY - Amsterdam News (August 31)

URGE FORMATION OF ALL-NEGRO U.S. POLITICAL PARTY - Jet (September 5)

An all-Negro FREEDOM NOW PARTY has already begun its formation "to concentrate the voting power of black Americans that can deliver knock-out punches to enemies of equality". Acting chairman attorney Conrad J. Lynn said all-black political action is not racism.. it is self-reliance. He reminded that only once in the history of the United States, during Reconstruction, has Congress passed, and the Government enforced meaningful equal rights laws.. when 25 Negro Congressmen and five Negro Senators sat in Washington.

WHITES, NEGROES PUSH PETITION DRIVE FOR SUFFOLK THIRD PARTY

New York Courier (August 31)

The insurgent third party movement in Suffolk County, THE JUSTICE PARTY, needs only 500 more signatures to meet requirements for new party registration. The Committee is composed of 500 white and Negro members who anticipate broad support for the election of Calvin C. Cobb to District Court Judgeship in Babylon Town. Cobb being a Negro will not be an issue, as the aim for the Justice Party will be a politically-free court where all Americans can depend on equal justice.

TRAINING PROGRAM

RADICALISM IN PHILADELPHIA

New York Courier - Editorial (August 10)

Radicalism means going to the root of any problem. That is exactly what is being done by a group of Negro clergymen and lay leaders in Philadelphia. They have launched an Opportunities Industrialization Program to train and retrain Negroes. Another solution would be to supply young Negroes with scholarships for training in trade and technical schools throughout the country. It is high time to use more fundamental intelligence and less immature indignation.

TODAY AND YOU

Chicago Daily Defender - Column by Marjorie L. Dunnegan (August 12)

There is need for a broader and more incisive understanding of the term "vocational" in education. Unless enabling legislation for training programs spells out what trades are to be taught and provides for regular inspection to insure racial integration, the programs will fail scandalously. The black man in America will never develop a thriving middle class unless he has access to training facilities and employment opportunities giving him proportional representation in the skilled crafts and trades. A national colored community with a slowly growing professional class and a rapidly burgeoning unskilled labor class, largely on relief, and nothing in between cannot long survive without an explosion.

RETRAINING FUNDS

Chicago Daily Defender - Column by Gerald Bullock (August 20)

Walter Reuther has just summed up the experience of "graduates" of a re-training program in Oklahoma City. Only a third of those who completed the program showed promise of benefitting from it; few were able to get jobs with their new skills. Was it really a comprehensive program? Or was it hastily thrown together? Millions of dollars in Federal money and state funds can be wasted if inexperienced administrators get bad advice. A sound program of essential studies is required. In Illinois the General Assembly adjourned without voting matching funds for the Manpower and Redevelopment program. A majority of those who would benefit are Negroes. Citizens should demand to know how this failure happened because the Federal funds for this project will probably be returned to Washington.

THE NEGRO LOOKS AT HIMSELF

THE AMERICAN NEGRO IMAGE

New York Courier - Editorial (July 27)

The American Negro image in America is far more affected by what white Americans think than by how it is seen abroad. Spokesmen these days present an unflattering picture of slum-locked, ignorant, unskilled Negroes and then wonder why whites resist integration. This is decidely not the image to present if Negroes are going to be "sold" to the other 90% of Americans.

POLITICAL POT

Amsterdam News - Column: Uptown Lowdown by James Booker (August 3)

One leader has described the new Negro militancy which is beginning to catch on throughout the City as the "big push" in trying to break through the maze of subtle prejudices and discriminations Negroes run into in just about everything they do. We hope Negroes will learn to work together, buy from and support Negro businesses, register and vote, help to improve your own neighborhood.. all a part of the movement..... President Kennedy should check on the law office situation of a top lawyer he named to a special committee to help push civil rights. The lawyer has a staff of some 200 and not one Negro on it.

LETTER OF THE WEEK: A MOUTHFUL - Amsterdam News (August 24)

THE INSIDERS - Amsterdam News, Column: Another Angle by James L. Hicks (August 24)

In a long letter to the Amsterdam News, Calvin Graham of New York City, a Negro actively engaged in the struggle for freedom, set forth 40 "freedoms" permitted the Negro in Harlem.. including the right to "play numbers", run card or crap games, lie drugged or drunken, operate as pimps or prostitutes, peddle stolen goods, molest passing women, live overcrowded, drive expensive cars although showing no means of support, operate filthy eating places or markets, squander money while collecting from city agencies.. and many other "freedoms" practiced in broad daylight on the streets without molestation from the police who blatantly neglect their duty. Mr. Graham criticized Negro leaders who are on the INSIDE for having failed the "little" Negroes who helped get them in..... In the same day's publication, Hicks devoted his column to the castigation of Negro leaders like Robert Weaver, John King (deputy superintendant of schools), Frank Turner (head of Board of Education zoning plan), Madison Jones and others who are the "Big Guys" the little people helped to get where they are. Mr. Hicks feels it is high time they started to produce results.

VIEWS AND REVIEWS

New York Courier - Column by George S. Schuyler (August 31)

One severe indictment of our civil rights misleaders is the anti-Negro propaganda that Negro children cannot learn well in school unless in classes with white children. The inference is that white children are superior. The propaganda runs that because Negroes live in certain areas and their children go naturally to the schools in these areas, this makes those schools racially segregated, hence inferior to the city's other schools and injurious to the Negro children because they are denied white association. What is being ignored is the psychological effect of denigrating the neighborhoods in which Negroes live and the schools they attend, letting children escape for a few hours and then sending them back to their ghetto to vegitate in inferiority. An intelligent leadership would campaign to improve their districts,... insist on law and order where their people live.

THE NEGRO LOOKS AT HIS WORLD

CONFETTI: COLUMN - Chicago Daily Defender (August 7,8,14,19,20)

While Mrs. Calhoun was on vacation guest columnists contributed their views.. excerpts of which follow.

SHERWOOD ROSS: Anyone who has traveled across America can bear witness to the decline of our major cities, withering on the vine despite highly publicized urban renewal schemes. The cancer gnawing at the vitals of our big towns is racism. Where the rich remain, urban renewal clears slums and rehouses them at fancy prices while driving out the former inhabitants.. mostly Negro. Where the rich retreat to suburbia, the poor remain behind in more desperate blighted communities than before. Why won't the middle-income families stay on? Negro mothers are terrified to raise their children in a ghetto and white mothers are frightened when the expanding ghetto approaches them in the Negro's relentless demand for decent housing. Middle-class Negroes are the obvious people to change the ingrained prejudice of whites .. but will be unable to do so unless open occupancy ordinance is passed by the City Council.

TIMUEL BLACK: (Chicago Chairman of the March on Washington) It is indeed strange that in a "democratic" society Negroes need such organizations as the NAACP, Urban League, SNCC, CORE, NALC and SCLC to fight for their rights. We should be getting on with the bigger struggle for world peace and survival. And yet I have been too busy fighting for immediate goals... the American Negro in particular. We hope that the White American soon will mature and be able to sing with all of us "Black and White together; We shall overcome someday....."

EARL B. DICKERSON: (President, Supreme Life Insurance Company) Dr. Robert Havighurst stated in a recent article that 9 years after the Supreme Court school decision only 15% of the country's Negro children attend integrated schools, due to the practice of de facto segregation, in the North, and de jure in the South. The South is learning to use de facto segregation based on housing patterns, like the North; while the North is using separate but equal schools as in the South. The Chicago Board of Education should remember the words of Justice Frankfurter: Local customs, however hardened by time, are not decreed in heaven."

HOMER SMITH: (Defender Correspondent) Some foreigners who have visited the United States have remarked on what a strange country it is. Many strange things do happen here.. for instance.. a recent opinion poll found that President Kennedy was losing some of his popularity because of his energetic insistence upon equal civil rights for all Americans. One would think that a President who strives for equable rights ought to gain and not lose stature and popularity. Foreigners who come as migrants find they can enjoy (even before becoming citizens) privileges and freedoms denied to old-line American citizens. In Chicago, when a Negro family moved into a "white" building, hundreds of whites demonstrated in riotous protest. Many of the demonstrators were not even born in this country. Negroes in the South stage protests and southern racists yell that Communists inspired it all.. in other words, Communists are the friends and supporters of genuine democracy. Strange, indeed EARL DICKERSON: The recent violent anti-Negro demonstrations against two families who moved into an all-white Chicago area significantly occurred when civil rights were being debated in Congress. Thus, in this critical period of change, we find many white people who resent this change and will resort to violence to prevent it. Our times demand better communications between people of different races, creeds and cultural backgrounds. The new Negro has better leadership and believes he is on the brink of a better way of life. Race relations is a political problem as well as a social and moral one and that's what the hullabaloo in Congress against civil rights is all about.

A WHITE LOOK AT THE NEGRO

FRANK SERIES ON RACIAL PROBLEMS by Lillian S. Calhoun, Chicago Daily Defender (August 19, 21, 26, 27)

U.S. STEEL EXEC'S FORMULA: "A CRUSDADE OF NEGOTIATION" (8/19)

U.S. Steel's top man in Chicago, vice-president Edward C. Logelin, when asked about the responsibility of Chicago executives for ending race discrimination stated: "We need a crusade of negotiation.. businessmen must see that more jobs are available for everyone.. work against discrimination by creating new opportunities. U.S. Steel, says Logelin, hires on ability, has little tension.. some 20% are Negro.. some top-ranking. They have an integrated apprenticeship program and a summer training program for college students. He feels a need for a forum where both races may discuss problems to eliminate misconceptions.

NATIONAL TEA PRESIDENT SAYS FIRM PRACTICES INTEGRATION (8/21)

A Chicago boy who made good, Norman A. Stepelton, president of the National Tea Company, a chain of 1000 stores, says they employ the highest proportion of Negroes in the Chicago area. All administrative men start up the scale and Negroes can work up too. "The Negro public making purchases at food stores naturally wants a return in employment.. to have equal job opportunity in every store and every office of National Tea". An open occupancy law, says he, should be a must. He thinks that many Southerners do not hate Negroes but that much of it is custom and those customs are changing. "Racial integration should begin in school.. the things you learn as a youngster are the things that stay with you", says Stepelton. He thinks the Negro population a great force and a growing market.

AGGRESSIVE BURTON-DIXIE CHIEF JUDGES MEN BY DEED - NOT COLOR (8/26)

John G. Sevcik, president of Burton-Dixie Corporation, sleep goods, considers himself as a typical American who works with everyone and doesn't care of what race or religion a man is. His company has about 15% Negro employees. Although there are no Negroes on the administrative staff and no Negro secretaries, there is a Negro foreman and three Negro superintendents. "I'm not making it a cause," says he, "but if Negroes have ability, they'll get the opportunity". "If you are prejudicial in your relationships,it cripples you".. If our present laws do not bring about an atmosphere conducive to equal rights, we must pass laws that spell out the rights of all people.. however, best of all is to work with people.. to judge people by the standards they set themselves." He thinks much of job bias comes because white business people are not aware of qualified Negroes. Sevcik has a paternalistic attitude toward Negro workers.. helps them with their problems.

MERE WORDS WON'T SOLVE RACIAL DILEMMA, REAL ESTATE EXPERT SAYS (8/27)

James C. Downs Jr., chairman of Real Estate Research Corp. is extremely influential in important real estate circles in Chicago and nationally. His major contribution is "social zoning", a euphemism for a more unpopular term, "quota". He says we must choose a scheme whereby a man can be told that if a Negro moves in, the block won't go Negro, since when a majority is threatened in a numerical way, the majority will go away. He does not think open occupancy legislation is the final answer, but feels that the entrance of five to ten Negro families in all white apartment buildings would not disturb white tenants if the Negro families were qualified. Asked why he didn't recommend this to properties his firm manages, he said that "splintered ownership can't be brought together."

MISCELLANEOUS

MR. FARMER'S FANTASY

New York Courier - Editorial (July 27)

James Farmer, of CORE, wants to bring to the surface the "undercurrent of racism" in the North so that it can be dealt with. Most American Negroes will be satisfied to let the sleeping dogs of racism lie and not disturb them into snarling activity. Contending with the prejudices openly shown is a difficult and exhausting enough job.

CONFETTI

Chicago Daily Defender - Column by Lillian S. Calhoun (July 30, 31, August 1, 27)

A Maryland study of 14,000 school drop-outs found half scored average or above, about 80% were not disciplinary problems. Are the schools really challenging youngsters? If Negro Johnnies are undereducated or miseducated, it may just be the schools who are at fault..... According to an article by Louis Lomax, the Urban League says it could place 50,000 Negro workers tomorrow if only it could find them. Hardly believable. There are about 25 to 50 jobs open in Chicago which the League is helping to fill. In our liberal, liberated Chicago the job discrimination wall is a mile high.... There are no Negroes above the rank of colonel in the U.S. Army and only six colonels. One West Point graduate with war experience, writing his PH D doctorate, etc., is still a colonel. But we're not qualified.... Victor Riesel wrote there are thousands of jobs in construction throughout the world via the Peace Corps. Seems a shame if the unemployed are here and the jobs abroad that there's no way to bring them together..... There's a move afoot to stop Chicago Housing Authority's "neighborhood policy". What with the schools and CHA using this term to cover up segregation, "neighborhood" is getting to be a dirty word.

SAYS MILLIONS OF OTHERS BENEFIT FROM CURRENT REVOLT OF NEGRO

Chicago Daily Defender (July 31)

The Negro revolution will benefit tens of millions of Americans who suffer from racial, ethnic or religious bias, A. J. Prejean an Urban League official said. Some other minorities have already been moved by the example of Negro gains to demand their full rights. In one Texas city Mexican-Americans can now use motels which until recently barred them as well as Negroes. Prejean said that while minority groups will benefit most, the entire nation will be helped if it can close ranks and unite in the face of a common enemy overseas.

A WOMAN'S WORLD

Amsterdam News - Column: Another Angle by James L. Hicks (August 3)
(Reprint of an article published May 5, 1956.)

The hand that rocks the cradle in the Negro world is doing a darn good job. The central figures in the most important civil rights decisions handed down by the courts of the United States in the last decades have been women! Mary Talbert organized Negro clubwomen all over the nation and started the ball rolling against lynching way back in 1921. March Church Terrell started the suit which eventually opened up all public places in the Nation's Capitol. Who went to court and filed the case that resulted in the opening up of graduate schools to Negroes in the South? Ada Sipuel Jones, the University of Oklahoma, 1948. Ada entered the law school on orders of the Supreme Court.. a decision so clear that many other southern graduate schools opened their doors without a fight... Interstate travel segregation was struck down by plaintiff Irene Morgan when she was told to sit in the rear of a bus. As for Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.. He is leading a movement started by a little seamstress named Rosa Parks.

A SHIFT IN STRATEGY

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (August 7)

The Birmingham City Council's action in repealing segregation ordinances was, paradoxically, a piece of segregationist strategy. The city governing body set aside six laws which specifically require racial segregation and promptly passed a new ordinance which, while making no specific reference to race, will enable police to deal more firmly with demonstrations. Such laws as this new disorderly conduct ordinance are much more difficult to attack in Federal courts because they do not contain specific racial restrictions. For example, a group of white and Negro students lunching in the private dining room of a Negro resaurant in Montgomery after repeal of segregation ordinances there were arrested on charges of "conduct calculated to provoke a breach of the peace." A less intractable attitude in Birmingham is manifested by the appointment of a 211-member bi-racial committee to study community problems.

POINTS OF SIMILARITY - Chicago Defender, Editorial (August 12)

The dismantling of European empires in Asia and Africa since World War II has been accomplished by offering leadership to the most radical (and yet responsible) men, thus guaranteeing the long-term good will of the people - or by negotiating with leaders less radical, more willing to compromise, under conditions which are liable to blow up in the face of the colonial power. The racial crisis in the U.S. has some points of similarity with this situation. Thus it is easier to understand why there has been no real racial trouble in Salisbury, Md., yet repeated demonstrations in nearby Cambridge. In Salisbury whites had enough foresight to include the more radical Negroes in negotiations to ease racial tensions.

TOP SCIENTISTS PROVE NO DIFFERENCE IN RACE, INTELLIGENCE

Amsterdam News (August 17)

Four leading social scientists from Princeton and University of California, after a thorough analysis, challenge recent efforts by advocates of segregation to find scientific support for branding Negroes a race intellectually inferior to whites. They refute claims of "innate mental differences" and declare there is no significant relationship between race and intelligence. Behavior and achievement among Negroes vary with the community in which they live and are attributable primarily to the ways in which whites treat Negroes and the ways in which they react to this treatment...

WHAT'S BEHIND CIVIL RIGHTS CRISIS? - PRATTIS DEVLOPS "DANGEROUS BLOOD" THEME! - New York Courier, Article by P. L. Prattis (8/17)

Govs. Barnett of Mississippi, Thurmond of South Carolina and Wallace of Alabama have contended that subversive forces are responsible for the present demand for a showdown on civil rights. They suggest that the Communists are the forces.. they, whose European ancestors brought the lynching and burning, cruelty, brutality and murder, who were to become the masters of African slaves.

THE CASE FOR COMPENSATORY POSITIVE DISCRIMINATION

Chicago Daily Defender - by Gerald Bullock (August 28)

If the American Negro community is ever to overcome the negative effects of centuries of oppression, it will have to be the beneficiary of a special rescue program. In the hovels, tenements, garbaged alleys and hallways of his enforced cultural isolation, the Negro grew up, generations of him, to witness the slow death of the American Dream. He could look back on nothing; he could look ahead to even less. He is the Man Farthest Down. It will take a longer rope to reach him, a stouter strand to pull him up. That is why I am for compensatory, positive racial discrimination.

BIRDS OF A FEATHER

Amsterdam News - Editorial (August 31)

Recently, ten pickets from the National State Rights Party threw a picket line in front of the national office of the Committee on Racial Equality... Marching behind a Confederate flag they carried signs which, among other things, said: "Black and White is Red" and "Race Mixing Is A Communist Conspiracy"... When they were joined by two members of the American Nazi Party, the States Rights director screamed that his pickets were "embarrassed" by the Nazi support. Frankly, we think the Nazis have at last found good company!

'FREEDOM-BUYS' GROUP PUSHING PROGRAM OF SELECTIVE BUYING

New York Courier (August 31)

A program of selective buying is being promoted on a Global-Wise plan to awaken Negroes to their responsibilities in supporting those companies which offer equal opportunities to Negroes. Specific lists will be issued by FREEDOM-BUYS, GLOBAL-WISE and authentic information is welcomed. GPO Box 672, New York 1, N. Y.

RESOLUTION ADOPTED AT THE 45TH ANNUAL NATIONAL CONVENTION OF THE AMERICAN LEGION, MIAMI BEACH, FLA., SEPTEMBER 10–12, 1963

Whereas the Government of the United States of America, and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland have seen fit to negotiate with the Soviet Union a limited test ban treaty; and

Whereas the treaty is now before the Senate of the United States for determination as to whether or not that body will advise and consent to ratification of the treaty on the part of the United States; and

Whereas the American Legion has in the past supported all actions by our Government which offer the hope of an honorable peace and which at the same time are consistent with strong national security; and

Whereas past experience has evidenced that the Soviet Union enters into only those agreements which are for its own best interests; and

Whereas the American Legion finds reason for concern as to their motives since this could be a method of improving the position of the Communists economically, politically, and militarily, as was demonstrated by our previous voluntary suspension of testing in which the Soviets completed all the preparations for elaborate and comprehensive nuclear testing while the United States slept, thus permitting them to drastically reduce our lead in the nuclear field: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the 45th Annual National Convention of the American Legion, assembled in Miami Beach, Fla., September 10–12, 1963, That the American Legion urges the Senate to assure the American people—

1. That this test ban treaty shall not in any way be considered as a step toward disarmament of the United States;

2. That this test ban treaty shall not in any way be considered a step toward the surrender of our national sovereignty (including but not limited to U.S. control of our own military forces and defense developments);

3. That this test ban treaty shall in no way curtail lawful nuclear testing or development or readiness for immediate resumption of atmospheric testing in the event of a violation of the treaty; and be it further

Resolved, That if the foregoing safeguards have been met, the American Legion supports the test ban treaty.

R&R Rel.

THE PROMISE AND FULFILLMENT OF AMERICAN DEMOCRACY—ADDRESS BY J. MARTIN KLOTSCHE

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, on September 23, 1963, at Madison, Wis., Dr. J. Martin Klotsche, provost of the University of Wisconsin, and a distinguished scholar and educator, delivered a speech at the Governors' Conference on Human Rights. Dr. Klotsche's speech is a scholarly, perceptive analysis of the situation as it affects civil rights. It is a clear expression of the philosophy of the individual rights of man. I ask unanimous consent that Dr. Klotsche's address be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PROXMIRE in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PROMISE AND FULFILLMENT OF AMERICAN DEMOCRACY

(Address by J. Martin Klotsche)

Let me begin by stating some basic propositions to which we, as a people, are committed. These are the ideals that give us a moral base on which we can build. They are our frame of reference—without which we cannot operate effectively. The philosopher Whitehead once said "that vigorous societies harbor a certain extravagance of objectives so that men wander beyond the safe provision of personal gratifications." He further suggested that a civilized society must cultivate a "widespread sense that high aims are worthwhile."

What are these extravagant objectives? These high aims? Our beliefs and commitments have been so frequently expressed that they are self-evident in the sense that they need no further proof or evidence to support them. Yet while they may be self-evident, they are not self-explanatory, nor are they self-enforcing. Nor do we realize them simply because we have given expression to them. But this does not invalidate them nor does it deny the value of periodically restating them. When Jefferson expressed the views that were eventually incorporated into the Declaration of Independence, these were not his views alone. They were shared by many of his colleagues. They represented a consensus. One writer has even described Jefferson as having "plagiarized the atmosphere." These truths expressed in the Declaration of Independence were subsequently reaffirmed and enlarged upon. They were incorporated into the Preamble to the Constitution and into the Bill of Rights, were stated in the Emancipation Proclamation and are to be found in some of the most contagious prose and poetry written in this country.

They have also become universal in their appeal, with the result that the ideas associated with our way of life are in complete harmony with the hopes and aspirations of people everywhere. Our ideas have become an integral part of world thinking. When, for example, the Dutch stormed into Sumatra they found on many of the buildings these words from the American Revolution, "Give me liberty or give me death." At the Bandung Conference held in southeast Asia in 1955, a conference which, incidentally, the United States officially ignored, the date of April 19 was deliberately chosen for the opening of the conference to have it coincide with the anniversary of the Battle of Lexington and Concord. Thus, such Americans as Jefferson and Lincoln are great not only because they achieved American purposes, but also because they were able to speak for humanity at large and extend their views to include the whole family of man.

The historian, Commager, recently wrote that we have witnessed two major revolutions in the past 1,000 years. The first broke up the medieval world, humanized and secularized thought, shifted the center of gravity from the Mediterranean to the Atlantic and opened up a whole new world. The second was associated with the birth of our own country and with the end of colonization. It marked the emergence of a new nation, the spread of the ideas of self-government, and the use of science and technology to create abundance.

What then is our frame of reference? Stated simply it is the idea that the individual is squarely in the center of things and is of supreme importance. Archibald Mac Leish who has written often on this subject, says that when we speak of man we should speak of man not in the abstract, nor should we speak of all men, or even the majority of men. Rather we should talk about that one single man who, because he is a man, has dignity and worth. Basic to our whole scale of values, then, is our faith in the infinite worth and unlimited possibilities of each person. This is the self-evident truth which is our point of departure.

The rule of thumb under which we should operate is a simple one. We should regard each person as an individual—not as a Catholic, Jew or Protestant; not as a Negro or white; not as a man or a woman, but as a person whom we like or dislike because of his or her intrinsic qualities. Color really doesn't matter. In fact it just isn't relevant.

Now it is a mark of extraordinary maturity to be able to make such judgments. There are some people who are illiterate who have this instinctive recognition of respect for others. Many children set no artificial boundaries in their esteem and love of people. To others this feeling for respect is an intellectual process. But unfortunate is the person who, because of his own limitations, has never fully sensed the significance of each person's intrinsic value and worth.

That there have been conspicuous failures and glaring imperfections in achieving this goal need not be dwelt upon here. Our dilemma is the obvious gap between faith and fact, profession and practice, belief and performance. We have not translated into reality the full meaning of our belief. Our promise has not been fulfilled. Too often we have allowed the phrasemaker and the demagog to prevail. Slogans, even such attractive ones as "freedom" and "equality" can be used to enslave rather than to liberate. There are countless examples of versifiers and penmen who use their skill to give upside-down meanings to all sorts of ideas, which on the surface seem plausible. These are the people that William Blake had in mind when he said, "the general good is the refuge of the flatterer, scoundrel, and hypocrite. He who would do good must do it in minute particulars."

That we have made progress in the human rights field, no one, other than the cynic, could deny. Yet our progress has been spotty, uneven, and in some areas unimpressive. But now we are at the crossroads of a long struggle to win equality for the Negro. We are, in fact, now entering into the final or climactic stage. We must squarely face the fact that modest progress will no longer suffice. It is a fact of history that when people begin to improve, when they are on the way up, when they see some signs of hope and accomplishment, this is when they become impatient and even rebellious. It is when people begin to see a way out that they become militant. It is only when the situation appears hopeless and there seems no avenue of escape that people give up.

Thus, democracy is a quest, a never-ending seeking for better things and presumes a never-slackening pressure for improvement and betterment. Justice Holmes had this in mind when he said that "man's mind once stretched to a new idea never returns to its former dimensions." It is precisely because some progress has been made that Negroes today have achieved a new militancy which has replaced the abject hopelessness of former years with a new aggressiveness and determination.

This has alarmed some persons and caused them to recoil in fear and anger. Yet it serves no purpose to attribute current unrest to agitators or to describe those in the forefront of the civil rights struggle as disturbers of the peace. Those who seek refuge in such an explanation are either unwilling or unable to understand that we are in the midst of a social revolution of dramatic proportions described by one observer in these words: "Nineteen hundred and sixty three is the year that the Negro ran out of patience and got mad at everybody. How mad he will continue to be depends on what changes are made to place him on an equal footing with other Americans."

It was recently reported, as though it were a colossal achievement, that no State school system in the South today remains segregated. This does not really impress the Negro. More relevant is the fact that the majority (over 90 percent in fact) of the Negro children in the South are still in segregated schools, 9 years after the Supreme Court declared such schools unconstitutional.

Nor can we cheer too loudly when the admission of two Negroes in the University of Alabama this summer (with an enrollment of 4,100 students) changed the racial composition of the campus from an all-white student body to one 99.95 percent white. And it took the Army, U.S. marshals, the FBI, the National Guard, the Justice Department, the White House staff and even the Chief Executive to accomplish this task.

But, we should hasten to add that the problem is not just a southern one. The 1960 census reported that more than one-half of the American Negroes live outside of the South. Of the cities with the largest Negro population, the first eight are northern or border cities. The city in the solid South with the largest Negro population is Birmingham in ninth place. The implications of these facts were dramatically pointed out by Harry Ashmore in his book "The Other Side of Jordan" in which he suggests that Negroes crossed the River Jordan in search of the Promised Land only to find a repetition of the hostility and persecution that they had left behind. He further concluded that our agrarian past is finished and that the crux of the problem has now shifted to our cities. Here it is that we must seek to come to terms with problems of racial justice and understanding.

There are many places in the North, therefore, where discrimination, though against the law, nevertheless is very real. Often Negroes get the lower paid jobs and many of these are disappearing because automation has reduced opportunities for the unskilled worker. As a result the rate of unemployment for Negroes is twice as great as that among whites. Also Negroes are less able to educate their children, less able to improve their lot, and less able to move out of the slums into better housing.

This seeking the Promised Land, and now for the first time viewing it, even from a distance, is one of the dramatic developments of our time. Sit-ins, freedom rides, desegregation—all of these would have been impossible 15 years ago. There are many factors that have contributed to this change. The experience of the Negro in wartime visibly affected him. James Baldwin has bluntly expressed this view in "The Fire Next Time," in which he states, "You must put yourself in the skin of a man who is wearing the uniform of his country; is a candidate for death in its defense, and who is called a 'nigger' by his comrades in arms and his officers; who is almost always given the hardest, ugliest, and most menial work to do * * * who does not dance at the USO the night the white soldiers dance there, and does not drink in the same bars white soldiers drink in; and who watches German prisoners of war being treated by Americans with more dignity than he has ever received at their hands. And who, at the same time, as a human being, is far freer in a strange land than he has ever been at home. Home. The very word begins to have a despairing and diabolical ring. You must consider what happens to this citizen, after all he has endured, when he returns home: Search, in his shoes, for a job, for a place to live; ride, in his skin, on segregated buses; see, with his eyes, the signs saying 'white' and 'colored,' * * * Look into the eyes of his wife, look into the eyes of his son; listen with his ears, to the political speeches, North and South; imagine yourself being told to wait."

In addition, a whole generation of Negroes since the war have had wider educational opportunity. Many have had a college education; 250,000 are now studying in our colleges and universities. Thus, experience in the armed forces and new insights gained as a result of education now make them spurn the conservatism of their elders and replace it with impatience and a new kind of radicalism. Negroes are understandably seeking a faster realization of their rights. They have seen how other people live. They know what opportunities there now are and they have also learned about and been influenced by what is happening elsewhere in other parts of the world. The number of independent nations has doubled since the war. In 1 year alone, 17 nations achieved independent status in Africa. Many of these nations are now taking their place as parliamentary equals in the council of nations. The revolution has become worldwide with hopes giving way to expectations and expectations yielding to demands.

Thus, to urge caution or to persist in the view that Negro unrest is the result of Communist agitation or the influence of the outsider or to wish that people would stop agreeing with the Negro and tell them to stop demonstrating is unbelievably naive or frightfully dishonest and insincere. We have been dodging and evading our responsibilities too long. The time for decision is now at hand.

Yet it is amazing to see to what lengths unimaginative people will go to oppose progress. It's easy to find so many reasons for not getting things done. How many times have we heard, "Well, this will set a dangerous precedent," "The public is not ready," "I agree with your goal but can't accept your methods," "What's the hurry? Rome wasn't built in a day," and the clincher, "The time isn't ripe." Time seems eternally unripe for change. Actually time is neutral. It can be corrosive but it can also be a force for good in the right hands. Dr. Buell Gallagher, president of City College in New York has expressed it this way: "There is nothing quite as weak as an idea whose time is not yet ripe. Nothing as absurd as an idea whose time is past. Nothing quite as powerful as an idea whose time has come."

We need a new spirit of adventure, for the odds are clearly against the timid. The Brookings Institute has just completed a report in which it has examined some problems of public policy. After 5 years of study by a team consisting of one psychologist and two political scientists, these men have concluded that we are unprepared for adventure at the very time that an adventuresome spirit is essential to preserve our democratic system. These researchers record that in 1789 our experiment was the boldest adventure of its kind ever undertaken by man. But, now we seem to have lost the spirit of adventure—this living successfully with uncertainty and being challenged by it.

Actually the question that confronts us is not when is the time ripe for us to act. But, how do we do it? Where do we begin? What do we do first? Where can our efforts best be concentrated? The battle for human rights is a complex one and needs to be won on many fronts. It is many-faceted and the task is a prodigious one. It involves court decisions, Federal, State and local legislation, persuasion, education, and job training. But, it also poses tasks to be performed by the Negro community. For it is important that Negroes themselves come to grips with the fact that they are underdeveloped people, to ues a phrase of Louis Lomax. They will have to work diligently to narrow "the cultural gap" that has resulted from over three centuries of submission and subservience and that has poorly equipped the Negro for the heavy demands that a democracy makes of its people.

If one thing has happened in the last few months it is the growing awareness of the stresses and strains in our society. Our complacency has finally been shattered. For the first time we seem ready to think about these problems rather than to avoid them. But the momentum must not be lost. The international situation demands that we attend to these matters, for our image abroad, upon which the success of our foreign policy depends, is blurred by Little Rock and Birmingham. The realities of our technological society also require it, for increasingly our manpower needs will demand more and more highly trained personnel drawn from every level of our society. We know that talent and virtue exist in all levels of our society and it is a grievous waste of our talents to permit discrimination, poverty and inadequate education to stand in the way of fully developing our human resources.

But, let us hope that our sense of justice and our belief in what we think is right would achieve a breakthrough of conscience that would result in giving to every person those elementary rights with which naturally he has been endowed. For Negroes want only what other people want—respect and dignity and the opportunity to be measured in terms of their individual worth. They are not seeking special favors. They know that men are not all equal in ability, attainments and accomplishments. They just do not want to be victimized by reason of their previous condition of servitude.

We know these matters cannot be resolved today or tomorrow, or this year or the next. For we are dealing not only with problems of education, employment, housing and accommodations, but we are dealing with a state of mind and with man's own estimate of his fellow man. It is hard to know where to take hold, but it is at the community level that each of us can become most relevant. For every city, town and village in America has its human relations problems. The Frenchman de Toqueville put it this way: "It is true that around every man a fatal circle is traced beyond which he cannot pass, but within the range of that circle he is powerful and free."

So the time for decision has now been reached—in Congress—in our legislative halls—in our municipal councils—in our schools, churches, community organizations, in the marketplace and in the minds and hearts of all Americans. All that is being asked is that everyone in our society enjoy the full promise of our democracy and that he not be intimitated or crucified for demanding it.

The real question that remains is whether we can produce a generation of sober and wise men and women with level heads and compassionate hearts who can take us down the path of fulfillment quickly enough so that the promise of American democracy will become a reality and that men and women here as well as elsewhere will be able to say that freedom and justice were not the privilege of a few, but had been extended to everyone on the ground, that our right to be considered a person at all times gave that right to others also.

It has been said that nervous times are ahead of us. The Negro is demanding of us fulfillment of an earlier promise that many of us are not yet prepared to accept. The real question is not whether his claims are justified. They cannot be denied if our moral commitments are worth anything at all. The only question is whether our promises can be fulfilled in such a manner and with sufficient grace and reason that we can soon reestablish the great truth without which there is no hope—that man is by nature endowed with certain rights—that he is a person to be respected at all times and is entitled to whatever opportunity necessary to permit him to find his own level, in his own way, in his search for freedom and justice.

A NEW LOOK AT EAST-WEST TRADE

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, East-West trade relations have just been projected sharply to the fore by the debate about an impending wheat deal between American grain traders and the U.S.S.R., following the sensational announcement of the $500 million Canadian wheat deal

IS THE PUBLIC GETTING THE TRUTH ABOUT THE RACE ISSUE?

Size-Up by a Panel of Editors From North and South

Riots . . . marches . . . mass demonstrations . . . sit-ins . . . Negro protests of all kinds—

Almost every day newspapers report some new racial trouble in this country.

But how accurate is the reporting? Is the American public getting the true picture of race relations—the full story? Is the South made a "whipping boy"? Are race problems in the North being ignored or suppressed?

A group of newspaper editors and publishers discussed such questions at a conference sponsored by United Press International.

Here is how they sized up the coverage of the big news story of 1963.

"Newspaper coverage of racial news" was the subject of a discussion at the United Press International's conference of editors and publishers at Chicago on Oct. 18, 1963. Following, from a transcript of the proceedings, are views expressed by some of the editors and publishers:

Georgia Editor: "Wire Services Did Not Get the Facts"

James H. Gray, editor of "The Albany [Ga.] Herald": I speak, I suppose, from what they call the Southern point of view, although I'm not certain what that Southern point of view is as portrayed by the wire services in many of their stories, because I think that the Southern opinion on the racial question is fully as diverse as it is in other parts of the country. . . .

My home town, Albany, Ga., became in November of 1961 the starting point of what is now more or less accurately labeled as the Negro revolution in America. The question is: How did the press handle the story?

From the point of view of the wire services, I believe the ball was booted very badly. Admittedly, Negro demonstrations in large masses were a new development in American society. The boycott of a bus system led by "the Lord King"—"the Lord" is what Negroes call Martin Luther King—had occurred in Montgomery, Ala., in the late '50s. But never before on the American scene had there been sit-ins and kneel-ins and lie-ins and pray-ins and swim-ins on a scale approximating those attempted in Albany, Ga.

How did the press services fail? I think simply by violating the cardinal tenet of good journalism—that is, they failed to check and double check to gain perspective for the information that they were disseminating. Most of the men that came down there had preconceived ideas about the situation. They had very definite opinions about the Southern approach to the racial situation. And they gave those opinions; they did not give fact.

—UPI Photo

Panel of editors that discussed press coverage of the race issue: Seated, Earl Johnson, UPI, New York; Al Neuharth, "The Rochester [N. Y.] Democrat & Chronicle"; Robert Hitt, "The Charleston [S. C.] Post." Standing, Thomas Boardman, "The Indianapolis Times"; James Gray, "The Albany [Ga.] Herald"; Robert Chandler, "The Bend [Oreg.] Bulletin," and Bower Hawthorne, "The Minneapolis Star" and "The Minneapolis Tribune."

A case in point is this: In December, 1961, between 100 and 200 Negroes, carefully recruited, drilled to perfection, organized with almost the precision of a military cadre, suddenly appeared in the downtown area of Albany, Ga.—without announcement, without any necessary parade permits, without any by-your-leave from anyone. They were there for approximately two days, and then "the Lord," Martin Luther King, came in and announced that he was taking over, that if his demands were not met immediately, that he would turn the town upside down.

These Negroes marched, they circled the central business block of our city and they chanted these songs which are now familiar to all American cities—the ones "We Shall Overcome" and "The Police Chief Shall Not Turn Me Around," things of that sort.

Most of the Negroes were young—in fact, the majority of them were teen-agers.

The large majority of the Negro population in Albany, Ga., took no part in the demonstrations.

What was the reaction of the white community? I can say that the reaction first in Albany, Ga., was amazement, and then amusement. Heads popped out of store windows and doorways and a few bystanders on the street merely gaped.

But there was no move, and never was, in Albany, Ga., by the whites toward the Negroes, or the Negroes toward the whites. And there was no overt evidence of any hostility between the races.

Nevertheless, the UPI—relying on information it received not from a professional newsman and not from any newsman whatsoever but from an unemployed radio announcer who received a few bucks a month to supply UPI with whatever information he could dredge up—put upon the wires a fulsome report of an impending racial clash in Albany, Ga.

Report of a Mob—"Utterly False"

This report used the word "mob" quite frequently. It said a "mob" of whites had gathered upon the streets and were in an ugly mood to do battle with the Negro demonstrators. This was utterly false.

The Associated Press did not do much better with the same set of circumstances, but, at least, AP did have the levelheadedness to telephone newspapermen in Albany to check the reports, and it did not file a story of inflammatory conditions when none existed.

I think the truth is that we never did have any hostility in Albany, Ga.—and they always call that Martin Luther King's one failure. The reason, of course, is that the relations between the whites and the Negroes were at a peak where communication was always in evidence and trouble did not result. But that was the report, and, of course, it flashed to all sections of the country.

Now, from this shaky start, the press services launched upon coverage of the so-called Negro revolution. Neither of the two wire services improved much for weeks. Both UPI and AP were taking at face value information telephoned in from the scene or information that was being communicated to them by such organizations as SLCC—that is, the Southern Leadership Christian Conference—and SNCC, the Student Nonviolent Co-ordinating Committee, or CORE, the Congress of Racial Equality, and other similar groups, none of which had an established reputation for reliability.

And it was this kind of information that both UPI and AP transmitted at least for a period of weeks. And in so doing, in my view, they defaulted their responsibility, not only to their member newspapers, but to the entire craft of journalism. True, in some instances, I think, both services made sporadic

(continued on next page)

—Wide World Photo

POLICE DOG in Birmingham, Ala. Says a Southern editor: "It appears to me that police dogs snarl only in Birmingham . . . though dogs have been pressed into service at race demonstrations in Chicago, New York, Connecticut."

—UPI Photo

MOUNTED POLICEMAN in Louisiana. This picture was printed in two New York newspapers, with differing captions. Asks the editor: "Was the trooper turning back a mob, or was he charging helter-skelter into a mass of helpless humanity?" It depended, he says, on which newspaper's caption was read.

RACE INCIDENT in Pennsylvania. If this were in the South, says the editor, "press of the nation would wring every ounce of prejudice out of it."

—Wide World Photo

. . . Wire services "have finally achieved a measure of balance" attempts to check the information. But the fact is that the two wire services did not follow through on what is fundamentally their job, and that's simply to get the facts.

Now, after a passage of two years, I think the services have finally achieved a measure of balance. Instead of willy-nilly shooting onto the wires the unsubstantiated claims and reports of these racial militants, they now are asking the countering questions from other sources and they're asking the questions that any newspaperman would ask. As a result, I think the racial stories today are much more evenly reported, and I think the stories now indicate that all the white people are not, as in the view of Elijah Muhammad [head of the Black Muslim movement], pure devils, nor, conversely, are all Negroes merely money-mad.

But it seems to me that in the intervening period between the Albany case and the march on Washington in August of 1963 there was a lot of sloppy reporting, a completely warped view of what we all recognize as an extremely complex social condition. I believe that the reporting was one-sided and that it damaged the images of many communities and, certainly, many States in the South. I think the wire services are greatly to blame. . . .

Northern Editor: "Good Job on Big Picture"—but Not on Details

Bower Hawthorne, executive news editor of "The Minneapolis Star" and "The Minneapolis Tribune": I'm from the "Deep North," and I'm in favor of integration. I think the wire services, in general, have done a pretty good job of covering the racial story—the big picture of it, the conflicts and the turmoil, the big events.

I don't think they've done as good a job as they might have done in giving us the details, giving us the feeling and, particularly, in reporting the successes, the progress that is being made in many communities in the South quietly and steadily and which I think in the long run are going to be more important than some of the flashes that we get so spectacularly.

The main theme that I'd like to introduce is the feeling that this story has moved or is moving north much faster than most of us realize. I think that, if the wire services have any great failure, it has been in failing to put that story into focus and to keep reporting that story—in Minneapolis, in Chicago, in Detroit and all of the rest of the way across the northern part of the country.

"Deep-Seated Bigotry" in the North

There is a much more deep-seated prejudice and bigotry and resistance to the Negro emancipation in the North, I think, than most of us realize.

Minneapolis is perhaps the large city in which Negroes have it better than in any other large city in the country. The Negro population there is relatively small. The Negroes who live in Minneapolis and St. Paul are relatively well educated. They, for a generation, in most cases, at least, have had the advantages of integrated Northern schools and job opportunities that Negroes generally don't have in the South. But, until the last few years, they have lived in Negro ghettoes and have been held apart from the rest of the community because they're relatively few and they've been in service jobs.

Now that they are moving out into the better neighborhoods, moving into schools that they had not been in before, we are finding the same kinds of resistance that are going on in the South. It is not nearly as dramatic, not nearly as obvious, but we get it as editors and reporters on our newspapers—a growing pressure, a growing complaint, from our readers about the things that are going on in Minneapolis.

We, incidentally, have just completed the preparation of a series for "The Star" about the circumstances, economic and social circumstances, of Negroes in Minneapolis. This is a job that we've done periodically for 15 or 20 years. It's one that we are reporting steadily day in and day out. "The Milwaukee Journal" has just completed running a similar series on the conditions in Milwaukee. I think this is something that most of us in the North have neglected. I'm a little proud of us because I think we've done a better job than most Northern newspapers, but I think all of us have to do even better, looking at the story in our own communities.

Now, I'd like to have the wire services tell us in Minneapolis more about what is going on in Chicago, what's going on in Milwaukee, what's going on in Detroit, across the Northern part of the country, as well as telling us the Southern story.

We're getting increasing complaints from our readers that we are overplaying the integration story. Some of our white readers are getting tired of reading so much about it. Perhaps we are overplaying the story. But I think that this is the biggest story of our time, and I think one of our definite responsibilities is to make our readers realize this and prepare them for the inevitable change that is taking place.

Carolina Editor: In New York Newspapers, "Prejudices Show"

Robert Hitt, editor of "The Charleston [S. C.] Post": Charleston's population in the city is approximately 50 per cent white and 50 per cent Negro. In the public schools, the population is almost 4-to-1 Negro.

I made the trip from South Carolina to Chicago to ask this question: Are the lofty ideals of objective journalism being applied to the race-relations story by the American press?

The racial story is not a regional story. As a matter of fact, the South has never held a monopoly on this problem, though countless readers of non-Southern newspapers have long been led to believe that violence cannot be racial unless it carries a Southern dateline. In countless instances involving the racial story, objective journalism has been crushed to earth deliberately and, I suspect, with malice aforethought.

I point the finger of accusation particularly at the New York press with which I am familiar, and I charge that, in their crusade to wipe bias from the face of America, they have themselves—often and willy-nilly—allowed their own prejudices to show shamefully.

In more recent weeks, I have been somewhat heartened by a feeling that objectivity is making a weak rally among some of the prime offenders, and they have at last been forced to admit reluctantly that the race problem does not stop at the "magnolia line." I attribute this not to a stirring of non-Southern journalistic consciences but to the fact that racial violence and civil disobedience has spread from the "land of mint juleps and wool hats" to the more sophisticated areas north of Virginia and west of Little Rock.

Even "The New York Times" and "The New York Herald Tribune" have shown some signs of impatience with illegal mobbery. As long as the violence was hemmed in by the Mason-Dixon Line, those great voices shouted out encouragement to the demonstrators. But when the sounds from mass sit-ins and lie-ins seeped through the cracks in Manhattan's ivory towers, both "The Times" and "The Tribune" did a doubletake and whispered softly, "Hold! Enough!"

. . . "The whole nation now shares South's racial problems"

With all that, it appears to me still that police dogs snarl only in Birmingham and mounted policemen charge into crowds of helpless people only in Louisiana, though it is a fact that police dogs and mounted police have been pressed into service at racial demonstrations in Chicago, New York, Connecticut and other points where racial prejudice has been outlawed for generations.

["The Chicago Tribune," in reference to this remark, has pointed out that "there have been no mounted policemen in Chicago for more than 15 years."]

On August 2 of this year we received a story out of Chicago saying police dogs had been sent to the scene of a racial outbreak. We asked for pictures. Chicago messaged back, "Pix of police dogs at scene of racial disturbance unavailable."

Early in the summer, when we got a story about a number of persons being injured at a racial outburst in Harlem, we asked for pictures and got the same reply—no pictures available. The inability of the wire services and the great newspapers in two of the largest cities in the world to get even one Brownie camera to the scene of racial violence left me somewhat aghast.

I could not help but recall that a regiment of cameramen happened to be just at the right place at precisely the right time in Birmingham when a police dog grabbed a Negro boy by the arm. Yet in Chicago or in New York, nary a lens could be mounted.

One Picture—Two Interpretations

The day I began preparing these remarks, I clipped a picture from "The New York Times" and "The New York Herald Tribune"—the same picture. I have these clippings here for the benefit of any purist who might desire documentation. The picture was moved by UPI.

The cut lines in "The Times" say that the photo shows a Louisiana State trooper turning back demonstrators in Plaquemines, La., where Negroes had been demonstrating.

The cut lines in "The Herald Tribune" gave a slightly different interpretation. I quote: "Mounted Louisiana trooper charges into crowd of Negro demonstrators in Plaquemines, La.," said "The Tribune."

Now, was the trooper turning back a mob, or was he charging helter-skelter with flying hooves into a mass of helpless humanity? That depends on whether you read "The Times" or "The Tribune."

* * *

Now, this sort of fetches me up to a point I wish to make: They say the camera doesn't lie. Maybe that is so. But the product of a camera can be distorted by the hands of an artist or the brains of an unrestrained caption writer.

* * *

Let me say that the South has racial problems which do not lend themselves to easy solutions. The whole nation now shares these problems, and I do not think solutions will come in Chicago or New York or anywhere else if the press does not return to some degree of objectivity and quit trying to inflame race against race and section against section. Distorted reporting, the use of pictures which take a convenient and sensational center slice out of a sequence of events can arouse racial passions which simmer in all human breasts, both white and colored. The South has been a convenient whipping boy in this matter for a long time. While we are not insensitive to regional slander, we have learned to live with it.

On Aug. 30, 1963—this year—the public schools of Charleston were integrated for the first time, without an insult or a stone or an egg being hurled, without the slightest hint of racial incident.

The very same day, in Pennsylvania, State troopers were called in to help policemen clear a path through an angry crowd of white people so a Negro family could move into an apartment. We received a picture from Philadelphia showing three burly troopers hauling one white youth away. One trooper had the boy tightly around the neck. The other two clamped his arms to his side as they dragged him away. . . .

Then I gazed at the ceiling of my editorial-writing room and I whispered to myself, "Thank God that boy is white and it happened in Philadelphia. If he were black and it happened in Charleston on this day of school integration, then there surely would be hell to pay and the press of the nation would wring every ounce of prejudice and emotionalism out of it."

New York Editor: "Extremists Use Press for Publicity Purposes"

Al Neuharth, general manager, "The Rochester [N. Y.] Democrat & Chronicle": I'd like to begin by posing a question, and then try to answer it at least partially.

The question I would raise and which I think is worth some rather serious consideration is whether some publications—and I would not limit this to newspapers—some publications and broadcasting stations in this country, through their own reporters or cameramen, or through the wire services, are unintentionally serving as publicity agents for racial extremists, either Negro or white.

And I think the answer to that question is at least a qualified "Yes," and, in many instances, an unqualified "Yes."

I think the professional, militant advocates—if you want to call them that—of either white supremacy or of immediate and total integration long have connived to use the news media for their own publicity purposes. Now, I'm sure most editors and publishers are aware of this trap and are taking measures to avoid it. But I'm afraid the extremists are getting away with this in many instances—even now—both in the North and in the South.

For example, a representative of CORE or the NAACP calls a city desk or an editorial room to report or to tip us off that a sit-in demonstration will be staged at a local lunch counter at 2 p.m. and requests that a photographer be sent. If the photographer is not on hand at the appointed hour, the sit-in generally is postponed until the photographer arrives, or sometimes canceled if he doesn't show up.

Another example: A representative of the White Citizens' Council calls the news media to report that pickets will march at the school-board headquarters at 8 a.m. to protest the beginning of integration in the classrooms. He asks, "Will a photographer be on hand?" And if the newsman says, "We'll see," the white supremacist responds by saying, "Well, we have to know in advance, because if there won't be any photographers, we're not going to march."

Now, these are true incidents on city desks on newspapers on which I've worked in Florida, in Michigan or in New York State in recent years. There are many other examples.

Similar calls have been made to your city desks or to your broadcast stations or to your wire-service newsrooms.

Now, when we respond automatically to this sort of thing,

. . . "Are we mismanaging the news? I think some of us are"

are we covering the news, or are we helping to stage it? Are we promoting it?

In our eagerness to report what we all agree is one of the biggest domestic stories of our time, are we mismanaging the news—if you'll pardon the use of that expression—and are we failing to differentiate between the legitimate and the contrived? I think some of us are, or, certainly, some of us have been, and I think that in this area of covering racial news, the wire services—both wire services—certainly must share the blame with any local newspapermen, either in the North or in the South.

I think that both major wire services have done a generally good job—perhaps not an outstanding job, but a generally good job—under what we know are very difficult circumstances in the past year of covering spot racial stories in troubled areas like Oxford or Birmingham or Jackson or the others. I would agree that, in some instances, they seem to have been eager to give greater attention to racial stories which are furthest from their home base. . . .

But I think, more important, the question that the wire services should ask themselves and that we as newspaper editors or publishers should ask ourselves is, "Have we adequately told the other side of the developments along the road to integration—these less spectacular but equally important racial-success stories?" And I think we have not.

Several months ago, we decided on our own Gannett newspapers that we should do this—at least we should make an attempt to balance the daily stories of turmoil and violence in racial news with any success stories that we could find. And we did, and we still are.

* * *

Now, it seems to me when such stories balance the racial news of violence and bloodshed, we are giving our readers the total picture. But when they do not, then I believe we assume the role of publicity agents for the extremists.

* * *

I think what we simply need to do is—all of us as newspapermen or as wire-service people—is to be "gutty" enough to report both the progress and the problems, and to be willing to do it without or with offense, either to clients or members, to readers or politicians in the South or in the North. I don't think enough of us are yet doing this.

Wire-Service Editor: "A Very Difficult Story to Cover"

Roger Tatarian, executive editor, United Press International: I think, first off, I'd like to observe that coverage of this story has confirmed what I think every traffic-court judge has discovered long since—mainly that you can get two eyewitnesses to the same accident and they will, in all honesty, come up with rather different versions of what it is that happened before their eyes.

It's been a very difficult story to cover. We have encountered many problems. We have had some slips, quite obviously. I'm encouraged by the feeling among the panelists that some improvement has been made, generally speaking. This will certainly encourage us as we go along.

Now, we have had many occasions to investigate specific complaints from all parts of the country on racial troubles, and I'm happy to say this: that where we have found differences, clashes or discrepancies, we have at least found that these were the result of honest reporting by people, and in no instance was there anything sinister about the different or challenging interpretation that we may have carried on our wires.

The problem here, of course, is the scope of the story. News is not always very co-operative. It doesn't always happen where you have a bureau. We have had to organize, rather, teams of people, really, from the South, who move very rapidly from place to place as the story shifts. There are many places, obviously, where you do not have full-time staff, where you have stringers, you have tipsters. We, like any newspaper, get tips from many sources, and I think any newspaperman has a responsibility of following up these tips, regardless of where they come from.

* * *

Well, one thing we have learned, and I think almost every panelist this morning has made a point of this—we have learned of the necessity to sit back and get outside of the hurly-burly of the spot news of importance—and try to sit back and add up and assess what it is that's been going on, what it is that has been accomplished.

In Albany, Ga., "Racial Relations Today Are Much Worse"

Thomas L. Boardman, editor of "The Indianapolis [Ind.] Times," and moderator of the panel, then called for questions from other editors and publishers. The first questioner was unidentified.

Q: I would like to ask Mr. Gray what is his newspaper in Albany doing about the local handling of such situations? What is the situation in Albany?

Mr. Gray: In our handling of the racial story, I have tried very deliberately to give an impartial coverage of the news story—particularly so because, as I expressed in my opening remarks, the first stories coming out on the national wires were so obviously distorted. . . .

You've got to realize that 48 per cent of the population in Albany, Ga., is colored, and 52 [per cent] white. If there were no communications we couldn't operate as a community.

What happened in our town was that we were set upon by a group of professionals. And the most serious of their infringements, not only against our local laws, was the fact that they were using primarily children—teen-agers and some as young as 9 years old—for demonstration purposes.

Story "Which Was Never Reported"

Now, another thing that you've got to recognize about the Albany situation is this: We're talking about biracial committees—well, we've had biracial committees in Albany, Ga., since 1946, which was never reported in the national news at the time that the story broke.

Another thing was that there were several areas in our community that were already integrated—the airport, for example. Now, King [Dr. Martin Luther King] chose to make a demonstration at the train station. We have one train a day. We have several airplane flights and the whites and the coloreds use them together.

In other words, what obtained in Albany, Ga., was this: that, over a period of years, a series of integrations in various aspects of our social movements had been going on, and peacefully. The minute that King came in everything stopped and, of course, the minute that the news stories were accenting the friction between the races, you could see a wall of resentment developing between the whites and the coloreds.

. . . "Fight is going to be just as tough in North as in South"

I would say that racial relations in Albany, Ga., today are much worse than they were when I first came there as an outsider back after World War II. . . .

Mr. Boardman: As an extension of this question, I wonder if I might ask Robert Hitt how his paper handled the story of school integration in Charleston, S. C.

In Charleston, S. C., "We Didn't Have Any Good Violence"

Mr. Hitt: In Charleston, we were selected several years ago as a focal point for racial demonstrations in 1963—the 100th anniversary of the emancipation—because it is felt by some people that Charlestonians had something to do 100 years ago with creating conditions which brought about the "war of Northern aggression."

Our demonstrations began as soon as school was out in June, and they continued all summer—day and, frequently, at night.

The Chamber of Commerce, happily or unhappily, realizes that Charleston harvested very little publicity out of it, because we didn't have any good violence.

We had one incident of violence which erupted in a riot in front of the newspaper plant at 11 o'clock at night. I think there was dissatisfaction among some of our readers with the amount of publicity we were or were not giving to the daily story. In that particular riot, seven people were injured. They were all policemen. But the white community never interfered with these daily demonstrations. They figured—I assume—that people had a right to picket, demonstrate. They picketed and demonstrated all summer long. . . .

We had no book to go by, and I dare say no newspaper has for a story of this dimension in its community.

Our job was to try to tell the public from day to day what had happened and what would happen. We found early that we'd have to quit telling them what would happen, because frequently what people said was going to happen never did happen. They would be a little expansive on plans and not come out with the product. And so our first policy was:

"We're not going to print any advance notices on what's going to happen tomorrow because we can't rely on the people having enough control over the demonstrators to achieve what they set out to do."

But we kept the story on the local page throughout, until the violence occurred. We moved it to the front page, and as long as State troopers were in the community—which was about a week—we kept the story on the front. Then, when it simmered down, we moved it back to the local page.

But when the school matter came up and the federal-court decision was handed down only about three weeks before school opened, I met only once with the school board and they were horrified, and I'll tell you, literally horrified, at the prospect that a great regiment of correspondents from everywhere would come running down there to see if they could stir up a story.

Actually, I think there might have been two or three out-of-town correspondents.

We said that schools were going to be integrated on August 30. On August 30, they got integrated. They had one policeman at each school, and he sat around chewing his fingernails. Nothing ever happened. This excited no publicity and no attention, and this may go along with what Al Neuharth said: Here was a community—I don't say happily integrated the schools, but they did it, because that was the only thing to do. We're not ready to start another war. We came out pretty bad on that last one.

* * *

In New York City, "More Phony Progress Has Been Claimed"

Turner Catledge, managing editor, "The New York Times": I would like to hear some discussion about the coverage of the racial situation in the North. We've had open season on the South here now for some time, and it seems to me that—especially when you read the editorial pages in the North—some people are too much concerned about what's going on somewhere else and too little concerned about what's going on right at their own door. Also, how have we reported the "progress" in the North in this matter?

In my own city of New York, I think there's more phony progress been claimed than most any place I know. When the shakedown comes you find the laws you've passed are not adequate. Are we reporting that? . . .

There seems to be a disposition, especially on our editorial pages, to demand that the Southerners accept some sort of an emotional change in this matter, which they're not going to do. Integration is coming in the South. It's coming very slowly, but it's not wanted. Is it wanted any more in Minnesota, or in New York? I think those are the questions that our readers are entitled to have us explore.

Mr. Hawthorne: I agree with you completely on that. I think that the story in the North is rapidly becoming more difficult to cover and more important to cover than the story in the South. We are covering it in Minneapolis, and things are not all good. There is a great deal of resistance, particularly the emotional resistance of whites—even with our relatively small Negro population. As Negroes move into better neighborhoods and become more a factor in the community, the prejudices are rising, the bigotry is rising among our white population. And even though the numerical story is much different in the North, I think the fight is going to be just as tough, in the long run, in the North as it is in the South.

Mr. Catledge: Another thing I'd like to suggest is—if you've looked into the validity of some of the progress that we're talking about in the North. For instance, we built an enormous housing project in the neighborhood of Harlem in New York. What we have done there, we have just put our slums into a bigger building, put it behind a beautiful façade.

Now, are we going into those places to see how they're being conducted, how life is improving, or whether life is improving or not?

Also, in certain areas of the North—in New York, in Pennsylvania, for instance—the integration picture is changing. The fight for integration is shifting and the problem of integration is shifting. It's getting into being a problem of so-called imbalance in schools and housing and things of that sort. Also, in the North to what degree are Negro citizens being integrated into better life, into better jobs, into better positions? But are we going into those things? And also this violence that we tend to overlook. Now, violence in New York or violence in Rochester is just as violent. There are people hurt just as badly when they're hit as they do in Albany, Ga. [END]

Press, Radio, T.V. & Magazines
VJ
SB
PA
BP

Advisory Council on Plans for Progress

INFORMATION NEWS LETTER

No. 2, November 25, 1963

PLANS FOR PROGRESS FILM TO BE SHOWN NATIONALLY

The Reader's Digest, in conjunction with an article appearing in the December issue, has prepared a thirty-minute film entitled "Our Quiet Race Revolution." The film will be released to 150 TV stations for showing on or about December 1, under the general program heading, "All America Wants to Know." The sound tract will also be released to 1100 radio stations.

The film includes interviews with Hobart Taylor, Jr., executive vice chairman of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity and Jackie Robinson. Minority group employees, filmed on the job, will tell how they prepared for opportunities in industry. Emblems of representative Plans for Progress companies will be used in an opening scene.

Companies may wish to publicize the showing in their employee publications. If so, it is suggested that they check with their local stations for the date and time of the showing in their locality.

The President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity plans to obtain copies of the film to be loaned to companies and community groups for showing. Requests should be directed to the address shown below.

NEWSPAPERS FEATURE PLANS FOR PROGRESS

Enclosed are reprints of two recent newspaper articles on Plans for Progress. One, from the Providence Journal-Bulletin, is an interview with G. William Miller, president of Textron, Inc. and chairman of the Advisory Council, in which he clearly describes the objectives and activities of the Plans for Progress Advisory Council. The other, a first page feature story in the New York Times and carried by the Associated Press, contains an interview with G. A. McLellan, administrative director of the Plans for Progress office. It highlights by statistics and cases the progress which has been made by Plans for Progress companies in providing equal employment opportunity for salaried positions.

(Any issue of the Newsletter may be reproduced in whole or in part without permission.)

THE PRESIDENT'S COMMITTEE ON EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY
Address Inquiries to: Advisory Council on Plans for Progress - Telephone:
700 Jackson Place, N. W. A-302 Area Code 202
Washington, D. C. (20006) 961-3945

equated, in resolute contradition of any known facts, with the attitude of the "radical right"—specifically the attitude of those who favor racial segregation. We are urged to purge ourselves of a poison which the dreadful act in Dallas supposedly has revealed in our blood stream.

The sermons are sincere and, hopefully, edifying as well. But they happen to be irrelevant to the death of Mr. Kennedy.

Segregation is morally wrong. A political program based on the repeal of the income tax is fiscally simple minded. But neither one had anything to do with the murder.

If it is absurd to try to blame the assassination on the political right, it is yet more absurd to insinuate that it was the result of something dreadfully wrong with American political life as a whole. Until we know something different, the reasonable assumption must be that the assassination was the result of something dreadfully wrong in the mind of Lee Oswald.

It would be good and desirable if the world could now abjure all hatred. But since hatred still exists 1,900 years after the crucifixion, it is unhappily unlikely that it will vanish now.

Meanwhile, the continuing hysteria about national hatred as the central feature of this national tragedy does us a national injustice. It ignores, too, the most obvious expression of national feeling.

The line of mourners formed at the Capitol a week ago is still moving.

It may be seen in Dallas, where citizens bring flowers to the place in the road where the President was shot.

It may be seen across the Potomac, where Americans are coming in thousands to visit his grave.

It may be seen in the spontaneous and universal actions taken to reverence the memory of the martyred leader by giving his name to places and institutions that will endure.

Surely it is this outpouring of love and grief which speaks truly of the state of the Nation.

[From the Charleston, (S.C.) News and Courier, Dec. 1, 1963]

FALSE INDICTMENT: THE AMERICAN PEOPLE ARE NOT GUILTY

(From an editorial in the Wall Street Journal)

In the shock of these past few days it is understandable that Americans should find their grief mingled with some shame that these events should happen in their country. We all stand a little less tall than we did last Friday morning.

Yet, for our own part, we find past understanding the remarks of some otherwise thoughtful men who, in their moment of shock, would indict a whole nation with a collective guilt.

It seems to us that they themselves have yielded to the hysteria they would charge to others, and in so doing show that their own country is past their understanding.

Anyone who has been reading the newspapers, listening to the radio or watching television has heard these men; they include public commentators, members of our Congress and men of God. And the substance of what they charge is that the whole of the American people—and by inclusion, the ways of the American society—are wrapped in a collective guilt for the murder of a President and the murder of a murderer.

A Senator said that the responsibility lay on "the people of Dallas" because this is where the events took place. A spokesman for one group of our people said the Nation was "reaping the whirlwind of hatred." One of our highest judges said the President's murder was stimulated by the "hatred and malevolence" that are "eating their way into the bloodstream of American life." A newspaper of great renown passed judgment that "none of us can escape a share of the fault for the spiral of violence." And these were but a few among many.

Such statements can only come from men who have not been abroad in the land, neither paused to reflect how the events came about nor observed in what manner the whole American people have responded to tragedy.

A President lies dead because he moved freely among the people. He did so because he was beloved by many people, respected by all, and because everywhere people turned out in great numbers to pay him honor. In a society of tyranny the heads of state move in constant fear of murder, cordoned behind an army of policemen. It is the fundamental orderliness of the American society that leads Presidents to move exposed to all the people, making possible the act of a madman.

In the tragedy there is blame, surely, for negligence. In retrospect, perhaps, it was negligent of a President himself not to be aware that there are ever madmen in the world; yet it is a negligence born of courage and confidence. It was negligent of the police authorities, perhaps, not to search and cover every corner, every window, which might shield a madman; yet it was a negligence born of years of proven trust in the crowds of Americans through which Presidents have safely moved.

But this is something different from the charge in the indictment.

It is more than nonsense to say that the good people of Dallas, crowding the streets to honor a President, share a murderous guilt; or that the tragic acts of madmen cast a shadow on the whole of America.

Such an indictment is vicious.

WHY PICK ON DALLAS?

We rise to the defense of Dallas, Tex.

Many commentators and public figures have used the phrase, "the shame of Dallas" in suggesting that a million people in that area must take the major blame, and do penance for the horrible act of one mentally disturbed young man who was, after all, a newcomer in their midst.

Certainly the residents and officials of that unhappy city are expressing an extra measure of shock and grief at their direct witnessing of our Nation's tragedy. That is understandable. But it is not their shame or their failure.

This youth originated in the Bronx, where as a grade school pupil he was given a psychiatric examination, was found to be maladjusted, and to have "potentially dangerous" tendencies. If a city is to be held responsibile for him, the primary responsibility was in the Bronx, which had its chance to set the boy straight, and failed. Yet nobody has come forward with the suggestion that the Bronx should put on sackcloth and ashes.

Oswald went to high school in Fort Worth, and his former classmates there have said he was a "loner" and an oddball. But if Dallas should point the finger of blame at its nearest rival, Fort Worth would indignantly reject the accusation.

The young killer spent 2 years in the Soviet Union; he tried to resign his American citizenship; he married a Russian wife; he devoured Marxist literature as what he called his "personal Bible." But, strange to say, it has not been suggested that the blame for his confusion should rest in the city of Moscow.

He went to New Orleans, where he worked with the Fair Play for Cuba Committee, definitely proved by the Senate Subcommittee on Internal Security to be a Communist front. Pictures of Oswald passing out Communist circulars on the streets of New Orleans were shown to the whole Nation. Yet we have heard nobody express the opinion that New Orleans is a culprit city.

Oswald's travel expenses from Russia back to this country were paid for with money advanced by the State Department, yet Washington is not asked to share the blame for what happened.

Why, then, should Dallas be called upon to undergo the ordeal of recrimination because Lee Harvey Oswald arrived there by way of the Bronx, Fort Worth, New Orleans, Moscow, and Washington with his mind made up, his personality already warped into a pattern which emerged soon after in a heinous crime that has been universally condemned?

If any city were dissected the way Dallas has been, the publicity would reveal the same sort of elements of hate and strife, and would most of all reveal the general lack of concern that allows them to breed. We have a long way to go in detecting and diagnosing mental illness, and in knowing what to do to keep it from being a public menace. The blame does not lie with the city of Dallas, but with all humanity. We can fix the blame for individual failures and mistakes there, but there are potential killers walking the streets of every city of the world. The real question is, "What are we going to do about them—and for them?"

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, on December 3, Mr. LeRoy Collins, president of the National Association of Broadcasters, spoke in Columbia, S.C., and accused the South with guilt for the assassination of President Kennedy. In a speech which professed to deplore hate, Mr. Collins resorted to the most intemperate charges in his unfounded and completely unjustified attack on the people of the Southern States. For one who professes to abhor the emotion of hate, Mr. Collins proves himself singularly adept at verbally purveying this most violent emotion. If Mr. Collins had prepared for months to the end of arousing the strongest possible emotional reaction, he could not have done a more thorough job than he did accomplish with his speech in Columbia on December 3. I ask unanimous consent that a number of newspaper editorials and articles commenting on the remarks of Mr. Collins be reprinted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INOUYE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, perhaps the most concise appraisal of Mr. Collins' speech appeared at the conclusion of an editorial in the Nashville Banner of Nashville, Tenn., of December 5. This editorial stated:

> If Mr. Collins professes to believe what he has said, he is infected by a germ of extreme aberrations, and employers should dump him as a very sick man.

Mr. President, so vicious and so unfounded are the attempts to fix blame for the President's assassination on either the southerners or the conservatives, that there arises a suspicion that those who make such charges are much more incensed that the assassination was not perpetrated by a member of the American groups which they so despise and on which they attempt to place the guilt for any real or imagined defects in the American society, than they were over the fact of the assassination of the President itself.

If the guilt for the tragic and dastardly assassination of the President is to be placed on a broader base than the individual or individuals who actually participated in the assassination, then the guilt must logically be placed on those who purvey the insidious ideology of communism, for it is they who are the real purveyors of class warfare, bigotry, hatred, and violence in the world today.

EXHIBIT 1

[From the Nashville Banner, Dec. 5, 1963]

LEROY COLLINS, ET AL—THE FACTS ARE IGNORED BY HUCKSTERS OF HATE

Peddlers of demagogy carry their own sample kit, and LeRoy Collins—who was a "liberal" politician before becoming president of the National Broadcasters Association—went fully equipped in that particular for his Tuesday evening mission to South Carolina. There he let go with one more swipe with the smear brush at the South—his allegation being that the assassination of President Kennedy was fostered by "Dixie battle cries which incite sick souls to violence."

Desperation can lead to hysteria, it is true—and maybe the charitable thing would be to ascribe this vitriol to ignorance. But Mr. Collins is not a run-of-mine ignoramus. He is the purposeful protagonist of a point of view so foreign to truth that it can only be intended, not to enlighten on facts, but obscure them; not to ameliorate and solidify, but to excite passions of the hate pack with which he clearly runs. Whose ideological bread he eats, their chant he joins.

"Look," they say drooling for another bite of the infected morsel, "he's singing our song."

As a divisive demagogue, thus deliberately ignoring facts of record, he fits into the pattern of the propagandists dispensing entirely with fact to pin guilt just anywhere except where it belongs. The South is their target; therefore they act, to a man, as if they had never heard of Lee Harvey Oswald; nor are aware that as triggerman he was an avowed pro-Castro Communist, doing that enemy's business.

To these, mention of the Communist connection seems to be a mustn't-mustn't. It's still more expedient, apparently, to persist in the assertion—launched at the outset as a spontaneous defamation—that southern hate killed John Fitzgerald Kennedy.

Some of the commentators among Mr. Collins' colleagues have been persisting in that. They have been addicted to that hate needle by long use; their Operation Dixie rigging the picture for their own propaganda spiel, and playing pundit to the point of difficult extrication when facts of record leave them stranded, to squirm on their own hook.

If Mr. Collins has been listening exclusively to these for his information, it would be understandable that he is totally uninformed; still one would expect somebody going out on the lecture circuit, to discuss a matter of utmost gravity, to at least have a brush with facts before mounting the rostrum.

That the ex-Governor of Florida finds himself thus in the company of Chief Justice Earl Warren is not a circumstance augmenting his stature; the latter also delivered himself of a similar diatribe—no less shockingly wide of the truth because it was an offhand observation—voiced immediately after the President's death before the Red ideology of the killer was known. Nevertheless he repeated his scattergun blast of hate as he stood at Mr. Kennedy's bier in the Capitol Rotunda. Of the three who delivered eulogies, only Warren used the sad and solemn occasion to hurl a jarring note of anger by assigning guilt to fellow Americans.

It is nothing less than peculiar that the insulting conclusions reached by this school of South-baiting extremists parallel the charges peddled by Tass and Izvestia. The propaganda line being circulated by the latter in Russia is that President Kennedy was the victim of a Southern assassination plot. And it is the line emphasized at every opportunity by most of the commentators featured by the medium that pays Mr. Collins' salary. Apparently for pay, the former Governor of Florida takes his cue and turns traitor to his own region, which bears the name of Dixie. Characteristically, no mention of the fact that Lee Oswald was a pro-Castro Marxist, and working member of the Fair Play for Cuba Committee.

Most of Washington knows the score on that, even if for the moment it isn't talking much about it. There are facts still to come out; but salient facts already have emerged.

Senator JOHN TOWER, of Texas, hit the nail on the head when he rebuked those who blame American "society" for the Presidential murder. "These people overlook the simple fact—or refuse to admit it—that Lee Harvey Oswald was not fashioned by our society. His mind was, in fact, fashioned by the propaganda of Marx, an atheist who laid the foundation of communism.

"Let us remember," he added, "that in talking about extremists, in talking about the purveyors of hate, that the real purveyors of hate in this world, the real fomenters of class war and bigotry are the Communists; and the real disease of this world is Communist imperialism."

Among those refuted by the facts stated are the pundits striving to manufacture of this tragedy a propaganda case for their own further purveyance.

Infamies heaped upon the South this time are so transparently false that the entire Nation must see them for what they are.

If Mr. Collins professes to believe what he has said, he is infected by a germ of extreme aberrations, and employers should dump him as a very sick man.

[From the Edgefield Advertiser, Dec. 4, 1963]

THE COLLINS SPEECH IN COLUMBIA

There is the account of the speech of former Governor Collins in Columbia yesterday with bold heading on the front page of this morning's paper. Too much of the speech is untruth, and on the whole it is a misrepresentation spoken in the face of southern people.

Mr. Collins is now president of the National Association of Broadcasters whose monopoly for propaganda is today the most powerful single voice in the country. Whether it is used with the best taste, in the best national interest, is questionable, but it and its president are adept at propaganda.

The building of a new world through the airways engages much of the time of Mr. Collins, one may be sure. Not content with visiting the homes of the South through remote broadcast of entertainment, he comes into the Deep South to the capital of the Secession State, to preach against the South's evil, which he says is segregation.

It is typical and unfortunate that as men move into positions of power they lose something of the values that made them what they were, but are no longer.

The greatest power is not always at the top, and that is why centralization, seeking perfection in the whole, is bereft of the means of achieving it.

Dictatorship may have many good reasons for acceptance, but it has been historically true that dictatorship and the ultimate ideals of good have been two separate and distinct things.

People naturally and historically resent intrusion; for there is no absolute power except in the conscience of the individual, and there is no power to be respected above one's own convictions.

Mr. Collins has been drawn into the central establishment of power in the United States, which assumes that it can engineer a new social order from the top.

The baptism of power is often fatal; and, in a country of liberty, it is only power that can destroy it. Mr. Collins, who blames the South for the assassination of President Kennedy, would deny criticism, opposition, the spoken and written word, it seems. He would deny the very freedoms that are conscienceful forces in our country dedicated to maintaining our freedoms.

Destroy them, and the well of liberty has gone dry.

Years ago in the days of steam pumps, an engineer was being examined for graduation, when his examiner proposed the following question: "Suppose you have a steam pump constructed for a ship, under your own supervision, and know that everything is in perfect working order yet, when you throw out the hose, it will not draw. What would you think?"

"I should think, sir, there should be a defect somewhere."

"But such a conclusion is not admissable, for the supposition is, that everything is perfect, and yet it will not work."

"Then, sir, I should look over the side to see if the river had run dry."

Those who stand in positions of power inevitably want to create a perfect machine, which now in contemplation is a new world order without freedom.

When, along the way, will they learn that no matter how perfect the machine is designed, the river of liberty, which is life itself, is to be reckoned with, too?

One must agree with Mr. Collins that politicians have misled the people into believing that the public law in time will uphold segregation. Segregation will never be a public ideal. It is a private, personal matter, embraced by freedom, but not by the law.

The idea that men are created equal, he said, "is an idea that can never be stopped, not by custom, not by prejudice, not by hate, not by murder, not by armies, not by any mortal force * * * has the invincibility of simple truth, justice and right."

With all that most southerners agree, and anyone of heart and reason must ever wish that it will be so. It is a great ideal.

But there is no known order, in all history, no system of Government, no manmade laws, no army bayonet, no appropriation of funds, or anything else that can be done to bring about equality without first the complete destruction of freedom; for ultimate equality is an ideal of freedom, not of power.

And, while so many leaders talk of advancing the cause of humanity, of moving forward in social and economic fields—all of which sounds so promising and so winning—they seldom say that a dictatorship could get it all done quickly and easily; but that is what they would say, if they wanted to be truthful all the way, which Mr. Collins has not been. But he did say this—thanks to his frankness—"The advancement of all rights * * * as we know, will occur with the overt aid of the National Government * * *."

And, all the while, the power establishment softens its approach to the dictators of the world who are committed to bury us all, and to whom freedom is the sinister evil.

In the power establishment—closely supported by the National Association of Broadcasters—the leaders, the public casually observes, are nearly all millionaires or very rich; and this is so on nearly all leadership levels, the wealth of government having its courtiers now as it did in the early days of royalty.

It becomes importunate that they gather before humanity a set of ideals attractive to the masses, and that they crusade to justify their power and good fortune, to soothe their conscience, to seem to supply a high service and thus to further their own interest—to accomplish what they would like to be given credit for but are not competent either to conceive or to administer.

And like the infallible kings of old, while what they say is a form of power itself, they themselves contribute almost nothing. Like the royalty of ancient times, their work consists of spending money taken from the pockets of the people.

[From the Augusta Chronicle, Dec. 6, 1963]

THE MOTE IN COLLINS' EYE

Not in his most genial mood was Leroy Collins known, as far as we can ascertain, as a Dixiephile. Rather, the former Florida Governor has long been recognized as holding little regard for anything—man or beast—residing below the Mason and Dixon line.

That became evident during his tenure as chairman of the southern Governors' conference as well as when he presided over the National Democratic Convention. Nothing he had to say could have been construed as being complimentary to the section of the Nation which had been so good to him.

Even so, there was an absence of vitriol in what Collins had to say about the South. It was damaging, but not dirty.

Now, however, as it has for so many other misdirected Americans, the assassination of President Kennedy has so unbalanced Collins' rationality that we find him unleashing against the South a hatred which seems even more extreme than that which he charges to it.

His address before the Greater Columbia Chamber of Commerce was a smear of all things southern, carrying with it the implication that the South colluded in the murder of President Kennedy.

He named no officeholders in his remarks, but it was obvious that he referred to elected officials of this area when he asked how long "are the majority of southerners going to allow themselves to be caricatured by these Claghorns."

And, as though it were an everyday occurrence unique to the South and condoned by the South, he asked: "How many Sunday school children have to be dynamited to death? How many Negro leaders have to be shot in the chest? How many Presidents have to be assassinated?"

It must be presumed that Mr. Collins, in this wholly unfair reference, holds the southern politicians responsible for the violence that has come as the outgrowth of civil rights demands. In so doing, he charges the basest of crimes to men who are motivated not by the hate and extremism that the former Florida governor himself exhibits, but by deep convictions that states rights are guaranteed in the U.S. Constitution, and that compulsion is neither the way to gain integration nor admiration.

In the soul-filled dislike which he displays for the South, Collins lays to it the abhorrent assassination of President Kennedy as he conveniently ignores the Communist background of the alleged assassin.

It is understandable, in that he, as president of the National Association of Broadcasters, brazenly and banefully, vents his spleen against this region in a chamber of commerce address, how it is that so many members of his current profession—those especially in network positions—are utterly intolerant of the South and the southern viewpoint.

In their hate of us, they fail to see their own.

[From the News and Courier, Dec. 6, 1963]

THE COLLINS INSULT

Besides insulting millions of southerners with public blame for President Kennedy's murder, former Gov. Leroy Collins, of Florida managed in his speech at Columbia to work in a specific insult to a southern family by the name of Claghorn.

The late Fred Allen, one of the greatest American comics of our time, invented a character with a southern accent and called him Senator Claghorn. Members of the Claghorn clan may not have liked this use of the name but at least they could enjoy Mr. Allen's harmless humor.

The venom in Mr. Collin's barb about "these Claghorns"—whom he linked with several murders, including Mr. Kennedy's—is something altogether different. At least one descendant of a Claghorn—a name with an honorable record in American history—has already expressed the resentment that we are confident is spreading throughout this region. Mrs. B. Ellis deTreville of Beaufort, whose mother was a Claghorn, has said she intends to sue Mr. Collins unless he makes a public apology.

We wish it were possible for every affronted southerner, whatever his name and ancestry, to extract an apology from the man, though we are not prepared to say what it would be worth.

[From the Greenville News, Dec. 6, 1963]

LEROY COLLINS' GRIEVOUS ERRORS

We feel for the hosts at the annual meeting of the Columbia Chamber of Commerce and, especially for Gov. Donald S. Russell, who was called upon to introduce former Gov. Leroy Collins of Florida prior to his speech in which he denounced in terms at least as vicious at its most extreme critics have used his native South.

When he declared that "Dixie battle cries which incite sick souls to violence" fostered or contributed to the assassination of President John F. Kennedy, the once politically ambitious Floridian not only libeled the South but the whole Nation.

For the things he said of his own region could be said with just as much truth—or the lack of it—of any other region or of the country as a whole.

We shall not waste time taking Governor Collins' remarks apart and dignifying and further broadcasting them by refuting them. But when he spoke in the most extreme terms of the behavior of what he referred to as a few southern extremists, he committed the selfsame sin of which he was accusing them.

Nothing can be said by us or anyone else to excuse or mitigate some of the bombings, shootings , and other crimes to which Mr. Collins referred in the course of his remarks. But he spoke as if they occurred only in the South, and he certainly knows better than that.

The South has its sick souls, of course. But they are about equally divided between the two extremes on the race issue, which Collins attempted to say was the main cause if not the whole cause of the assassination. The available evidence does not support that thesis.

And, as for the incitement of the sick souls, the kind of man who killed the late John Kennedy is capable of killing anyone for the same paranoid reasons; in fact, they don't need any reasons.

The flames of incitement are already burning within their troubled hearts and twisted minds.

Mr. Collins should know that every region and every community in the country has its potential paranoiac assassins. They strike often, except that their victims are lesser folk than Presidents and we call it murder instead of assassination.

Mr. Collins has committed two grievous errors in addition to embarrassing his hosts.

One is that, like certain others, he has attempted to indict unfairly a whole people for the crime of one man or one small group of men.

The other has t do with the old adage that it's a pretty sorry bird who will foul his own nest.

[From the Montgomery Advertiser, Dec. 5, 1963]

A SWINISH LIBEL

The latest and not least offensive hellmouth to indict the South, and Alabama in particular, for the murder of President Kennedy is a native son—former Gov. Leroy Collins, of Florida, who is now the czar of the National Association of Broadcasters.

Alabamians will remember Collins is the presiding officer at the 1960 Democratic Convention in Los Angeles—prematurely gray, handsome, virile, and a thirst for the vice presidential nomination.

Collins has now hastened to make a finding that upstages the official assassination report to come from the Warren Commission.

The Commission need not consult the FBI, for the elegant, ambitious Collins has ruled that the assassination was the result of "Dixie battle cries which incite sick souls to violence."

Collins deposed that the Communist Oswald was inspired by "the rabble-rousers" who urge the country to "stand up and fight" for segregation and States rights.

Collins referred to unnamed southern politicians and asked:

"How long are the majority of southerners going to allow themselves to be caricatured before the Nation by these Claghorns? How many Sunday school children have to be dynamited to death? How many Negro leaders have to be shot in the chest? How many Presidents have to be assassinated?"

This swinish libel of a people comes from a man who seeks the patronage of other sections. In times past, even Time magazine has slurred Collins as a civil rights phony. It observed in the September 1, 1958, issue:

"With many a pear-shaped preachment * * * Collins has built a reputation as a civil rights statesman, won favorable mention as a southern moderate who might do nicely as a Democratic vice presidential nominee in 1960. But Collins' practice falls far short of his preachment: Not once during his 3 years as Governor has he proposed even a token program for admitting Negro children to white classrooms in Florida's 100-percent segregated public school system."

What Collins now says is designed to stifle political opposition to the Democratic Party. And it is plainly frivolous.

The Communist Oswald was scarcely inspired to his crime by sympathy with States rights.

Oswald was not inspired by either southern or northern agitators. If anything, he was angry because he couldn't get a visa to return to Russia.

Nobody, including Collins, knows with any certainty what impelled Oswald to his horrendous crime. He was a madman of the kind who could have killed Kennedy one day and Khrushchev the next day with equal pleasure.

And something that Collins and his demagogic breed leave up in the air is this: If Oswald murdered Kennedy because of States rights debate, then what explains the equally crazed act that was Jack Ruby murdering Oswald?

[From the State, Dec. 5, 1963]

THE MAN WHO CAME TO DINNER

Agree or disagree with LeRoy Collins, you must give him credit for consistency if not for propriety.

The former Governor of Florida long has wanted to remake the image of the South into something more nearly resembling that of the rest of the Nation. His efforts in that direction were apparent when he was the chairman of the Southern Governors' Conference—and when he was the presiding chairman over the Democratic National Convention in 1960.

Now that he is president of the National Association of Broadcasters, he carries the same uncharitable view of many things and many people of the South. That is his privilege, and we would be the last to stand in his way of sounding off.

But it seemed singularly inappropriate for him to use the annual banquet of the Columbia Chamber of Commerce as an occasion to castigate the South and its spokesmen. We accept, with somewhat qualified gratitude, his differentiation of South Carolina from our sister Southern States. We cannot accept his more general indictment of the South.

Least of all can we accept from him or anyone else the accusation that Southerners are "un-American" in their adherence to values and traditions which have their very origins in the birth of this Nation of ours.

And for him to impute some sort of collective guilt to the South for the assassination of President Kennedy is both inexcusable and insulting.

If he is genuinely concerned with madmen and meanness, he need only look about in the Northern region where he now resides.

The greatest service LeRoy Collins could render the South, and indeed the Nation, would be to use his considerable influence in the world of network broadcasting to throttle those false messiahs of the microphone who glory in misrepresenting all that is decent in Dixie.

[From the Columbia Record, Dec. 5, 1963]

GOVERNOR COLLINS' SPEECH

"A Deep South community does not have to throw itself onto a funeral pyre of hate," the former Governor of Florida, LeRoy Collins, declared in a Columbia speech Tuesday night.

Nor do southerners have to soak themselves in the oil of guilt and set themselves aflame for distant hordes of Saracens to applaud.

Donning the sackcloth of the apologist, he addressed the Greater Columbia Chamber of Commerce on "some thoughts that have been brooding in my mind lately. I do not like it when people speak of southerners as if they are not human parts of the United States," he declared. Then, with his customary urbane eloquence, he proceeded to sharpen the lines of misunderstanding and condemnation.

"For too long we have permitted the South's own worst enemies to speak for it," he said. He might have added, "And too often do the South's own best friends speak against it."

"We have allowed the extremists to speak for the South," the former Governor, now president of the National Association of Broadcasters, continued. "They have done it in the national press and on the national radio and television to such an extent that citizens outside the South would be entitled to wonder if they might not need visas to pass through our region. * * * And I ask you tonight, how long are the majority of southerners going to allow themselves to be caricatured before the Nation by these Claghorns?"

The distortion will continue as long as these extremists, these Claghorns, are the only prosouthern voices to which the national press and Governor Collins' own national broadcasters will listen.

The speaker deplored "Dixie battle cries (that) have been employed to incite sick souls to violence," but he ignored the sources of much of the incitement and preachment of hate which are neither Claghorn nor Southern.

"How many Sunday School children have to be dynamited to death? How many Negro leaders have to be shot in the back? How many Governors have to be shot in the chest? How many Presidents have to be assassinated?" Governor Collins asked, compounding the reckless libel that crime and lawlessness are a hallmark of Southern society.

"It is time the decent people of the South, with all their might and strength," he added, "told the bloody-shirt-wavers to climb down off the buckboards of bigotry." And they should speak loudly enough to be heard afar in the unholy sanctums of intolerance and prejudiced ignorance.

"Too many politicians down our way," the top broadcaster said, "talk defensively of 'States rights' when they and we well know that there can be no such thing as a State's right to default on a national duty." One of the indictments against the South by those who confuse "national duty" with personal ideology is that the South is too American, too patriotic. Where true national duty has been concerned, the people of Dixie have always stood in the forefront and provided a shield against those who would destroy our national character and heritage. They have observed no conflict between loyalty to State and loyalty to Nation.

"Some politicians in other regions of the Nation contend that the South now bears such a stigma before the Nation that it is incapable of producing national leadership," the speaker declared in his conclusion. "And there are even some southerners who parrot the same fallacy."

Yes, Governor, there certainly are.

[From the Charleston (S.C.) News and Courier, Dec. 8, 1963]

BYRNES TAKES ISSUE WITH COLLINS SPEECH

(EDITOR'S NOTE.—The following article is reprinted from the Columbia State:)

James F. Byrnes, in a statement Friday, charged that "if any group has contributed to building a climate of hate it has been the broadcasters."

Mr. Byrnes, former Governor of South Carolina, and Secretary of State, was taking issue with LeRoy Collins, ex-Governor of Florida, who in a Columbia address attributed hate to the South and racial prejudices. Collins is president of the National Association of Broadcasters.

The firing last summer on a Citadel cadet by a young Negro, and the subsequent shot at that institution's president, Gen. Mark Clark, were cited by Mr. Byrnes. "No broadcaster referred to it or denounced it as encouraging a climate of hate," he declared.

Mr. Byrnes refuted the idea that Lee Harvey Oswald was motivated by racial feeling in the killing of President Kennedy. "On the contrary, all the evidence has shown his feelings in favor of the Soviet Government," Mr. Byrnes said.

Following is the text of the statement of Mr. Byrnes:

"Everybody will agree that there should not be developed in any community, or in the country at large, a climate of hatred for an individual or group because of differences in views about political issues. However, Mr. LeRoy Collins spent his time emphasizing that the climate of hate was built up in Birmingham and other southern spots because of race hatred and race prejudices.

"The fact is, in all the thousands of words written about the assassination of President Kennedy, not one witness has offered a statement indicating even that Oswald was motivated by any feeling on the race question. On the contrary, all the evidence has shown his feelings in favor of the Soviet Government which caused him to try to become a citizen of that country and caused him to go to the trouble and expense of advocating Fair Play for Cuba.

"In addition, it is noteworthy that when asked about counsel to represent him, he stated he did not want any Texas lawyer but that he would like to have Mr. Abt, of New York, who first came into public view as a close friend of Alger Hiss and who has been the subject of investigation by some Government agencies.

"Oswald was young. He could not have personally known Abt. His immediately expressed desire to have this lawyer represent him would indicate that he has knowledge of and probably has sympathy with the man who, like Hiss and Lee Pressman, have been active in the causes sympathetic with the Communists.

"The truth is, if any group has contributed to building a climate of hate, it has been the broadcasters, because they have consistently misrepresented the South and a people who are misrepresented necessarily resent such treatment.

"The press carried a statement last summer that a Citadel cadet while driving a young lady home from a dance at the Citadel, was fired upon by a young Negro. The bullet entered his jaw and was removed from his chin. No broadcaster talked about that being due to the climate of hate that was built up.

"Within 48 hours after that incident, Gen. Mark Clark, a distinguished general in the U.S. Army and a hero of the attempted assassination driving to the Citadel was fired upon. The bullet struck his car but fortunately he was not hurt. The press carried a statement of the attempted assassination but so far as we can recall, no broadcaster referred to it or denounced it as encouraging a climate of hate.

"When Oswald, who admittedly is a Communist sympathizer, and who gave the hammer and sickle salute (clenched fist) in the Dallas jail, killed the President of the United States, his act is attributed by Mr. Collins, to a climate of hate growing out of race prejudice."

[From the Charleston (S.C.) News and Courier, Dec. 8, 1963]

ORANGEBURG STATION RAPS COLLINS SPEECH

ORANGEBURG.—Radio station WDIX here yesterday took issue with a speech made by former Florida Gov. LeRoy Collins to the Columbia Chamber of Commerce.

The editorial stated that Mr. Collins said many extreme and radical things but used the time to comment on only one point made by the president of the National Association of Broadcasters. Mr. Collins said: "The assassination of President Kennedy was fostered by 'Dixie battle cries which incite sick souls to violence.' "

The full text of the editorial follows:

"Speaker at the annual meeting of the Greater Columbia (S.C.) Chamber of Commerce was the Honorable Mr. LeRoy Collins, former Governor of Florida and now the president of the National Association of Broadcasters. The Associated Press reports the broadcasters' president as saying that the assassination of President Kennedy was fostered by "Dixie battle cries which incite sick souls to violence." ' The broadcasters' president said many other extreme and radical things—intolerant and violent things. We will observe only the one thing—that Dixie battle cries fostered the assassination of President Kennedy.

"What Mr. Collins said was equally well said by the three top officers of the Communist Party, U.S.A.—Gus Hall, Elizabeth Gurley Flynn and Benjamin J. Davis—also reported by the Associated Press that they 'called the President's assassination "the ultimate end * * * by the racists and forces of the ultraright," ' the Communist Party, U.S.A. What the Honorable Mr. Collins said and what the top Reds in the United States said, has also been said by the Communist news agency, Tass, since their first release on President Kennedy's death. The Honorable Mr. Collins, it must be noted, is joined by Chief Justice Earl Warren and the Communists, in a similar view. That is the privilege of Chief Justice Warren and the Communists and the Honorable Mr. Collins—to smear the South, the segregationists, and 'unnamed southern politicians' who advocate States rights.

"Thank goodness, not all responsible people—like the Honorable Mr. Collins—aline themselves in the manner he has. For instance, in referring to Supreme Court Justice Warren's statement about the 'forces of hatred and malevolence,' the Chicago Tribune said: 'This perverted thesis may be reduced to an attempt, naked and without apology, to liquidate dissent in the United States.' "

STATEMENT OF WALTER J. BROWN, PRESIDENT OF SPARTAN RADIOCASTING CO. AND FORMER PRESIDENT OF SOUTH CAROLINA BROADCASTERS ASSOCIATION

It was "inappropriate" to use the words of the Columbia State, for Governor Collins to use the annual banquet of the Columbia Chamber of Commerce as an occasion "to castigate the South and its spokesmen."

As a broadcaster, I go further and say Governor Collins broke faith with those of us who broadcast his speech when, without warning, he chose the occasion to impugn the motives of most southern leaders over a statewide broadcast which had been set with the written commitment that "Governor Collins will deal with the Government threat to the broadcasting industry."

In fairness to Governor Collins, it should be said that late in the afternoon he released his speech to news media, and Governor Russell, having seen an advance copy, had the opportunity in his introduction to issue a disclaimer, but the broadcasting stations carrying the broadcast had no such opportunity.

What I resented most about the Governor's speech was his attempt to link opposition to the so-called civil rights program to the tragic assassination of President Kennedy. Everyone knows he was killed by a known Communist and Castro sympathizer. It is so unfair for anyone, whether he be the Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court or president of the National Association of Broadcasters, to contend that opposition by the people of the South or any other section to far-reaching proposals of the civil rights program pending in the Congress was in any way responsible for the trigger that was pulled in Dallas which took the President's life.

No one certainly would want to take from Governor Collins the right to say what he pleases about any subject at any time. However, he is the paid and recognized spokesman for broadcasters. When he makes a blanket indictment against the people of the South and a vast majority of their duly elected Members of Congress, we feel he oversteps his authority and does a disservice to broadcasting.

If Governor Collins wants to come South and talk about "claghorns," "bloody shirt wavers," and riders of "buckboards of bigotry," he should name names. At least this would enable those of us who broadcast his speech to offer equal time.

I know personally most of the southern leaders in Congress, as well as many of our southern Governors. We may not agree with them on all subjects, but none of them falls under the Governor's indictment.

I realize there is a hysteria sweeping the country about civil rights. Perhaps Governor Collins was swept away by this emotional virus when he came to Columbia. But as one broadcaster, I agree with Senator RUSSELL that this civil rights program takes away more liberty than it gives. It deserves calm and deliberate legislative consideration. Governor Collins made no contribution to that end and he made it difficult for those of us who agreed to serve with him in promoting better relations in the Congress for the worthwhile legislative objectives of our association.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN PARCEL OF LAND TO STATE OF DELAWARE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1767) to authorize the Secretary of the Army to convey a certain parcel of land to the State of Delaware, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, it is my desire to cooperate with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] on his bill, S. 1767; but as the author of the so-called Morse formula, I have the obligation of making sure that the Morse formula is not violated in this case.

Subsections (a) and (b) of section 2, on pages 2 and 3 of the bill, contain provisions which relate directly to the Morse formula.

Subsection (a) of section 2 would not violate the formula if this subsection calls for the reconveyance of lands which were ceded—gratuitously conveyed—to the United States by the State of Delaware in 1873.

Therefore, first, I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware if it is correct that the lands described in section 2(a) were acquired by the United States and the State of Delaware without compensation in 1873?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. That is correct.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a copy of an act of the legislature as passed in Dover, Del., February 5, 1873, in which this land was ceded to the U.S. Government for a specific purpose.

There being no objection, the act was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Laws of Delaware, vol. 14, pt. 2, 1873]

CHAPTER 356 OF PUBLIC LANDS

An act to cede certain lands to the United States of America

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Delaware in General Assembly met, That William D. Waples, N. W. Hickman, and Dr. D. H. Houston, of Sussex County, be and they are hereby appointed commissioners on the part of the State of Delaware, and they, or a majority of them, are hereby authorized and empowered, in conjunction with any agent or person appointed by the President of the United States, or by the Secretary of War, to locate and fix the boundaries of any quantity of land belonging to the State of Delaware, not exceeding 2,100 feet front and 3,000 feet deep, from low water mark situated and lying on the Delaware Bay, southeast of the old mole, usually called the Government Mole, and between said old mole and the point of Cape Henlopen, and the land belonging to the State of Delaware, located and designated by the boundaries to be fixed and determined by the commissioners aforesaid in conjunction with the agent or person to be appointed as aforesaid by the President of the United States or by the Secretary of War, and all claim, title and right of soil and jurisdiction of the State of Delaware in, to, or over the same is hereby ceded to and vested in the United States in perpetuity; and that a plot of the land so located and hereby ceded as aforesaid be made and recorded in the office of the recorder in and for Sussex County: Provided, That the sovereignty and jurisdiction of this State shall extend over the land hereby ceded to the United States so far as that all civil and criminal process issued under any law of this State may be executed in any part of said lands and buildings or structures thereon erected.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that the above cession of land and jurisdiction hereby made is upon the express condition that defenses, to be built by the United States at the Delaware breakwater harbor, shall be constructed thereon.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that the north end of Reedy Island, in New Castle County, Del., not to exceed 50 acres, and also the ice harbor constructed on the east side thereof, be and the same are hereby ceded to the United States; and all claim, title, and right of soil and jurisdiction of the State of Delaware in, to, or over the same is hereby ceded to and vested in the United States in perpetuity; and that a plot of the land so located and hereby ceded as aforesaid be made and recorded in the office of the recorder in and for New Castle County: Provided, That the sovereignty and jurisdiction of this State shall extend over the land hereby ceded to the United States so far as that all civil and criminal process issued under any law of this State may be executed in any part of said lands and buildings or structures thereon erected or to be erected.

Passed at Dover, February 5, 1873.

(At this point Mr. INOUYE took the chair as Presiding Officer.)

Mr. MORSE. That being the case, reversion of this excess Federal land is implied, and under the Morse formula no compensation on section 2(a) lands is required. I should like to make this clear, because over the years the Morse formula has been under discussion in the Senate; it goes back to the year 1946. We have had a number of cases in which the Federal Government obtained parcels of land from a State gratuitously, with the understanding that the land would be used for a specific Federal use only. I have always pointed out that the clear implication is, under those circumstances, that when the Federal Government no longer has need of the land for such use, the land should revert to the State, the municipality, or the county that originally donated the land for specific purposes.

I say to the Senator from Delaware—and I am commenting now out of recollection—I am not so sure that some years ago he and I did not discuss the question when he helped me sustain the Morse formula in connection with a piece of property that involved one of these implied reversions.

I know such was the case with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. COOPER] in connection with the type of property or facility that I now mention which was involved in a bill in respect to a veterans hospital in Kentucky. This particular application of the Morse formula—or in these instances the nonapplication of it—has arisen cases that involve veterans hospitals where a city or a State has donated to the Federal Government a rather large tract of land for a veterans hospital. Of course, the State or local officials were happy to bring a veterans hospital into a community, because it is a great economic asset to it. The Federal Government built the hospital and developed the facility, and then discovered that it had much more land than it really needed for the purpose, but having obtained it for that they moved them and melted them down the recovery would not be much.

12/13/63

Since this area is to be turned into a State park it would be most advantageous if the guns could be left. I am not sure they have not been demolished. If not, we will try to persuade the Army to leave them.

Mr. MORSE. So far as those guns are concerned, I believe they would come under the so-called Monument Act, anyway, and would not be involved in the Morse formula.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I do not believe they would either.

Mr. MORSE. I have one further point in respect to the barracks. I hope the Senator will correct me if I am in error, but it is my understanding that if we take into account the amount of money which the Government will get back from Delaware under the terms of the bill—the Senator has already stated it will be at least equal to 50 percent of the fair market value—and if we take into account the small value of the barracks and the limited purposes to which they could be put to use, plus the fact that there is a reverter clause in the bill, if it ever becomes necessary for the Federal Government to take back the property for Federal uses the Government will have the power, and the taxpayers will suffer no loss in respect to the barracks.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I do not think so. As a State we would be delighted for them to clear the barracks and take them away.

Mr. MORSE. I thank the distinguished Senator from Delaware very much for his fine cooperation in regard to this question, because, as he knows, the Senate has increasingly cooperated with me in respect to the application of the formula. Seldom do I have to raise an objection to the violation of this formula, because it has become one of the accepted policies of the Senate, and has resulted, as we know, in a saving of a good many millions of dollars over the years to the taxpayers of the country. I say to the majority leader that not only do I raise no objection to the bill, but I support it.

Mr. BOGGS. Mr. President, I am very happy to join my colleague, the senior Senator from Delaware, in support of this bill, S. 1767, which we have cosponsored.

The merits of the bill are plain: Delaware donated most of the Fort Miles area without cost to the Federal Government during World War II and now wants to recover surplus Government land for use by the public.

The land in question was considered common land for public use for more than 250 years before the Federal Government took it over in 1941.

It is important to emphasize that the State of Delaware will repay the Federal Government the amount it paid for the property in question.

The State of Delaware has drawn up plans for development of the area as Cape Henlopen State Park and as a University of Delaware education center.

My State, Mr. President, is not large as it is, and acquisition of this property will be of great benefit to it.

I strongly urge passage of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Press, Radio, T.V. & Mag.

FORMER GOV. LEROY COLLINS OF FLORIDA—A NEW VOICE IN THE SOUTH

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, earlier this afternoon one of our colleagues expressed disapproval of the speech delivered by the former Governor of Florida, now president of the National Association of Broadcasters, Mr. Leroy Collins. The speech was delivered on December 3, 1963, at the annual meeting of the Greater Columbia Chamber of Commerce, Columbia, S.C.

When I spoke on this subject the other day, during the morning hour, I did not have a copy of the speech. I had only a news account of the speech. I praised the speech most highly as typical of the new voice of the South. It is only fair to Governor Collins, in view of the comments which were made on the floor of the Senate that a copy of that speech, which I have subsequently received, be published at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS BY LEROY COLLINS, PRESIDENT, NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF BROADCASTERS, BEFORE THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE GREATER COLUMBIA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, COLUMBIA, S.C.

It is a high privilege for me to be here in Columbia, and to participate in this Greater Columbia Chamber of Commerce annual meeting of 1963.

I like South Carolina, and I always have. Yours is a State rich in history and exciting in opportunity.

Your distinguished Governor, Donald Russell, who honors us all by his presence here tonight, is a public leader of conspicuous competence and of uncommon dedication.

I would like to add my warm congratulations to all of your chamber of commerce officers and committees. You have had a remarkably successful year; and, while the rank-and-file support of your membership doubtless has been excellent, special praise is due all who have supplied the leadership.

My message this evening is being carried by many broadcasters across this State. I am grateful to them. I also salute them, along with all other broadcasters, for their enormous efforts in reporting to the American people and to the world the story of our Nation in the agony of its trial after the assassination of President Kennedy. As soon as the first dastardly shot was fired in Dallas, response of news broadcasters was immediate. It became complete, and reflected the highest skill and dedication.

This was the free broadcaster at his finest. No one from the Government had to make the slightest move to get him going, or to keep him at his task, or to hold out any hope that his commercial losses would be offset in any way or shared by anyone else. It was his job. And in performing it, he "asked not what the country could do for him, but only what he could do for his country."

I do not believe anyone is more genuinely proud of his southern birth and "raising" than I am. I love this land. Some thoughts have been brooding in my mind lately, especially in the few mad days since the murder of our young President, and I think South Carolina and Columbia are good places for me to talk these out.

Not all of you will agree with what I have to say. This does not trouble me, and it should not trouble you.

I have tried to be a southerner who speaks plainly on sensitive issues, and you are sons and daughters of a State which, from the time of Sumter and Pickens and Calhoun, has been characterized by forthright debate.

Doubtless as you have detected down the years, a number of people in other neighborhoods of America have not always agreed with the forthright talk emerging from South Carolina. But debate, if it is honest and thoughtful, refines the decisions in our Republic and makes them more intelligent.

I have not come to address old grievances. It is the future of the South and of our Nation I wish to take up with you here tonight. And the one is inseparable from the other.

I would hope first that we might consider as our own the creed of our new President, Lyndon Johnson, who, once exasperated by his critics in the Senate when he was the leader of that forum, sought to explain himself in these terms: "I am a freeman, an American, a U.S. Senator, and a Democrat, in that order."

Most of us, when we talk about the South, find the easy things to say. We like to recall the handicaps our region has suffered in the exploitation of its natural resources; the impoverishment which followed the Civil War, and the later unjust and repressive efforts made to thwart our growth and development. Then we like to speak of the happier days of our recent dynamic economic growth and prosperity—of the "new South," a land of vast new opportunities. And these things are all true. We can prove them by the bank deposits, by the new factories, by the lines on the charts, by the clothes we see children wear to school.

We also like to speak of the "new, new South," which glitters with projections of future prosperity almost beyond comprehension. And I firmly believe that you and I will see all this come to pass in our lifetimes.

But let us think together this evening about things more personal than material progress.

I do not like it when people speak of southerners as if they are not human parts of the United States. But the prime reason they do this is that for too long we have permitted the South's own worst enemies to speak for it.

We have allowed the extremists to speak for the South—the very ones against whom we in the South have had to struggle in our towns and in our State capitals for much of the progress we have made.

They have done it in speeches on the floor of Congress which have sounded like anti-American diatribes from some hostile foreign country.

They have done it in the national press and on the national radio and television to such an extent that citizens outside the South would be entitled to wonder if they might not need visas to pass through our region.

And all the while, too many of the rest of us have remained cravenly silent or lamely defensive while Dixie battle cries have been employed to incite sick souls to violence—egged on by the rabble-rousers' call to "stand up and fight."

It is little wonder that other Americans fail to regard us on occasions as being in the mainstream of American life and citizenship.

And I ask you tonight, how long are the majority of southerners going to allow themselves to be caricatured before the Nation by these Claghorns? How many Sunday school children have to be dynamited to death? How many Negro leaders have to be shot in the back? How many Governors have to be shot in the chest? How many Presidents have to be assassinated?

All those evil happenings have been the products of environments where hatred has been preached and lawlessness extolled—environments which you and I know are foreign to the South for which we care deeply and are repugnant to most southerners.

It is time the decent people in the South, with all their might and strength, told the bloody shirt wavers to climb down off the buckboards of bigotry. It is time we started speaking and acting together more like loyal Americans and self-respecting southerners.

You here in South Carolina have shown in many ways that you understand—that you are moving forward.

The cities of Oxford, Birmingham, Little Rock, New Orleans, Dallas—and Philadelphia and Chicago, for that matter—are not to be found in the State of South Carolina.

And that fact, as all of you well know, is no accident of geography.

It is because the leadership of this community and this State reached a rational decision that South Carolina was not going to allow bigotry and lawlessness to pervade your society and pollute your bloodstream.

There has been no need for Federal marshals patrolling your university campuses, thanks to the good sense and respect for law among the people of this State.

You have demonstrated to the rest of the Nation, which includes the rest of the South, and to yourselves, that a Deep South community does not have to throw itself onto a funeral pyre of hate.

Yes, there are forces at work in the South—men and women who do not have their faces turned backward, stalwart men and women who have not received the headlines and public notices which have been accorded the more sensational examples of lack of progress, but who have been in the vanguard of progress nonetheless.

There is a story which came out of World War I. I do not vouch for its literal accuracy. In fact, there are many reasons for doubting its truth in detail. But its message rings true.

Three American soldiers—one a Protestant, one a Catholic, and one a Jew—became fast friends as they marched and fought together in France. They entered into a pact committing the survivors to do everything possible for the family of any one of them who might be killed in action.

In a battle soon afterward, on the outskirts of a small French village, the Protestant boy was killed. The only place of worship was a little Catholic church. The Catholic boy and the Jewish boy asked the priest of this little church for permission to have their friend buried in the church cemetery adjoining. But when the priest learned that the dead boy was not Catholic, he regretfully declined, pointing out that under the regulations of the church the cemetery had been established and blessed for the burial of Catholics only.

After considerable discussion of the point, the priest suggested as an alternative that the burial be made just outside the fence of the cemetery and said, "Here we will be sure to see that the grave is cared for and not desecrated, just as faithfully as we care for the graves on the inside."

The arrangement was worked out, and the two boys who survived went on through the war. When peace came, they returned to their homes in the United States.

They had the understanding, however, that 3 years from the date their friend was killed they would meet in the French village and together visit the grave.

When this day came, they met as agreed and soon came to the little church. But when they arrived just outside the fence where they had buried their friend, they were shocked to see no sign of the grave. Angrily, they found the old priest and scolded him for his neglect.

Then the old father took the two young men out into the cemetery and led them down the inside of the fence. There was the grave just as the soldiers had left it. Then he said, "You know, some time after you left, I went back and studied our regulations further. I found it to be very clear that while I was not permitted to allow the burial inside the fence, there was nothing which prevented me from later moving the fence over."

Fellow southerners, we can talk about our mores, our local laws and customs, the low standards of many Negroes, but the time has come when we must move some fences.

The soul of man is beyond the reach of a court order or a legislative act. But while courts and laws cannot change the innermost dictates of the human conscience, courts and laws most certainly can control the acts of men.

This task of assuring racial justice is no easy one for us in the South—nor is it for those in the North. But Americans everywhere must recognize that this is a national commitment and a national necessity. It is not going away.

The advancement of all rights of national citizenship, as we well know, will occur with the overt aid of the National Government if local citizens and local and State governments do not move effectively to accomplish this on their own.

Yet, too many politicians down our way have been hoodwinking the people on the civil rights issue. They have been trying to pretend, for their own personal political advantage, that the changes which are coming over the hill really are not there. They talk defensively of States rights when they and we well know that there can be no such thing as a State's right to default on a national duty.

Any rational man who looks at the horizon and sees the South of the future segregated is simply seeing a mirage.

"That all men are created equal" is not an empty cliche. It was not put in our Declaration of Independence by Jefferson merely to stir our revolutionary forces to greater sacrifice.

It is a mighty idea that is the keystone of our Nation's whole meaning and perpetual commitment. It is the basic idea which supports the dignity of man as an individual.

It is an idea that can never be stopped—not by custom—not by prejudice—not by hate—not by murder—not by armies—not by any mortal force.

It may be thwarted—it may be delayed—its triumph may be at great cost and sacrifice—but it will keep coming on and on, for it has the invincibility of simple truth, justice, and right.

Aside from human attitudes the most basic changes which must occur to aid us in resolving our racial difficulties is the improvement of the standards of living of all underprivileged Americans. The taproot of future progress is greatly expanded and improved public education for all American youngsters.

While in the Florida Legislature many years ago, I undertook the leadership for the passage of legislation known as the minimum foundation program. Under it, the State government guaranteed to every child in Florida, regardless of where he lived or how poor his county, a public education of no less quality than certain prescribed standards. This has worked quite well, and other States have developed similar plans.

There was talk at the time that a program like this would rob local communities of local interest and influence, but this did not turn out to be the case.

Now, I feel that we should mount in this country a massive national minimum foundation plan under which the nation would assure to every child an education adequate to the full development of his talents.

This would call for the supplementing of local resources in proportion to need. It could enable us to close our educational gap and bring to an end our vicious cycle of ignorance breeding more ignorance with resulting impoverishment of body, intellect and spirit.

This is not only a national need; I say it is a necessity. We must do this to enable the nation better to meet its adversaries in a hostile and competitive world. But, more importantly, we must do it to provide for American children a seedbed of simple justice which is now their rightful heritage, although for millions it has not been their inheritance.

Our country has a right to expect the best from all of us, regardless of where we live.

And just as it is wrong for anyone, including some southerners, to sell the South short, by the same token we in the South have no right to go off in a corner and sulk.

Southerners, like Americans from every section of this land, have a solemn obligation to make whatever general and unique contributions they can to the national good.

It is high time the South rid itself of any political inferiority complex.

Leadership in the South—business, professional, educational and political—instead of being rejected out of hand nationally must be regarded as a valuable resource in the role which America must play in meeting the challenge of history.

Some politicans in other regions of the Nation contended that the South now bears such a stigma before the Nation that it is incapable of producing national leadership. And there are even some southerners who parrot the same fallacy.

After all, where was this republic founded? By whom were our Nation's principles of freedom and individual dignity hammered out?

So much of this came from the minds of Washington and Jefferson and Henry. The young republic was nourished by the philosophies of Madison and Monroe and Jackson. Southerners all.

The South should be bright and optimistic indeed, as we face the future.

To become a more vital part of the Nation's effort for the fulfillment of national goals will not demean our posture as States, but enhance it. It will not be a retreat, but an advance. It will not be a defeat, but a victory.

My fellow countrymen, a few long days ago our young President was struck down on the street of an American city. Good men have differences, and many Americans had differences with John Kennedy. But I do not know of any fellow countryman who, after rendezvousing with his soul, would not share the sweet dream of John Kennedy for a better America or his dedication to move his dreams toward reality. He was the unusual, heroic person in politics who thought not in terms of years, but in terms of generations and of what America must be for our children and the children of our children.

Just a few days before his death, President Kennedy was talking to one of our leading southern editors—a very close friend—William Baggs of the Miami News, about the year A.D. 2000, and of what we, in our generation, must plant and plow up to make this country right for its sons and daughters in A.D. 2000.

I say to you tonight that above all else it is the moral duty of our generation to plow under racial injustice everywhere in the United States and to plant new opportunities for the generations which will come along after us and reside in this green part of our old planet.

This has not been anything like the speech that last week I expected to make here.

But the other day, as I followed the caisson drawn by the six white horses to Arlington's green hillside and listened to the bugler's mournful cry and saw the flame lighted on the grave as if to hold back at least a tiny part of the approaching darkness, my conscience grew heavy with the long promise of history: "Beyond the sundown is tomorrow's wisdom; today is going to be a long, long ago."

Oh, God of all mankind, help us to find that wisdom. Help us to make today count for more than its sorrows.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, some of the editorial material which was inserted in the RECORD this afternoon sought to cast reflection on the mental stability of Governor Collins. That is an old smear technique. It is particularly a smear technique used by yellow journalists, whose number is legion.

One need only read this truly great speech of Governor Collins to realize that we have here a mentality which is far ahead of the bigotry that characterizes so much of his opposition, and that any reflection upon him by yellow journalism is to his credit and not to his discredit.

I once again praise Governor Collins for his courage and for his foresight and for his challenge not only to the South, but also to all Americans.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I join in the praise of Governor Collins. It was my privilege last Sunday to participate in a seminar and convocation in Los Angeles under the auspices of the Fund for the Republic and the Center for Study of Democratic Institutions. I heard Governor Collins on the subject of federalism, and the relationships between Federal and State governments. It was a masterful address, thoughtful and provocative, and it indicated a sense of foresight and imagination that qualifies this man for the title of great leader. I am delighted that the Senator from Oregon has given him due credit and praise, because he deserves it. He is a marvelous public servant and a fine citizen.

EDUCATION LEGISLATION

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, earlier this afternoon, because the Senate was extremely pressed for time, I did not, during my presentation of the conference report, find the time to say all I wished to say.

Yesterday and again today I had expressed my deep appreciation and thanks to the Members of the Senate conference and their great help to me in finally succeeding in that conference to come forth with an acceptable bill.

I wish to thank again the chairman of the full committee, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], whose help to me has been of inestimable value. I also thank the majority leader the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD]. I counseled with him time and again. I should think that he would have grown weary of my requests for counseling with him in handling these education bills.

He arranged the schedule in the Senate for my convenience time and time again when we thought it was most propitious to offer these two major bills. He cooperated, and spoke to my conferees about postponing action on the higher education bills on the floor of the Senate until a conference report was adopted by the conferees. I want him to know how appreciative I am.

I also wish to thank our colleagues on the House side. I am satisfied that one need only read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for yesterday, from beginning to end, which I have done, to realize that no vocational bill would have come out of the House by way of conference acceptance had it not been for the leadership of the Representative from New York [Mr. POWELL]. He performed efficiently and effectively during the conference. We were deadlocked time and time again, and time and time again he was most helpful in findings areas of agreement which would make it possible for us to resolve our disagreement.

I thank him very much, indeed.

I also thank the chairman of the subcommittee in the House from which subcommittee the House vocational bill came in the first place, the gentleman from Kentucky, Representative PERKINS.

I am not trying to give undue credit, or to draw any lines of distinction, because there was no one in favor of the bill on the House conference side who was not of great help to me.

I mention Representative BRADEMAS of Indiana, and Representative GREEN of Oregon. Some of the greatest help came to me from Representative LANDRUM of Georgia. I know the Senate enjoys a chuckle now and then. All one has to do is read the debate in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this morning to enjoy a chuckle. I enjoyed one this morning when I read that debate. Apparently Representative LANDRUM was having a little difficulty with some of his southern colleagues in regard to the bill. In effect, he said, as the RECORD shows, that if the Representative from Georgia can find himself in agreement with the Senator from Oregon, and if both can sign the same report, it cannot be a bad report.

It was that wonderful attitude on the part of Representative LANDRUM that was so helpful in getting the bill adopted.

There is not one of them to whom I do not wish to pay my respects.

I particularly wish to mention, however, Representative POWELL and Representative PERKINS. I mention these two men because they had the official responsibility of leadership on the House side.

Representative POWELL was the chairman of the House conferees, and Representative PERKINS was the chairman of the subcommittee from which the vocational bill came in the first place.

I know whereof I speak when I point out that the education bills, about which the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD] spoke, have resulted in Congress—and it is Congress, not individuals—making a record in the field of education which has not been equaled in a hundred years, which has not been equaled since the Morrill Act of 1862. The President of the United States was quite right in pointing out that historic fact.

I am greatly indebted to all of them for their assistance in bringing that record to pass.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I wish to express one Senator's appreciation of the great work that has been undertaken and accomplished by the distinguished senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE]. The program of higher education, vocational education, the extension of national defense education, and education for impacted areas, that has been adopted by Congress is the most comprehensive, far-reaching, generous program of Federal aid to education that this Nation has ever known. It stands alongside the great Morill Act and the Land-Grant College Act, two of the great programs of the 1860's.

The Higher Education Act surely will bear the title of the Morse-Green Act, because the two distinguished citizens of Oregon, Senator MORSE and Representative GREEN, had so much to do with these legislative achievements. I commend both of them.

I was talking with the Senator from Oregon today. In our conversation, he told me that he introduced his first bill on higher education in 1947. I have always known that the Senator from Oregon is a tenacious, persevering, and persistent gentleman. I have tangled with him in debate on occasion. That is an exhilarating experience that ought not to be tried too often. I commend him on his tenacity and perseverance, because while it took 16 years for the Senator to accomplish his objective, he has been able to achieve it. It is a splendid record.

So far as vocational education is concerned, we are all indebted to the leadership of our late President, who admonished us and advised us and sent us the message on vocational education, expanding its activity and its scope. But the bill also had the guiding hand of the Senator from Oregon, and he has been most generous.

The bill has also received the guidance of the chairman of the committee, the distinguished senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], and the other members of the committee. But I am sure the Senator from Oregon would agree with me that the honors for the bill ought to be shared by many.

I hope that when the President signs the bill, and when he speaks of it as the Higher Education Act, he will refer to it as the Morse-Green Act; and that when he signs the vocational education bill, he will refer to it as the Powell-Morse-Perkins Act.

It seems to me that that would be according just and proper honor to those who have done so much toward the enactment of that measure.

I salute the Senator from Oregon for his singular achievement.

Mr. MORSE. I appreciate the graciousness of the Senator from Minnesota. Although he is not a member of my subcommittee, he is the Democratic whip of the Senate. I have already paid my thanks to the majority leader; but the whip knows that he, too, has participated in many of these conversations. He has been instrumental in helping to bring these bills into a position so that they could be passed. I thank him from the bottom of my heart.

EXEMPTION OF CERTAIN TERMINAL LEASES FROM PENALTIES UNDER THE SHIPPING ACT OF 1916

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 751, S. 2317.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 2317) to amend the provisions of section 15 of the Shipping Act, 1916, to provide for the exemption of certain terminal leases from penalties.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Montana.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce, with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 15 of the Shipping Act, 1916 (46 U.S.C. 814), be amended by inserting at the end thereof the following: "Provided, however, That the penalty provisions of this section shall not apply to leases, licenses, assignments, or other agreements of similar character for the use of terminal property or facilities which were entered into before the date of enactment of this Act, and, if continued in effect beyond said date, submitted to the Federal Maritime Commission for approval prior to or within ninety days after the enactment of this Act, unless such leases, licenses, assignments, or other agreements for the use of terminal facilities are disapproved, modified, or canceled by the Commission and are continued in operation without regard to the Commission's action thereon. The Commission shall promptly approve, disapprove, cancel, or modify each such agreement in accordance with the provisions of this section."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 2317) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an excerpt from the report (No. 770), explaining the purpose of the bill.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PURPOSE OF THE BILL

Section 15 of the Shipping Act, 1916, imposes civil penalties of up to $1,000 for each day an agreement required by that section to be filed with the Federal Maritime Commission is in effect prior to Commission approval. S. 2317, as reported with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, would amend section 15 of the Shipping Act, 1916, so as to exempt from the penalty provisions of that section leases, licenses, assignments, or other agreements of similar character for the use of marine terminal property or facilities entered into prior to the date of enactment of this bill. However, those agreements for the use of terminal facilities that continue in effect beyond the date of enactment would be required to be filed within 90 days with the Federal Maritime Commission in order to be within the amnesty provided by this bill. Any such agreement that was continued in effect without regard to cancellation, modification, or disapproval by the Federal Maritime Commission would subject the parties to that agreement to civil penalties under section 15 of up to $1,000 for each day the agreement was in effect prior to Commission approval. Any agreement subject to the filing requirements of section 15 entered into subsequent to the date of enactment would not be included in the amnesty to be afforded by S. 2317.

DISCUSSION OF THE BILL

The Federal Maritime Commission, charged with administration of the Shipping Act and more knowledgeable as to marine terminal problems than any other governmental body, has requested this legislation. Under section 15, agreements between persons subject to the Shipping Act which involve "fixing or regulating transportation rates or fares; giving or receiving special rates, accommodations, or other special privileges or advantages; controlling, regulating, preventing, or destroying competition, * * * or in any manner providing for an exclusive, preferential, or cooperative working arrangement" must be filed with the Commission, and parties to the agreement are subject to penalties of up to $1,000 for each day the agreement is in effect prior to compliance and Commission approval. Until 1959 it had never been assumed that lease-type agreements for the use of terminal facilities were within that language, nor had the Federal Maritime Board ever contended that such agreements were subject to section 15.

The Federal Maritime Board (predecessor of the Federal Maritime Commission) changed this situation in 1959 by determining that a lease-type arrangement between Baton Rouge Port Commission and Cargill, Inc., was subject to the terms of section 15. This determination was upheld in Baton Rouge Port Commission v. United States (287 F. 2d 86 (5th Cir. 1961), cert. den., 368 U.S. 985 (1962)).

Leases of terminal facilities usually contain requirements that the lessee operate the facilities in accord with specified standards and often grant future rights to the lessee. The Baton Rouge case involved a lease which required the lessee to charge rates competitive with and not greater than charged at other gulf ports, and afforded the lessee a right of first refusal to lease additional facilities. It is the presence of such covenants that has brought lease-type agreements within the requirements of section 15, even though for over 40 years such provisions had never been considered within the scope of that section.

Immediately following the Baton Rouge decision, port authorities began filing lease-type agreements, some of which had been in effect for a number of years, and others of which had terminated in years past.

The committee bill, in the nature of a substitute, is as follows:

"That section 15 of the Shipping Act, 1906 (46 U.S.C. 814), be amended by inserting at the end thereof the following: 'Provided, however, That the penalty provisions of this section shall not apply to leases, licenses, assignments or other agreements of similar character for the use of terminal property or facilities which were entered into before the date of enactment of this Act, and, if continued in effect beyond said date, submitted to the Federal Maritime Commission for approval prior to or within ninety days after the enactment of this Act, unless such leases, licenses, assignments or other agreements for the use of terminal facilities are disapproved, modified, or cancelled by the Commission and are continued in operation without regard to the Commission's action thereon. The Commission shall promptly approve, disapprove, cancel, or modify each such agreement in accordance with the provisions of this section.' "

Although incorporating three technical changes, S. 2317, as reported, in no way departs from the intent and purpose of the bill as introduced. These changes were advocated and supported by all witnesses at the hearing, including the Federal Maritime Commission.

The first change is that agreements within the amnesty be described as "leases, licenses, assignments, or other agreements of similar character for the use of terminal property or facilities" rather than merely "leases, licenses, or assignments" of such facilities. This change was adopted in order to assure that all agreements intended to be within S. 2317 would receive that benefit even though they are not labeled as a lease, license, or assignment, or considered such under strict property concepts. It is intended that the amnesty apply to agreements involving a conveyance of some interest in terminal facilities, even though not technically leases, licenses, or assignments, if of a character similar to such arrangements.

The second change from the bill as introduced is that the amnesty be applied to all agreements entered into prior to the date of enactment rather than prior to the arbitrary date of October 1, 1963, as originally provided. The date of enactment seems a more logical cutoff date, and technical problems that would be raised in the case of a lease entered into before October 1, 1963, and expiring after that date yet prior to the date of enactment are avoided.

The final change from the bill as introduced is that only agreements continuing in effect beyond the date of enactment are required to be filed with the Federal Maritime Commission. The bill as introduced would have required all lease-type agreements not previously filed and approved be submitted to the Federal Maritime Commission, even though such agreements may have terminated many years ago.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY NOON

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business tonight, it adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE ANNOUNCEMENT REGARDING CLOSING OF DEFENSE PLANTS

Mr. KEATING. Mr. President, more and more angles are coming to light in

Press, Radio, T.V. & Movies

NEW YORK CHAPTER
THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE

NEGRO PRESS DIGEST
December 17, 1963

Compiled & Edited by Mrs. M. J. Kleinfeld and Mrs. Louise Levinson

Contents

AFTER THE ASSASSINATION	P. 1
RALPH BUNCHE	P. 2
BUSINESS AND MARKETING	P. 2
CHURCHES AND RELIGION	P. 5
CIVIL RIGHTS BILL	P. 6
EDUCATION	P. 7
EISENHOWER'S STATEMENT	P. 11
EMPLOYMENT AND UNIONS	P. 11
INTERNATIONAL	P. 13
MINORITY GROUPS	P. 14
MISSISSIPPI	P. 14
NEGRO RIGHTS GROUPS	P. 15
NEGRO LEADERSHIP	P. 16
POLITICS	P. 17
PREFERENTIAL TREATMENT	P. 18
THE PRESS	P. 20
RACE THEORY	P. 20
U.S. STEEL	P. 21
VOTING	P. 21
XMAS BOYCOTTS	P. 23
MISCELLANEOUS	P. 23

published by
The Community Information Committee
Robert L. Pelz, Chairman

NEGRO PRESS DIGEST

Statement of Purpose

The Negro Press Digest is published for the purpose of providing its readers with news and views of Negro newspapers and news magazines circulated in New York City. The Digest is not intended to present a cross-section of the content of the publications it reviews but focuses upon articles dealing with such matters as civil rights, civil liberties and intergroup relations. Emphasis is given to articles of local interest and national consequence.

News that has been adequately treated, in the judgment of the editors, in the daily press or on the broadcasting media is not duplicated in the Digest unless the Negro press reports such news from a distinctly different point of view.

The New York Chapter of The American Jewish Committee hopes that this publication will help fill an important need in intergroup relations, which is: improved communications bringing fuller knowledge of the problems, aspirations and frustrations of the Negro community as expressed in their press. This periodical, therefore, is designed to foster greater understanding and thereby further the development of truly effective human relations efforts.

-- Robert L. Pelz, Chairman
Community Information Committee
New York Chapter
The American Jewish Committee

AFTER THE ASSASSINATION

CHICAGOANS PAY JFK TRIBUTE

Chicago Daily Defender (November 26)

The Defender's many readers flooded the office with letters and the Editor felt they should be shared. "I am glad I am a Negro today. I do not share the white races' guilt in any way....", says one. "The challenge has been put to America to take up the truth with dedicated devotion to the proposition that all men are born free", says another. "I only hope that the people are able to extend the work of our late President", says a third. "I know I speak for all Negroes when I say that he was a wonderful inspiration to us all.. to be able to straighten up our shoulders and say to each other, forward."

WE GO ON!

Amsterdam News - Editorial (November 30)

This Nation, under God and John F. Kennedy, has progressed further in the past three years toward the brotherhood of man than it had during all the years prior to the time John F. Kennedy was sworn into office. The American people have no other choice but to rededicate themselves to the ideals for which he lived, and to redouble their efforts to bring about the type of world for which he worked so magnificently. Let's start with President Lyndon Johnson and help complete the work of one of our greatest Presidents.

JFK KEPT PROMISES HE MADE TO NEGROES

New York Courier - Article by George E. Barbour (November 30)

As Presidential candidate, the late Mr. Kennedy was interviewed by this reporter concerning what he would do for civil rights and without hesitancy said he would use executive orders and the power of the presidency to advance and secure rights due the American Negro. He never wavered and in appointments, speeches, application of power; secured direct benefits for the Negro, unparalled in modern history.

OUR VERY OWN

Amsterdam News - Column: Another Angle by James L. Hicks (Nov. 30)

In a tragic time like this, when one of the most beloved Presidents we've ever had has been cut down by an assassin's bullet, it is hard to look the American people in the face and ask them to share the blame.. and yet.. it is precisely because of our unwillingeness to face what is obvious, that our President is dead. This country has spawned Oswald, Faubus, Wallace, Ross and De La Beckwith. When John F. Kennedy died, a little bit of America died with him. In truth, a little bit of America died when Emmett Till was lynched, when Medgar Evers was shot, when four little girls in Alabama died.. and when a night club owner in Dallas took the law into his hands.. The lawless examples we set for children make other nations shudder in horror.

B'KLYN CLERGY WEIGHS LBJ

Amsterdam News (November 30)

6 Brooklyn and Queens Negro ministers active in civil rights, have linked the assassination of President Kennedy with his stand on civil rights and his attempt to heal the division created by his drive. They thought President Johnson might rise to become a valiant fighter for civil rights but wondered whether he would have the same objectivity in appointments of Negroes and maintain the rapport on the level of his predecessor.

RALPH BUNCHE

POWELL AND MR. X BLACKJACK BUNCHE - Amsterdam News (November 2)

'WELCOME BACK TO NEGRO RACE' ADAM POWELL TELLS RALPH BUNCHE
Chicago Daily Defender (November 6)

ADAM, MALCOLM JAB BUNCHE - New York Courier (November 16)

Dr. Ralph Bunche, who had strongly criticized Rep. Adam Powell and Black Muslim leader Malcolm X as "carriers of a black form of racial virus", was in turn bitterly attacked by the two. Dr. Bunche was "welcomed" sarcastically back into the ranks of Negroes and was accused of making statements in order to retain his job.

MALCOLM X AND ADAM POWELL

Amsterdam News - Column: Home Plate by Jackie Robinson (November 16)

Two Negro leaders seem to accomplish mis-leadership in statements which gain headlines. Adam Clayton Powell and Malcolm X attacked one of the world's most honorable citizens.. Dr. Bunche. Although Dr. Ralph Bunche is supposed to remain aloof from racial problems in the United States, he has on a number of occasions let the world know just how he feels about prejudice here. Nevertheless, Malcolm X criticized Dr. Bunche for "saying what he is supposed to say" because of the "job the white man gave him". Malcolm owes a great deal more to white people than Dr. Bunche ever will. As for Powell's crack about not having heard from Dr. Bunche since the Forest Hills tennis club episode.. Dr. Bunche could have used his influence to get his son admitted but that is exactly what he did NOT want. He wanted to throw the spolight on the brand of intolerance which would deny even a prominent Negro recognition. Dr. Bunche has a record which speaks for itself. It would help the Negro cause if Dr. Powell and Malcolm X had one twentieth of his integrity.

BUSINESS AND MARKETING

THE NEGRO MARKET - CENTER FOR RESEARCH IN MARKETING

New York Courier - By Claude H. Hall (October 19)

The continuing study of purchase behavior in the Negro market is an important aspect of the work of the Center for Research in Marketing. Marketing is a highly technical process. The consumer has a wide choice. The most attractive package, then, is likely to sell faster than its competitors. In the Negro market there are numerous areas of sensitivity that play havoc with the sales charts. Personally, I would never buy a box of Aunt Jemima Pancake or Uncle Ben's Rice. And I have little respect for any Negro who does. If the horse and buggy can find no place in the jet age, neither can Aunt Jemima and Uncle Ben.

2 POLICIES OR 1?

Amsterdam News - Column by Jackie Robinson (October 26)

An agency which represents the Robinson-Patterson Homes, a development with which Floyd Patterson and I are connected, submitted ad copy to The New York Post. The Post refused to run the ad unless the words "integrated community" and our pictures were deleted. The New York Mirror and The Amsterdam News ran the ad as submitted. I once wrote a column for The New York Post until I asked for a leave of absence to campaign for Nixon. I was given permanent leave because (I was told) the paper could not have a columnist who was active in politics. However the Post continued to run the column of Mrs. Roosevelt who was actively involved in politics at all times. The Post could be prejudiced against ME. But it could mean that the Post might be running real estate ads from advertisers who do not want integration in their developments, or advertisers who do not want Negroes in their resorts.. I don't care whether the Post likes me.. but I do care when a newspaper preaches integration - which helps build liberal and Negro circulation - and practices the opposite when it pays off financially. I invite an answer.

BUCK AND BALLOT

Amsterdam News - Column: Home Plate by Jackie Robinson (November 2)

A by-product of the Revolution is the heartening sign that some giant companies are demonstrating an awareness of and respect for the Negro market. Balantine Beer people employed Negroes in top positions with responsibilities instead of window-dressing, have used Negro models, and Negro sports personalities long before the Revolution.... The Woolworth stores, after the demonstrations quieted down, went all-out to desegregate their lunch counters. Not only that, but they have scouts out hunting down white collar and managerial material in southern communities. The buck and the ballot are our most potent possessions with which we can punish our enemies and reward our friends.

A TOUCH OF REALISM - Editorial

NEGRO BUSINESS GROWTH SEEN AS ECONOMIC MUSCLE IN RIGHTS FIGHT

Both the above from the New York Courier (November 9)

We welcome the organization of the Interracial Council for Business Opportunity and its program to stimulate the development of Negro-owned businesses in New York City. The program includes encouraging Negro students to prepare for business careers, helping them find jobs, financial advice and organization of a credit union. Narrowing this enterprise to the Negro community where opportunities are restricted to a small area of the consuming public is to be regretted. No real progress will be made until Negro-owned businesses are located in the general market place. Any lesser effort will be just another form of jim-crowism. When there is no real economic power, there is unlikely to be any other kind.

'FAIR PRESENTATION' OF NEGRO ADS NEEDED FOR THEIR BUSINESS

New York Courier (November 16)

Roy Wilkins told the eastern conference of the American Association of Advertising Agencies that they oweit to their clients to take notice of the effectiveness of the Negro selective buying campaigns, aimed at securing equal job opportunity. Negro consumers like to buy where Negroes can get employment and with businesses which do not distort the Negro image or ignore them. He advised that their ad copy should give "fair presentation" to the Negro. Another speaker described the Negro market as an awakened giant and said that effective advertising must be directed to media that sympathize with Negro aspirations.

THE NEGRO MARKET

New York Courier - Column by Claude H. Hall (November 23)

The Negro, whatever his weaknesses or his strengths, is thoroughly American - having no barriers of language, custom or religion and no "old country". He seeks to achieve integration through the use of his economic power - 27 billion dollars worth a year, according to Times Magazine. He expects to be recognized as an important consumer by industry. The failure of a manufacturer to protect and expand whatever equity he has in the Negro market may result in a sales decline.

LOCALS PLAN 'CASH-IN' AS BUSINESS VENTURE

New York Courier (November 23)

Calling upon Negro women to "carry the ball, since Negro men have failed to do anything of consequence in the field of mutual investments", Miss Wilhelmina Drake of Special Markets, a Negro investment firm, presented a project for a Million Dollar Club of 100 women, which would amass $100,000, get a small business loan and go into business as landlords, store or restaurant owners, etc.

ARA GIVES $100,000 TO ASSIST NEGRO BUSINESSES

Jet (November 28)

A unique project to streamline Negro businesses and furnish technical advice to permit owners to survive in an integrated market has been launched in Philadelphia, Pa., with U.S. backing. The strides toward integration threaten to put out of business many Negro-owned establishments including hotels, tailoring shops, groceries and restaurants in major cities. The Area Redevelopment Administration granted $100,000 for operation of the project in its first year.

NBC SHUNS DIXIE BOWL: SHOWS BUSINESS HOW TO FIGHT BIAS

Jet (November 28)

Because of continued barring of Negroes from the annual Blue-Gray Bowl in Montgomery, Ala., TV and radio coverage of the 26-year-old event has been cancelled by the National Broadcasting Company in an agreement with national sponsors, the Chrysler Corporation and the Gillette Safety Razor Company. This is a fine example of how corporate influence can be brought to bear in the interest of racial justice.. a point which did not escape the outraged Governor Wallace.

CHURCHES AND RELIGION

OUR ALLIES!

Amsterdam News - Editorial (October 19)

We are proud to say that Negroes in the fight for civil rights have been joined by many groups.. all of which deserve commendation. We must reserve a special accolade for the participation of the Jew who, from the rabbi to the youngster, wades into the fight as if the outcome of the battle depends on him alone.

RELIGION AND RACE

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (November 13)

A statistical study by the National Council of Churches indicates that a great majority of the established Protestant churches do not consider Negroes for membership. A chart with the breakdown on racial exclusion shows the proportion of Negroes and Jews (sic) that the Protestant churches bar from their congregations. So large an incidence of racialism in these churches is appalling, even though their Commission on Religion and Race have recently given strong support to the civil rights movement.

JEWS FAIL TO SUPPORT NEGROES, SAYS RABBI
Chicago Daily Defender (November 19)

"JEWS PART OF POWER, HELP NEGROES", RABBI URGES - Jet (December 5)

NEGROES, LIKE JEWS, WON'T BE STOPPED: RABBI - Jet (December 5)

Urging Jews to help Negroes seeking freedom, Englewood, N. J. Rabbi Arthur Hertzberg pointed out that Jews in America are the first generation of Jews in the world to be part of the power structure in a position to give aid to the next group bidding for equality. Another rabbi, Maurice N. Eisendrath, President of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, said that many Jews, through inactivity or opposition, have failed to support the Negroe's drive for equal rights. He urged more Jewish support and declared Negroes will not be stopped any more than were Jews in their quest for freedom.

AND THEY CALL IT CHRISTIAN

New York Courier - Column: My View by Benjamin E. Mays (November 23)

90% of the churches of the Southern Baptist Convention exclude Negroes. The convention has churches in all 50 states and D. C. Since each church is autonomous, most of these churches will be segregated for many years. The tragedy is the segregated church calls itself Christian. Nowhere in the Bible can segregation be justified along racial lines.

PRESBYTERIANS WILL INVEST FUNDS ONLY WITH FIRMS HIRING NEGROES

New York Courier (November 23)

In a letter to executives of denominational agencies, Rev. G. S. Wilmore Jr. executive director of the United Presbyterian Commission on Religion and Race asked them to adopt the commission's policy statement on hiring, purchasing, building, renting and investing. The statement suggests trying to change practices of firms which discriminate and adjusting investment portfolios in the light of those firms' responses. It recommends requiring open occupancy clauses in leases, investing and depositing where Negroes are employed and demanding fair employment clauses in building contracts and sub-contracts and service contracts.

SOUL SEARCHING IN THE CHURCH

New York Courier - Editorial (November 23)

Considerable criticism of jim-crowism and discrimination in the Christian churches has been noted recently. Since few churches attempt to recruit outside their own social strata, these churches are largely segregated by so-called race. There are very few Negro priests, although more than 800,000 non-whites are Catholics. Although the Council of Bishops of the Methodist Church recently denounced segregation in some Methodist churches the fact remains that segregation is rife in the Methodist Church. There must be some changes made soon if the churches' approach to race relations is going to be meaningful.

CIVIL RIGHTS BILL

WHOLE LOAF OR NONE

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (November 4)

It is difficult to assess the true merits of the compromise civil rights bill, approved at the instance of the White House. The bargaining about the bill was so furious that it is hard to escape the conclusion that the Administration was more concerned with developing a measure that was agreeable to Republican leadership than one that would do justice to the black citizenry. For us the logic of the whole loaf or none at all will forever be the measure of our contention for full citizenship.

SIMPLE RIGHTS

New York Courier - Column: Horizon by P. L. Prattis (November 9)

The present civil rights bill offers much more than has ever been contained in any such bill, but it is a compromise of what the Negro wants. There is no civil rights which a black French citizen does not enjoy. There is no "Mrs. Murphy" in France, or in Italy, or as far as I know in Germany. Portugal has a bad name, but no place of public accommodation in Lisbon would refuse service to a man because of his color. These simple rights exist for everyone, everywhere except in the U.S., South Africa and some colonies in Africa.

COURAGE -- ALL AROUND - Amsterdam News, Editorial (November 9)

To their eternal credit, Representative Charles Halleck (R., Ind.), John Lindsay (R., N. Y.) and many others on both sides rallied to take the Civil Rights Bill out of petty politics and put it back on the high moral plane where it belongs. It gives us pleasure to congratulate all concerned.

RESPONSIBLE HALLECK

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (November 27)

GOP House Leader Charley Halleck's endorsement of the compromise civil rights bill signaled an intellectual reformation that astonished even members of his own party. This could well be Halleck's finest hour, to borrow a Churchillian phrase.

A BASIC ISSUE

Amsterdam News - Column: White on White by Gertrude Wilson (Nov. 30)

The recent decision by the Supreme Court of the United States to ask the Department of Justice for its views on the constitutionality of the public accommodations section of the Civil Rights Bill, moves us a step further to the fundamental issue.. whether or not private property rights in places of business open to the public give liicense to the proprietor to discriminate against any customer because of color or race. Until it is settled, no amount of tentative legislation will mean a thing. Either the Negro is a citizen or he is not. It is not possible to grant businessmen catering to the public the right to discriminate against Negroes, and at the same time to keep up the pretense that all citizens have equal rights.

EDUCATION

BOARD OF ED'S BABY

THE POLIER DECISION (In two parts)

Both the above appeared in the Amsterdam News, James L. Hicks column Another Angle - (October 19 and October 26)

Since the Polier Decision handed down by Judge Polier of the Domestic Court in December 1958, Negro parents have the right to elect no education rather than inferior education... Conclusive proof that not only Harlem schools but predominantly Negro schools all over the city are inferior to predominantly white schools. These schools are inferior, not because of the children in them, but because the Board of Education through systematic discrimination have made them that way... and it is up to the Board of Education to straighten them out and make them equal to other schools.

A STONE'S THROW -WANTED: 50 PARENTS FOR ALL-OUT BOYCOTT OF CHICAGO'S SCHOOLS - Front page editorial in the Chicago Daily Defender - Column by Chuck Stone (October 22)

In December 1958 nine Harlem parents won a court case, proving that de facto segregation created inferior education. They had fantastic courage and guts to keep their kids out of school in the face of official threats and social ostracism. Paul Zuber took the case without fee and won it. Until there are parents in Chicago who are willing to take the same risks, Mr. Willis' segregated school system will stay. Are there 50 parents who are prepared to boycott Chicago schools on a continuing basis until Mr. Willis is dragged into court and exposed for the segregationist he is?

HUMPHREY CALLS EDUCATION "100-YEAR LIE"

Jet (October 24)

Slapping at American educators, Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota said they "lied for 100 years" on the separate-but-equal theory. He called for an exchange of faculty members between Negro and white colleges and suggested the federal government set aside funds for this.

AN INCREDIBLE GROUP

Amsterdam News - Column: White on White by Gertrude Wilson (Nov. 23)

Lobbying against the civil rights bill, an incredible group have joined forces under the banner of the Coordinating Committee for Fundamental American Freedoms, Inc...whooping it up with the aid of a $20,000 contribution from the Mississippi State Sovereignty Commission, a tax-supported state agency. The group is chaired by William Loeb, publisher of the Manchester (N.H.) Union Leader and the vice-chairman is James Kilpatrick, editor of the Richmond News Leader who authored "The Southern Case for School Segregation". Their secretary-treasurer is a Mississippi cohort of Rose Barnett. It's a little hard to figure how they manage on the Mississippi taxpayers money as word has it that the PR man alone earns around $26,000 a year. The way the civil rights bill is crawling through committees, Mississippi is going to need a lot more Federal aid for having squandered its taxpayer's money. As for the rest of us States give Mississippi something like four dollars for every one she gives the national treasury, you might say we are in the untenable position of supporting a rabid anti-civil rights lobbying group in Washington.

SCHOOL SEGREGATION COSTS SOUTH $13,079,000

Jet (October 24)

School segregation has cost 11 Southern states $4,395,000 for litigation, $934,000 for extraordinary legislative sessions, $7,750,000 for tuition grants to private schools.. the Arkansas advisory committee to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights reported.

7TH GRADERS READING AT 3RD GRADE LEVEL (October 26)

WHITE TEACHERS UNFAMILIAR WITH NEGRO'S BACKGROUND (November 9)

Both the above appeared in the Amsterdam News

Evaluating Harlem schools, veteran educator Mrs. Josephine Jones pointed out that Negro children never study under a Negro principal, or Negro teacher, or do they feel a sense of relation or identity. They feel frightened, tottering precariously in a white adult world. The results often manifest themselves in aggressive behavior. Teachers are confronted with obstacles because of unfamiliarity with the background of the children. Even where there may be a rapport and eagerness to learn, the pupils are denied the tools of learning. It is not unusual to find a seventh grade reading on a third grade level.

NYC PAYS $56,000 TO INSULT NEGROES!...YOU PAID FOR THIS!

Front Page Special - Amsterdam News (November 2)

The New York City Board of Education paid $56,000 of the taxpayer's money for a teacher survey in which the white editor refused to capitalize the word "Negro", in spite of the fact that the error was repeatedly called to his attention. The Board of Education distributed the report which Negroes consider a direct insult. The New York University team which made the survey capitalized Puerto Ricans in every reference made to them.

HAS WILLIS MADE SCHOOL DEAL WITH BAPTIST MINISTERS? (November 6)

DIRECT ACTION VS. NEGOTIATION (November 11)

NEIGHBORHOOD SCHOOLS (November 26)

IT TAKES JUST $2 PER PERSON TO HELP FIGHT WILLIS RACISM; THIS IS THE LEAST YOU CAN DO (October 27)

NEGRO MINISTERS, A 'NEW' WILLIS & THE HANDS OF ESAU (November 6)

All the above are from the Chicago Daily Defender

The reason,says editor Chuck Stone in the Defender, that Chicago has a racial crisis in its schools is because there have never been negotiations between Negroes and the Board of Education although Negroes have spent the last four years begging to discuss the issue of segregation in the city's schools. Illinois Superintendent of Public Instruction, Ray Page, has added a link to the Dr. Willis chain of conspiracy by parroting the neighborhood school flapdoodle which immobilizes Negro school children in depressed ghettos. Now the Negro Baptist Ministers Conference of Chicago decided to have a group involvement and invited controversial segregationist head of the school system, Dr. Benjamin Willis, to speak to them. Some observers interpret this as an attempt by the ministers to reduce the effectiveness of "direct action" or demonstrations.. meanwhile, the Chicago Committee for Equal Education has issued a plea for funds to back the school segregation suit now in Federal District Court. The committee's concept is that any child who can profit from educational opportunities should have access to it.

NEGRO KIDS A MAJORITY IN CHI SCHOOLS BUT HAVE LESS SPACE

CHI SCHOOL CHIEF RATED POOR ON REPORT CARD

Both the above from Jet (November 7)

A detailed analysis of a Board of Education report reveals that although the majority of Chicago's public school children are Negroes, the bulk of 192,000 attend only 189 schools, while 174,574 white children attend 290 schools. The report was issued by Superintendent Benjamin C. Willis as thousands of children and pickets demonstrated against Jim Crow schools. On a "report card" issued to parents by the Coordinating Council of Community Organizations, sponsors of the massive Freedom Day boycott of 225,000 pupils, Willis was rated "poor" in scholastic achievement, planning and use of school space, funds, special services and policies of school board.

TESTS FOR CHILDREN

Amsterdam News - Column: Along This Way by Roy Wilkins (November 16)

One of the toughest obstacles faced by Negro young people has been the educational test.. hounding them out of school, barring colleges, labeling them as inferior.. a label used to hamstring the entire race and damn it to second-class citizenship. Ironically, Negro children are not the only ones who have been victimized. White parents are now protesting what it is doing to their children. High school pupils are being barred from college on the strength of tests in aptitude, personality, reading and even sex. One of the failures in the field has been the use of tests with the nation's deprived youth.. Negro, Spanish, slum, and migrant children from the South.. all of whom bang their heads and hopes against tests which have no relation to them. We have been fighting rigged employment offices, rigged voting registrars, and rigged real estate.. but now we must fight rigged educational tests that stake our children to the ground before they can walk.

IN HARLEM: STANDARDS DELIBERATELY KEPT LOW IN SCHOOLS?

Amsterdam News (November 16)

Veteran educator Mrs. Josephine Jones, in a further evaluation of Harlem schools, stated that standards were deliberately kept low and that Negro children were educated for labor.. that efforts to raise the instructional levels were discouraged by principals. Pupils, she found, were not permitted to advance in accordance with their ability, and creative thinking is discouraged. A large number of pupils are directed to vocational schools which are not geared to industry and where the courses are so below standards that the bright students drop out.

DR. CLARK REJECTS BUSSING - Amsterdam News (November 16)
DR. CLARK OPPOSES BUSSING WHITES TO HARLEM - Jet (December 5)

Speaking before the New York Chapter of The American Jewish Committee, professor of psychology at the College of the City of New York, Dr. Kenneth B. Clark declared that the New York City schools are producing functional illiterates. The evidence adds up to a pattern of criminal neglect, Dr. Clark disagreed with school officials who seek to cover inefficiency of teaching with explanations of cultural deprivation and other cliches. He also rejected bussing of white and Negro children to schools which are clearly inferior... suggesting a more realistic approach of up-grading the quality of education in schools now attended by Negro students.

NEGROES NEED PROTECTION AT 'OLE MISS', SAYS PROF.

Chicago Daily Defender (November 21)

A University of Mississippi professor said that Negroes could not hope to attend "Ole Miss" without some form of protection. The illusion that he could was Cleve McDowell's undoing. Those who supported Meredith were appointed 'honorary Niggers' by the White Citizens' Council, and the appointees considered it an honor, said the Professor, Russell Barrett.

EISENHOWER'S STATEMENT

TOO LATE, IKE - Chicago Daily Defender, Editorial (October 15)
TOO LITTLE, TOO LATE -New York Courier, Column: My View by Benjamin E. Mays (November 9)

After 12 years of sepulchral silence on his personal reaction to the 1954 Supreme Court School Decision, former President Eisenhower says it is morally and legally correct. It is a pity that he didn't endorse it while he was in the White House. Here was a great moral issue with which the whole country was grappling, yet the President of the United States would not lend his leadership. He could have provided a better climate for his successor and for the nation as a whole. His lukewarm attitude served to aid and abet the South in its strong opposition, says Mr. Mays. If he had called the Southern governors to a White House Conference, if he had addressed the country over TV, we would have had a different reaction in the South. When a leader fails to take a positive stand in times of crisis, chaos follows.

NEW CLUB MEMBER

Amsterdam News - Editorial (October 19)

At long last, Dwight D. Eisenhower has gotten around to reading the Supreme Court's decision of 1954 on school desegregation... and has suddenly come to realize that the Court was "right" about segregation in public education having no place in the American way of life. Those of us who lived through President Eisenhower's eight years of silence are aware of the negative results which came from his lack of courage to speak up with the full weight of his office. Yet, better late than never.

EMPLOYMENT AND UNIONS

COMMITTEE FOR STRANDED DOMESTICS PRAISE NEW LAW TO PROTECT GIRLS

New York Courier (October 19)

Domestic workers left stranded in many suburban New York communities by unscrupulous employment agencies will get a much better break now. Under a new state regulation the State Labor Department will police private employment agencies outside of New York City. The regulations are also designed to prevent confiscatory attachment on wages for agency fees and transportation from the South and to clarify terms of employment to domestics before they leave there.

AUTO INDUSTRY SHUNS NEGROES AND JEWS

Amsterdam News (October 19)

Although the Big Three of the automobile industry (Ford, General Motors, Chrysler) label themselves as "equal employment opportunity" firms because they are federal government contractors, they have almost ignored Negroes and Jews in their white collar and executive positions, a recent survey revealed. The low percentage, less than 3/4 of 1% of Jewish white collar workers, "leaves no doubt that artificial barriers still exist in the industry", stated the report. There is an almost total absence of Negroes in white collar and other executive positions in the industry.

THEY'RE LOOKING FOR YOU!

Amsterdam News - Column: Another Angle by James L. Hicks (November 9)

This columnist was one of the Negro panelists who addressed the Office Executives Association, composed of hundreds of personnel managers who do hiring for most of New York's big firms. They decide how many jobs will be available to Negroes. The managers present said they have not been able to get as many qualified Negroes as they had hoped ..despite advertising for them. Mr. Hicks pointed out that the Negro looking for a job or apartment often feels this does not apply to him. Years of embarrassment keeps him from applying. Hicks suggested that ads be placed in the Negro press so that qualified men and women need not hesitate to apply.

CITES FAIR HIRING BENEFITS FOR FIRMS

Chicago Daily Defender (November 12)

Executive Director of the Chicago Urban League, Edwin Berry, said that, apart from its moral aspects, hiring Negroes is beneficial to employers because it widens their choice in filling jobs and reduces taxes paid for relief. Lifting the income of the Negro to prevailing national levels would double Negro income and increase the gross national product by $14 billion.

CHARGE UNION KEEPS TOP JOBS FOR WHITES

Chicago Daily Defender (November 14)

Some members of a Chicago hotel and service workers union with 8500 members (of whom about 65% are Negroes) charge a faction of the union has managed to keep all the top jobs lily white. There is a training program for stewards and Negro participation, but such jobs pay only small fees. Several jobs, such as counter girls at ball parks, are kept lily white. There are many qualified Negroes in the local who haven't run for office because they feared the consequences from intimidation and loss of their jobs.

PROGRESS

Amsterdam News - Editorial (November 16)

After years of critical comment on the failure of American industry to provide equal opportunity to Negroes, it gives us pleasure to report on some positive aspects. This newspaper has long known that unless the Negro could EARN the price to PAY the check, he could not stay afloat in the economic currents. Any student of Negro affairs knows that the Negro never wanted to be different in his economic life but that racial discrimination forced him to do so. Reports show that 115 of the nation's top companies have enrolled under the President's Voluntary Plans for Progress and there has been an increase of 8.9 percent in jobs given to non-whites. We offer our warmest congratulations to the President, the Vice-President and the 115 top business firms who are cooperating in a not-so-new plan which these men have put into operation.

INTERNATIONAL

WE ARE NOT ALONE

Amsterdam News - Column: Home Plate by Jackie Robinson (October 12)

The newly independent island of Jamaica was one of the corners of the globe which felt the shock-waves of the Birmingham blasting. A few days ago Senator Hugh Shearer, Chairman of the Jamaican delegation to the United Nations General Assembly, presented us with a check for $500 for a Re-Building Fund. With it came a message of moral support to Birmingham's dark-skinned citizens in their resistance to an unjust system.

THE SKIN GAME

Amsterdam News - Editorial (October 19)

Adlai Stevenson at a press conference, talked quite a lot about the "skin game" .. the alignment of people of the world based on skin color rather than on social and political needs. He feels this is wrong and pointed out that Russia, being white, would end up being our ally against Communist China. Our own government, at the very moment, sitting at a General Assembly conference table was busily engaged in playing the "skin game".. and the stakes were high. The issue was the question of Great Britain, a white nation, pulling out of Southern Rhodesia and transferring political and military power to a handful of whites who would rule the vast black majority. While ninety out of the 105 nations which voted were against allowing the British to do this, the United States "abstained". In other words, the United States played the "skin game" for lack of moral courage.

YE OLDE SKIN GAME

New York Courier - Column: Up Front..Down South by Daddy Mention (November 2)

No lesser light than Adlai Stevenson has recently speculated on the possibility of a Washington-Moscow axis based upon ye olde "skin game", whereby the world would be re-divided into a white camp and a colored camp. With all due respect to Mr. Stevenson this loose talk about choosing sides on the basis of skin color is a bunch of bull. Colored people are not interested in divvying up the world on the basis of race. We don't want a jim-crowed world any more than we want jim-crowed nations, no matter who does the jim-crowing.

APARTHEID MARCHES ON

New York Courier - Editorial (November 23)

The latest development in South Africa's policy of apartheid envisages the establishment of several black states within South Africa. The first of these, Transkei state, the size of New Jersey and Maryland, just elected an assembly. The white inhabitants will have no political rights in Transkei, but only in the Republic. This experiment is a new departure in apartheid and will be watched closely the world over.

HISTORY SHOWS

New York Courier - Column by J. A. Rogers (November 9 & 23)

The latest method of torture in South Africa is the Detention Law whereby 335 prisoners have been held for over 9 months in small cells, painted black with only the keyhole for light. What is the civilized world doing about this? If the United Nations meant business it would hit these monsters where it would hurt - with an economic boycott. Here's a situation where violence is the only answer. American investors in South African firms help the country thrive, with no thought to the racial injustice there, which is worse than American slavery ever was. The African and Asian nations should make it known that someday they will march on South Africa and wipe it off the map. The American Negro must also give support to this.

MINORITY GROUPS

THE RIGHTS MEXICAN LABORERS HAVE THAT NEGROES DON'T GET

Jet (October 24)

A Mexican migrant labor agreement in Congress has, some senators feel, established an irrefutable precedent for the President's civil rights legislation, including the controversial public accomodations section, according to Wisconsin Republican Senator William Proxmire. Even die-hard Dixiecrat Congressmen support a "bracero" bill which prohibits discrimination against Mexican laborers. Further, the bill empowers the Mexican government to step in and identify the U.S. communities that do discriminate. Ten Texas communities have already been put off limits by the Mexican government. If it is right for the Mexican government to prohibit discrimination against Mexican citizens in this country in places of public accomodation, why is it wrong for our own government to ban discrimination for Americans?

VIEWS AND REVIEWS

New York Courier - Column by George Schuyler (November 9)

There is no more in common or in sympathy between Puerto Ricans and Negroes than there is between Jews and Saudi Arabians. Joseph Monserrat of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico office in New York pointed out the vast difference in cultural background, language and social mores between the two groups. The Puerto Rican will seek his own salvation, has no desire to be tied up in the Negro struggle. Monserrat said that color is not a factor in Puerto Rico, but that's horsefeathers! The one thing characteristic of the Latin Americans is the color line within and between groups, so I ignore their crocodile tears over the race problem in the U.S.

MISSISSIPPI

PROGRESS IN JACKSON, MISS.

New York Courier - Editorial (October 19)

Reports from Jackson, Miss. indicate progress there. NAACP says that since its selective buying campaign colored persons have jobs as cashiers in grocery stores; the Automobile Association hired a Negro agent and issues insurance to Negroes; there are more Federal jobs and many upgraded ones; Negroes have been hired as policemen and crossing-guards; libraries and some white churches admit Negroes.

MISS. CLERGY WILL NOT AID INTEGRATION

New York Courier (November 9)

Four Chicago ministers were jailed last week for attempting to integrate churches in Jackson. They said they received no cooperation, only opposition from their Methodist fellow clergymen in Jackson. Jackson ministers claimed their churches would be empty and banks would refuse them credit if they tried to integrate. The Jackson ministers refused to come to the aid of the arrested ministers and would not even vouch for their personal safety.

NEGRO RIGHTS GROUPS

IN THE WINGS

Amsterdam News - Column by Dave Hepburn (October 12)

Within recent weeks we have noted the movements of our best organizations - CORE, NAACP, the URBAN LEAGUE - in the fight against discrimination in show business and communications industries. None of these organizations is particularly oriented in this field, as is evidenced by certain features of their bargaining with the networks. Each organization presents its own policies with the result that there is duplication and confusion. The white employer can no longer ignore the Negro complaint but what we need now is a coordination of ideas and ideals in the industry; a knowledge of the functions of the industry so that our demands will be intelligent ones.

THE QUIET WAY

New York Courier - Editorial (November 6)

Ever since 1909, the NAACP has been winning victories and furthering Negro progress in the quiet expert legal way. Latest victories include the attack on the separate-but-equal provisions of the Hill-Burton Act which produced a ruling applying to all "white" hospitals, private or public. It is often said that legal measures are too long drawn out, that the courts are too slow, but the quiet way of the NAACP gets lasting results.

DIVIDING THE CIVIL RIGHTS DOLLAR

New York Courier - Editorial (November 23)

The NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund is currently defending 8000 persons in 130 separate actions. Obviously this costs lots of money, and yet so many Negroes are so forgetful of this basic service that they have recently been spending their civil rights dollars to bankroll organizations of dubious value, which they think have some magical solution to the Negro's many problems. Only the gradual processes of the law will free those arrested from jail... and that takes money.

PLAN FOR AID TO RIGHTS GROUPS TOLD BY BANKER - N.Y. Courier (11/23)
POWELL ENDORSES PLAN FOR BILLION DOLLAR RIGHTS FUND - Defender(11/30)
SUGGESTS "BANK-IN" TO AID RIGHTS REVOLUTION - Jet (12/5)

A creative idea has come forth whereby Negro men and women can utilize their own funds to finance the civil rights revolution. At the Annual Awards Banquet of the District of Columbia Chamber of Commerce, an association of Negro businessmen, Dr. Dunbar S. McLaurin, New York banker-lawyer, suggested a national "bank-in". The plan calls for one million people to transfer an average of $1,000 each from their present bank into Negro banking institutions and assign the interest thereon to civil rights organizations. At 2% the yield would be about $20,000,000 a year. The combined groups now operate on a budget of less than $2,000,000, most of which is voluntary contributions.

NEGRO LEADERSHIP

GREAT DAY FOR NEGRO

Amsterdam News - Column: People in Action by Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. (October 12)

In the mad quest to conquer us by dividing us, white people are working through some Negroes who will sell their race for a few dollars. We must make it clear that we never intend to go back to the days of division, when the white community could pick our leaders, when our children suffered discrimination, when our own lives were inflicted with a lack of self-respect. As our civil rights victories mount, the passions of diehards will be further aroused and they will do all within their power to provoke us.. but we must not retaliate with physical violence. This is a great hour for the Negro. To become the instrument of a great idea is a privilege that history rarely accords. Today the choice is no longer between violence and non-violence. It is either non-violence or non-existence.

FOLLOW THE LEADER

Amsterdam News - Column: Another Angle by James L. Hicks (October 12)

I think it is time we Negroes started looking up to our leadership. The forces at work today to convince you that Negroes are divided and have no leadership are using this lie as their secret weapon. You have just about any kind of leadership you choose to fight under. Are you non-violent: Then you have Dr. King. Are you young and ready to stage a sit-in? You have John Lewis of SNCC. Do you want to make a move in the field of labor? You have A. Philip Randolph. Do you want action? You have James Farmer of CORE. This is part of the leadership that electrified the world. Our problem is that we try to carry on too many fights in too many places with self-appointed leaders. Clear your issues with headquarters.

SAYS LEADERS CAUGHT IN MIDDLE OF BIG REVOLT

Chicago Daily Defender (November 14)

Negro leadership finds itself either playing the 'Uncle Tom' role or the aggressive militant part, according to Dr. Delton Brooks of the Cook County Department of Public Aid. Negroes and whites tend to equate the value of Negro civic groups in terms of contributions to the Negro community rather than to the entire community, he said. "White leadership at its best assumes the role of the big white father...." He favors the teaching of Negro history so Negro children will appreciate their background and white children get understanding of the varied races. Dr. Brooks stated it is easier for a student to get information on an Australian Bush tribe than on his Negro brother.

VIEWS AND REVIEWS

New York Courier - Column by George S. Schuyler (October 19)

The mass media have had a field day the past 3 years giving wide circulation to crackpot pronouncements of charlatans posturing as Negro leaders. Moderation andgradualism have become mortal sins in the ballyhoo of these sable Pied Pipers. I have found many Negroes who disavow these tactics but are unwilling to express opposition openly. Negroes have been led by many in the past, but they have never wanted to be led to slaughter. Negroes with any sense are dubious about the way the Rustins, Baldwins and Farmers propose to skin the cat of color bias. Thank God these "leaders" are living in America! In any non-white country I know about they would be convicts or corpses. All revolutions first devour their children.

FOLLOW-THE-LEADER!

N.Y. Courier - Column: Up Front..Down South by Daddy Mention (10/19)

While we're racking up some mighty good scores with demonstrations, there are a lot of tough targets left. The essential thing is a unified command for a host of other tasks: selective buying, voter registration, court challenges, etc. The need is for timetables as much as for coordination of command. Let the leaders get together and do their end of the job, and when the call comes, let us do ours. A mere decade ago 400 million people followed-the-leader to freedom in India. Now the whistle blows for 20 million Negroes in America to get into the game.

WHO'S LEADING?

New York Courier - Column: Horizon by P. L. Prattis (October 26)

Who is leading us? Is Adam Clayton Powell leading us; he who boasted "We have the white man on the run.."? The job is not to keep the whites on the run but to win them to our side. Is young John Lewis, student spokesman, our leader? Is the articulate James Farmer of CORE our leader? He, who would replace the administration.... The present administration has tried many ways to improve the status of Negro citizens. If a civil rights bill is passed, I'm convinced Mr. Farmer and others will not be satisfied with it. Will they turn to Goldwater, or expect me to do so?

POLITICS

BATTING ORDER

Amsterdam News - Editorial (October 26)

Readers will recall that the Mayor and the Governor made some strong promises about ridding the construction industry of bias. Yet the city and state continue spending taxpayers money, subsidizing and supporting building unions and projects which they know discriminate, and they continue to operate schools in violation of the law of the land. Neither man has seen fit to cancel a contract where obvious bias exists. If Governor Rockefeller wants to be President and Mayor Wagner wants to be a Junior Senator, we would like to remind them that the victim of racial discrimination is more concerned about "who's pitching" in City Hall and in Albany, N. Y. than he is in "who's up next" at bat in Washington, D. C.

OFF TO PAKISTAN

Amsterdam News - Column: Uptown, Lowdown by James Booker (October 26)

POOR PLAN

Amsterdam News - Editorial (November 2)

The New York Bar Association's suggestion wherein the city's judges would be appointed by the Mayor in the future, but from a list of names submitted by a special 15-member "Judicial Nominating Commission" is a poor plan. Rather than lift the courts out of the mire of common politics, it would place the selection of judges in the hands of a small group who would not necessarily have to be any more competent in choosing than the "bosses" who now do the picking... also it could lead to the elimination of Negro and Puerto Rican lawyers aspiring to the bench.

SENATOR KEATING AND THE THING TO DO

Amsterdam News - Column: Home Plate by Jackie Robinson (November 23)

Next year Senator Keating deserves re-election, not only because he has been one of the outstanding legislators, but because he has fought for justice and honor in the treatment of minority groups. He was espousing the cause of freedom long before it became "the thing to do". His record can leave no doubt of his sincerity. Now there is talk of Mayor Wagner opposing him for office. Mayor Wagner makes all the proper sounds but I cannot forget certain significant silences nor the expressed opposition to making J. Raymond Jones head of Tammany because we already had a Negro Borough President of Manhattan. However, what concerns us most is whether Keating should be re-elected if he is to be saddled with Barry Goldwater at the head of the ticket. The principles expressed by Goldwater are so alien to the principles of Keating as to make it ludicrous for them to be on the same ticket. The Republican Party had better take a long look before commiting political suicide by naming Goldwater because we Negroes ain't whistling Dixie.

PREFERENTIAL TREATMENT

IS THE NEGRO A MAN - OR NOT? WHITE AUTHOR COLUMNIST ASKS

Jet (October 11)

Sidney Harris, author and editorial columnist for the Chicago Daily News, said we must face and answer unequivocally whether the Negro is a man - or not. If we believe he is, then he must be assured of all his civil, legal and human rights. If he is not, then he must be relieved of his responsibilities to fight for his country, pay taxes, labor in enterprises which he cannot share.

RUDE AND IGNORANT

MARSHALL PLAN

Both the above appeared in the New York Courier, Column: Horizon by P. L. Prattis (October 19 and November 16)

Faubus, Barnett, Wallace, White Citizens Councils, and the KKK haven't the slightest chance of stopping the social revolution which is taking place in the U.S. The world has become one great big neighborhood; the Negro middle class has become more involved in the fight. We are getting the racists on the run. Yet 100 years after emancipation we are unprepared for job opportunities; we are behind in education. The Urban League takes the position that something compensatory should be done. All other groups, Indians, Japanese, etc. are paid off. What about us? The Urban League calls this a domestic Marshall Plan. The American Negro is the only group which has been given a "bad check". He has been deprived of the essential means of getting ahead which white Americans take for granted. Therefore he asks compensatory action. It is up to those who imposed the handicaps on Negroes to find ways of removing them in fairness to the Negro.

RACE BIAS IN REVERSE

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (November 12)

A recent policy statement by the New York City Commission on Human Rights recommends "preferential treatment" for Negroes to compensate "for the inequities of a hundred years". The New York Times, usually on the right side of the Negro question, views the proposal as wrong in principle and self-defeating, because it is "merely discrimination in reverse". The Christian Science Monitor suggests that there are other things to do, such as remedial teaching, fostering neighborhood understanding and so on. The law in many states forbids discrimination, but the law is ignored in many instances. Isn't it about time for the other side to have a taste of its own medicine? White folk have no idea of the extent of injury done by segregation to the human personality.

CATHOLIC WEEKLY REJECTS PREFERENTIAL BIAS THEORY

Amsterdam News (November 16)

The Catholic News (weekly) took sides with Mayor Wagner in rejecting preferential treatment as a device to accelerate employment of Negroes in fields where they do not work or where they have small numbers. The publication feels this is not the way to redress discrimination.. that it would result in discrimination against non-Negroes.. and that equality is for all.

'WAY OUT

New York Courier - Column: Up Front..Down South by Daddy Mention (November 23)

Residential segregation being what it is, letting kids attend the school nearest them is often de facto segregation. Our country went 'way out of its way to segregate and therefore must go 'way out of its way to desegregate. Uncle Sam gives away billions of dollars every year helping people of all colors all over the map, but what's he doing for us? How come we don't rate a little Marshall Plan or CARE aid? We made the bloody Germans pay the Jews for their forced labor, didn't we? It took a heap of trouble to make Negroes Negroes and whites whites- we got to trouble ourselves more than somewhat to make all Americans Americans.

THE PRESS

THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (October 28)

"Negroes are still a minority in Chicago - only about one-fifth of the population. A minority cannot enforce its will upon the majority, under our system of government", intoned the Chicago Tribune in a vicious editorial. This is tantamount to saying that the Chicago Negro minority has no right to seek justice and equality or exercise its constitutional prerogative through petitions and peaceful assembly. The tone of the editorial amounts to a bugle call to all militant racists to rally under the banner of white supremacy. When the Tribune speaks of human rights, it means white man's rights, yet black men are called upon to defend this Republic in time of national emergency. If the Tribune wants our peaceful demonstrations to develop into a contest of force, Negroes are ready for that, too.

THE NEW YORK TIMES

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (October 29)

No driving force has been more consistent and insistent in beating the tom-tom for the rights of the American black minority than the New York Times. Theirs is journalism in the superlative sense, the kind that heightens faith in the future of the American democracy. We pause today to salute this great newspaper.

FALSE RACE THEORY

RACE THEORY

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (November 5)

Recent attempts to justify the political and social inequality of Negroes on scientific grounds have been sharply criticized by the American Association for the Advancement of Science, which reported that there is no scientific evidence of Negro inferiority. The report was largely prompted by such books as "The Biology of the Race Problem" by Wesley George and Carleton Putnam's "Race and Reason - a Yankee View". The segregationists have been dishing out this kind of propaganda in a desperate attempt to stem the judicial tide toward equality.

SCIENTISTS FIND NO EVIDENCE TO BACK "INFERIORITY" CLAIMS

Amsterdam News (November 16)

Taking note of published statements on the supposed biological inferiority of Negroes, a committee of the American Association for the Advancement of Science said the alleged evidence is used to challenge a principle fundamental to our political system, and to influence the outcome of the present crisis in the relations between racial groups. The use of purported "scientific evidence" to justify non-compliance with the Constitution debases both science and the human conscience, they stated.

U.S. STEEL

PEN PALS FOR U.S. STEEL

Amsterdam News - Column: Poppy's Notes by Poppy Cannon White (10/12)

Birmingham's largest employer, largest owner of real estate, largest bank depositor, lives in Pittsburgh and New York. Birmingham is a steel-owned city and it is that group who can solve the problem. They can go to the local banks and tell them to give jobs to Negroes. The steel subsidiary in Birmingham could phone the Governor and Mayor and tell them they want Negro children admitted to schools before nightfall. Perhaps a new path has been sighted for civil rights soldiers to follow. We may have been putting pressure on the wrong people. Owners of U.S. Steel .. and all the rest of us, should write Roger Blough, Chairman of the Board of U. S. Steel Corporation.

U.S. STEEL REFUSES TO HELP IN B'HAM RACIAL MATTERS

Jet (November 4)

Unwilling to flex his corporation's muscles to demand racial equality in Birmingham, U.S. Steel Corporation Chairman, Roger M. Blough, flatly rejected suggestions that his company use influence and strength to persuade the community to improve opportunities for Negroes. The idea is "repugnant" to me personally", Blough said.

IRRESPONSIBLE LEADERSHIP

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (November 21)

The indifference of U.S. Steel's Roger M. Blough to social problems is a typical behavior pattern of those whose wealth and power place them above the commong battle. U.S. Steel, the largest employer in Birmingham, could ease race strife there by exerting its economic influence, but Blough said that "to attempt to exert any kind of economic compulsion to achieve a particular end in the social area seems beyond what a corporation should do..." His contemptuous indifference is the breeze that fans the smoldering fires of revolution.

VOTING

GOP SLEPT: DEMS STUMPED ALL OVER AS RIGHTS ISSUE SPURRED TURNOUT

New York Courier (October 19)

Even rank-and-file members of the Republican Party are expressing amazement at the indifference of party bigwigs to the new wave of interest among Negroes to register as a result of the civil rights fight. Democratic Party clubs carried out intensive door-to-door canvassing to urge registration and all Negro districts reported heavy registration on the heels of this effort in both Manhattan and Brooklyn. A district leader said: "We tried to tell the people how lucky they were to be living here instead of in Birmingham."

LOOK WHO'S TALKING ABOUT CRUELTY

Amsterdam News - Column: Along This Way by Roy Wilkins (October 19)

Senator Richard B. Russell of Georgia would not throw a bomb or fire a sniper's rifle, but when he jumps to the defense of the system on the floor of the United States Senate, the boys back home who do commit these assaults feel safe knowing "their" representatives in Washington will protect them. Negro citizens should remember it is because they lack voting power that the Russells, the Eastlands and their ilk become chairmen of committees spending billions of dollars a year - a whip which can make a lot of Senators and Congressmen carefully consider their positions on a civil rights bill.

IRATE NEGRO GOP LEADERS BLAST PARTY HOSTILITY TO RACE AIMS

Chicago Daily Defender - Article by Ted Coleman (October 28)

"No political party can win victory in 1964 by writing off the Negro vote", said seven Chicago Negro Republican ward committeemen in a signed statement. They also wrote Sen. Dirksen expressing alarm over his reported opposition to the public accommodations provision of the civil rights bill. They pointed out that statements by Republican Party leaders have been vague and hostile to the revolution; and blasted the Democrats for perpetuating segregation in Chicago.

THE RIGHT TO VOTE

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (October 29)

Dr. Howard Zinn, formerly on the faculty of Spelman College in Atlanta, suggests in a report that a permanent "Federal presence is needed in the Deep South...", a special force of at least "a thousand Federal agents to stand guard.. in protection of the constitutional rights of the people of that region." He thinks such a plan would have the appeal of the Peace Corps and the full backing of the national government.

THE INFLUENCE OF NEGRO VOTING

New York Courier - Editorial (November 16)

The recent election must have brought home to many politicians the growing influence of the Negro vote - in Philadelphia, San Francisco, Lexington, Ky., Niagara Falls, all over the country where Negroes can be induced to register and vote. The growing Negro vote will play a big part in the 1964 Presidential election. The next big Negro march should be to the polls.

WE NEED VOTES

New York Courier - Column: Horizon by P. L. Prattis (November 23)

The chances of a strong civil rights bill being passed grow slimmer and slimmer. All this is because the Democrats of the South control the Congress. If the grip of the white South is to be broken, Southern Negroes must do it. If all the eligible Negroes in Mississippi or Alabama could and would vote, they could drive the Barnetts and Wallaces out of the Democratic party. When the Negro vote becomes effective, Southern white office seekers will cater to it just as they cater now to the racists.

XMAS BOYCOTTS

THE ARTISTS AND WRITERS EXPLAIN THEIR XMAS BOYCOTT
Amsterdam News (November 9)

CORE SETS STRATEGY IN CHRISTMAS BOYCOTT
Chicago Daily Defender (November 19)

BIG 7 OF CIVIL RIGHTS HAVE UNIQUE XMAS PLAN
New York Courier (November 23)

CORE WILL OPEN CHRISTMAS STORE
New York Courier (November 30)

The Association of Artists for Freedom, whose prominent members proposed a Christmas-buying boycott, explained their stand: They believe in Christmas as the birthday of the Prince of Peace and Brotherhood. While thousands of atrocities are committed against Negro people, and while these crimes go unpunished, they feel they cannot participate in the mockery of "Christmas as usual". This year they will make toys with their own hands. They ask merchants to understand and help organizations working to strengthen the moral fibre of the nation. The Chicago branch of CORE issued a national call to take part in the boycott. The Council for United Civil Rights Leadership urges the purchase of special cards to raise funds. In New York Theodore Flicker, producer and actor, has donated the use of his theatre, The Premise, at 154 Bleeker Street, to CORE to enable that organization to operate a store for Christmas items.

GROUP URGES BOYCOTT OF CHRISTMAS, CADILLAC CARS

Jet (December 5)

A nationwide Christmas boycott against all merchants and Cadillac cars was urged by the Grass Roots Leadership Conference formed in Detroit by representatives of nine all-Negro organizations from 11 major cities in eight states. The Cadillac boycott stemmed from a Cleveland auto dealer's statement that "no Negro was qualified to sell a Cadillac".

MISCELLANEOUS

SENGSTACKE TELLS JR. REALTORS ABOUT CHICAGO'S RACE CRISIS

Chicago Daily Defender - Article by Ruth H. McCoy (October 15)

John Sengstacke, Editor and Publisher of the Chicago Defender, told Chicago's Junior Realty Board that "the greatest challenge white America has today is to overcome its fear of the Negro". The Negro today is using his economic power and this simple fact is making more and more white people realize that they must forget their fears, he said. "Those Negroes who can afford to buy and maintain the cultural standards set up by neighborhoods should be accorded the same rights and privileges of any other American citizen", Sengstacke said in his frank talk.

THE BIASED 40 & 8

Amsterdam News (October 19)

For the fifth straight year the 40 & 8, the former American Legion fun-making unit, has rejected a resolution brought by it's New York

State delegation to end a constitutional clause restricting membership to whites only.

WHO IS TO BE THE JUDGE?

Amsterdam News - Column by Roy Wilkins (October 24)

Some of the Negro opinions, in two recent surveys, on the race problem must have been hard for white people to swallow. For some of us in the struggle, one of the most infuriating white attitudes is that embodied in the question, "How much equality is the white man willing to grant the Negro?" What right has a telephone lineman in Texas or a housewife in Idaho, on the basis of whiteness, to decide how much equality an American Negro shall enjoy? The Negro has been an American 344 years and has given his full measure to his country. Despite their numerical superiority and despite the political, economic and social structure they have created to sustain their view, white people cannot "grant" or "bestow" the Negro's constitutional rights as a citizen.

BIRMINGHAM, WHERE THE REBEL FLAG OVERSHADOWS THE STARS AND STRIPES

Amsterdam News (October 26)

The Rev. Robert Kinloch, on his return from Birmingham, likened that city to what was going on in Germany in 1939 under Hitler. The American flag is seldom seen flying from public buildings in Birmingham. The flag almost always seen is the Confederate pennant which is stamped on the helmets of state troopers and across the license plates of their cars. Fear permeates the atmosphere. People with vital information regarding senseless slayings have no one to turn to as they fear the police most.

DOCTORS TO PRESS FIGHT ON BIAS

Amsterdam News (November 2)

26 PRIVATE HOSPITALS DEFY LAW TO KEEP NEGRO DOCTORS OFF STAFF

Chicago Daily Defender (November 18)

The New York County Medical Society approved a resolution putting the organization on record as opposed to racial discrimination in patient care, physician opportunity and membership in professional organizations. In sharp contrast, a Chicago survey prepared for the Mayor's Committee on Hospital Appointments of Negro Physicians, shows 26 hospitals that have no Negroes on staff and have been known to turn away Negro patients for emergency treatment.. in defiance of state and city codes.

A YOUNGSTER VIEWS MAKING OF A FILM

Amsterdam News (November 9)

A 13-year-old Junior High youngster "covered" the filming of the "Pawnbroker" on location in Harlem and had this to say in part: "The thing I liked most was that they had colored cameramen and two colored policemen ... I know that these men are not prejudiced and accept colored employees because of their ability... If all people were like that we all would be much happier than we are now."

LIFE IN BIRMINGHAM

Amsterdam News - Column: People In Action by Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. (November 9)

The present power structure in Birmingham will do only what it is forced to do by incessant demands for justice. If Birmingham is to survive, its salvation depends upon the forces of Negro militancy keeping the pressure on in such a manner that the conscience of the nation will demand a resolution of the problem. If the non-violent way is deemed invalid and troublesome and summarily dismissed by the decision makers and armchair sociologists, then they will have chosen to light the fuse to a keg of sociological dynamite called Birmingham.

WHITES ADOPT NEGROES - Amsterdam News (November 16)

WHITE ADOPTIVE PARENTS SOUGHT FOR HOMELESS, NON-WHITE TOTS
New York Courier (November 23)

AGENCY TO PLACE NEGRO CHILDREN IN WHITE HOMES - Jet (November 28)

Louise Wise Services, one of the city's oldest adoption agencies, announced it will place Negro children and children of mixed racial background for permanent adoption with white families. While they do not feel this is the solution to the problem of homeless Negro children, it is thought a city as varied and cosmopolitan as New York ought to be able to welcome interracial families.

DR. JAMES W. SILVER

Chicago Daily Defender - Editorial (November 18)

In an address before the Southern Historical Association, Dr. James Silver, history professor at the University of Mississippi said: "The Mississippian who prides himself on his individuality lives in a climate where non-conformity is forbidden, where the white man is not free...." When Gov. Barnett heard about the speech, he commented: "Silver's liable to say anything...He ought to have been kicked out long ago." More than 50 professors have been literally driven from the state. Dr. Silver's courage deserves commendation.

KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS - Chicago Daily Defender, Editorial (Nov. 20)

6 KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS QUIT WHEN NEGRO REJECTED - Jet (Nov. 28)

Catholic organizations which harbor racial prejudice are being flushed out. The Grand Knight and five other top officials of the Knights of Columbus in Chicago resigned over the rejection of a Negro applicant. Not too long ago nuns picketed to register their disapproval of discrimination by a lily-white Catholic Women's Club.

Press, Radio, T.V. & Movies

CIVIL RIGHTS 1963:

A public service spot campaign available free of charge to any radio or TV station in the nation

An outstanding opportunity for broadcasters to serve the national interest in a time of crisis.

The Beginning—On June 11th, President Kennedy took the civil rights problem to the people, on network TV and radio, asked for justice, conscience and fair play.

The Time-Life Broadcast Proposal—We offered to create and produce a campaign of TV and radio spots supporting and implementing the President's call. The series would feature leading citizens appealing to the public for individual responsibility and reason, and would be made available free to all broadcasters.

The Response—The White House gave approval and endorsement, with authorization to excerpt portions of the President's June 11th Address. Leading figures in American public life agreed to film and record the campaign. And from the three major faiths—the United Church Women of the National Council of Churches, the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith and the National Council of Catholic Men—came sponsorship.

Ready now—A series of spots, running one minute or less, featuring these distinguished spokesmen: The President of the United States; Dr. William G. Carr, Executive Secretary, National Education Association; Frank H. Heller, President, National Council of Catholic Men; Lena Horne; Senator Hubert Humphrey (D., Minn.); Rev. Martin Luther King; Senator Thomas Kuchel (R., Cal.); Mrs. W. Murdoch MacLeod, General Director, United Church Women; Dr. R. H. Edwin Espy, General Secretary, National Council of Churches; Walter Reuther, President, U.A.W.; Jackie Robinson; Dore Schary, National Chairman, Anti-Defamation League; Sylvester Smith, President, American Bar Association; Roy Wilkins, Executive Secretary, NAACP; Whitney Young, Executive Director, National Urban League.

N.B. We urge that all stations using these spots augment them with messages from state and local leaders, addressing the civil rights problem as it applies to local audiences.

TIME LIFE BROADCAST

Availability: stations which receive voice-circuit service from the Mutual Broadcasting System and Radio Pulsebeat News, will have the complete set of radio spots, and will make them available locally. Television stations, and radio stations in cities where spots are not available may contact us direct.

TIME & LIFE BUILDING, ROCKEFELLER CENTER, NEW YORK CITY

AS APPEARING IN:
Television Age
Television Broadcasting

Press, Radio, TV etc

Preliminary Report on Advertising Practices:

A STUDY CONDUCTED BY

The Mayor's Committee on Job Advancement

ROBERT F. WAGNER
MAYOR

THEODORE W. KHEEL
Chairman

JAMES J. McFADDEN
Executive Director

City Hall
New York City

Press, Radio, T.V. & Movies

ADL CATALOG

AUDIO VISUAL MATERIALS

Interagy Org. - Off. Com.

File

Food Service Desegregation

Experience With Nonsegregated Service In Kentucky Eating Establishments, July 1961

RECEIVED
MAY 21 1962

A Report Prepared by the Social Research Service, University of Kentucky for

The Commission on Human Rights, Commonwealth of Kentucky

Frankfort, Kentucky

Pub. Accomm. Sen.

Joint Memorandum

THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE
165 EAST 56th STREET • NEW YORK 22, N. Y.

THE ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE
OF B'NAI B'RITH
515 MADISON AVENUE • NEW YORK 22, N. Y.

RECEIVED
MAR 25 1963

SUBJECT: South Dakota Public Accommodations Act

FROM: Paul Hartman and Theodore Leskes

Governor Archie Gubbrud of South Dakota has signed into law a bill prohibiting racial or religious discrimination in places of public accommodation. The bill had passed the Senate by a vote of 31-2 and the House by a vote of 62-7. South Dakota thus becomes the 29th state to adopt such a measure.

The Act covers discrimination "by public conveyances, theaters, or other public places of amusement, or by hotels, motels, barber shops, saloons, restaurants, or other places of refreshment, entertainment, or accommodation."

Violations are declared criminal offenses punishable by fines up to $200.

The Act will go into effect on July 1, 1963.

3/8/63
No. 379

PH:TL/ark

Pub. Accomm.

CORE
The Church of the Redeemer
105 N. Beech Street
Greensboro, N. C.
BR 5-0033

URGENT

INFORMATION SHEET

Greensboro, North Carolina

May 19, 1963

Over 700 students have been incarcerated in a county farm and an abandoned polio hospital for seeking service at resturants and entrance into theatres in Greensboro, N. C., on May 17 and 18. We firmly believe that present conditions are extremely dangerous to their health and safety. Some have been hospitalized as a result of inadequate provisions and treatment.

A few observations in regard to the Above:

1. A committee headed by the lawyer representing the students, Atty. Major High, and composed of Fr. Richard Hicks, Dr. Glenn Rankin, Dr. Louis Dowdy, Dr. J. A. Tarpley, Dr. W. L. T. Miller, DDS, Dr. George Evans, MD, Dr. A. V. Bount, Jr., MD, was not permitted to investigate the conditions of the youths.

2. The over-whelming majority has not been provided with beds. This was confirmed by officals.

3. In a room approximately 50' by 30' there are seven beds and 75 students. Most have been without beds for two nights.

4. On Sunday, May 19, we were not permitted to deliver food and what they were provided with is inadequate.

5. Even parents have not been allowed to visit their sons and daughters even though promises had been made that they could do so.

6. The Mayor has left town and cannot be reached.

Please register your protests immediately with the following:

1. David Schenck
   Mayor
   Greensboro, N. C. BR 4-2048

2. W. T. Jackson, Police Captain
   Greensboro Police Department BR 2-4141

3. Clayton Jones, Sheriff Guilford County
   High Point, N. C. 88-2-8311 and 88-86433

4. Terry Sanford, Governor
   Governor's Mansion
   Raleigh, N. C.

5. Berl I. Bernhard
   Civil Rights Commission
   Washington, D. C.

6. Robert Kennedy, Attorney General
   The Justice Department
   Washington, D. C.

7. John F. Kennedy, President
   White House
   Washington, D. C.

Wash Post 5/20/63 Pub. Accommodations

Outcome of Race Talks Awaited in Cambridge

By Richard Homan
Staff Reporter

CAMBRIDGE, Md., May 19 — Whites and Negroes waited hopefully today for a round of meetings that will determine whether the City's racial trouble has ended or merely been interrupted.

If a settlement has been reached—and few think it has—it will be a case of a community solving its problems with almost no outside help. Leading representatives of both races come from old, established Eastern Shore families.

Circuit Court Judge W. Laird Henry, whose ancestor, John Henry, was Maryland's first Governor, has accepted the task of trying to sell desegregation to the City's white businessmen.

Although neither side has announced any meetings for Monday, Judge Henry indicated today that he would "meet informally" with some of the City's businessmen. Whites and Negroes will meet here Tuesday with the Maryland Commission on Intercultural Problems.

Gloria Richardson, 41, granddaughter of a Kingston Negro, a City businessman, invested the drive for equal rights and is more than partly responsible for the peaceful nature of the demonstrations that lasted nearly eight weeks.

Only One Outsider

No Federal officials and no outside lawyers have been sent to Cambridge. The only outside Negro leader has been Reginald Robinson, 23, an Atlanta field representative of the Student Non-Violent Action Committee, who directed activities while Mrs. Richardson was in jail.

At a Saturday meeting white and Negro leaders agreed to [illegible] to implement a [illegible] of requests presented by Mrs. Richardson and the Negroes. Negroes agreed to stop demonstrations for a week.

Judge Henry, once an outspoken critic of integration, arranged the meeting and will attempt to bring community-wide acceptance of the Negro's requests.

"I am very tired," Henry said yesterday after a week of almost constant negotiations. "I got into this thing quite accidentally only because of my love for the community."

The Big Problem

"The big problem now is to try to get all the people to go along with what we think is a fair request of the Negroes."

Henry, 56, studied at Princeton but left to serve in the Army during World War I. He finished his law studies in the office of his father, also a Circuit Court Judge.

He has been described as authoritarian and outspoken. Women in the jury box was something it took him years to accept.

"He lived in an ivory tower for a long while," an old friend said. "But now he's come out and taken an intense interest in his community."

"We have an armistice here now," Henry said today. "But this is a small town and it's a very tense situation. The littlest thing, a rumor for example, can hurt us."

Race Made Contact

Henry's first contact with the racial problem came two weeks ago when Baltimore Attorney C. Burnam Mace asked him to come to a meeting.

"We talked, but none of us was really smart enough to know what to do," Henry said. Then he asked Sheriff Calvert Creighton to see if Mrs. Richardson would like to talk to Henry.

The meeting with Mrs. Richardson and other Negroes brought a clear understanding of the problem, but no agreement. Then Henry began talking with businessmen and other prominent people away from officialdom and the result was Saturday's truce.

The Negroes have asked for an end to racial discrimination in public places, schools and private employment.

"If they show us nothing concrete by Saturday," Robinson said yesterday, "we'll be back demonstrating."

Negro Minister Speaks

The Rev. Charles Bourne, a Negro leader, said he hoped that "no one sabotages the works, or they won't have enough jail space here or in Easton to hold us."

A mass meeting of the Bourne's Bethel AME Church Sunday night welcomed the more than jailed demonstrators who were released as part of the agreement.

Among those jailed were Mrs. Richardson, her mother, Mabel Booth, and her daughter, Donna.

Mrs. Richardson, vice-chairman of the Cambridge Non-Violent Action Committee, is a granddaughter of Frederick Douglass (Marty) St. Clair, a City Councilman in Cambridge for fifty years.

She has won almost complete trust from both sides since starting the equality drive. The same requests which were accepted Saturday had been presented by Mrs. Richardson at a March City Council meeting and met with ridicule from Council members.

Since then Mrs. Richardson has filled what many of the City's Negroes consider a gap in their leadership. Charles Cornish, the Negro member of the City Council, was present when Mrs. Richardson appeared before the Council but he did not speak.

Firm Loses $150 In Safe Break

Burglars pried open a rear door, knocked the bottom out of a safe and took $150 in cash, some stamps, paper and a [illegible] from the office of the Western Cameras [illegible]

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

PEABODY AWARD

A statement of EDITORIAL OPINION by WDSU-TV and WDSU-Radio, 520 Royal Street, New Orleans 16, Louisiana

A. LOUIS READ, EXECUTIVE VICE PRESIDENT AND GENERAL MANAGER • JOHN CORPORON, NEWS DIRECTOR

Public Accom. La.

NEGROES AND NEW ORLEANS HOTELS

(The following editorial was broadcast over WDSU-TV and WDSU-Radio on Tuesday, May 21, 1963.)

Apparently, New Orleans has lost the national American Legion convention because hotels feel they cannot admit Negroes as guests, even though this is no longer against the law.

Losing the convention will cost the city about $10-million.

Last year a million and a half visitors spent an estimated $160-million in New Orleans... a good indication that tourism has become one of our main industries.

With the Legion pull-out, a healthy chunk of this year's tourist business goes down the drain.

That's money which would have jingled in the pockets of waiters, taxi drivers, laundry workers, shoe salesmen, filling station attendants and barbers.

That's tourist spending which would have benefited hotels, restaurants, flower shops, railroads, airlines, newspapers, TV and radio stations, candy stores, gift shops, breweries, department stores, lawyers, preachers and teachers.

And the list runs on and on.

Why should men and women in all walks of life make economic sacrifices for hotel segregation?

WDSU believes it is too high a price to pay.

For those concerned about abrupt social changes, it should be remembered that hotel rooms here are primarily used by out-of-town guests, not by Orleanians.

In short, Orleans residents are not affected by who occupies the hotel room, but they are affected economically if that room is not occupied.

Hotels would and should retain the right to reject any guest who is obnoxious or undesirable whether he be white or Negro.

This station believes the Legion decision has tarnished New Orleans' image as a tourist city. If hotels maintain their rigid policy, the image will get worse and income from tourism will drop off.

Many other cities have dropped the racial barriers in hotels due to economic necessity WDSU believes it's time for New Orleans to do the same.

- 0 -

A statement of EDITORIAL OPINION by WDSU-TV and WDSU-Radio, 520 Royal Street, New Orleans 16, Louisiana

A. LOUIS READ, EXECUTIVE VICE PRESIDENT AND GENERAL MANAGER • JOHN CORPORON, NEWS DIRECTOR

THE LEGION DECIDES

(The following editorial was broadcast over WDSU-TV and WDSU-Radio on Wednesday, May 1, 1963.)

It appears certain now that the American Legion will hold it national convention in New Orleans in early September.

Our city almost lost the convention because some legion members in Pennsylvania complained that segregated hotels and motels would interfere with 30 or 40 Negroes planning to attend.

Now, however, in Indianapolis the Legion's executive committee and the convention commission unanimously endorsed New Orleans as the city for '63.

WDSU believes Legion leaders have acted wisely and honorably.

As stated in an earlier editorial, the Legion selected our city a year ago knowing full-well that the segregation problem existed.

To have punished the city by yanking the convention out at the last minute would have been a downright breach of faith -- not to mention a breach of contract.

There is some indication that the issue was raised because of internal Legion politics, which had nothing at all to do with segregation obstacles.

Now, however, the matter seems to be ironed out.

Judge Bernard Bagert and Al LaBiche deserve special commendation. They vigorously lobbied Legionnaires in Indianapolis, and others, until the right decision was made.

The city owes them a debt of gratitude because apparently we came within inches of losing the dollars and prestige that go with hosting one of the country's largest conventions. Losing it would have tarnished New Orleans' reputation as one of the finest convention cities.

If there is a lesson to be learned from this episode, it is that civic problems -- whether they be racial, economic or educational -- are best faced and solved at home before they become national headlines.

-O-

PEABODY AWARD

A statement of EDITORIAL OPINION by WDSU-TV and WDSU-Radio, 520 Royal Street, New Orleans 16, Louisiana

A. LOUIS READ, EXECUTIVE VICE PRESIDENT AND GENERAL MANAGER • JOHN CORPORON, NEWS DIRECTOR

THE AMERICAN LEGION CONVENTION

(The following editorial was broadcast over WDSU-TV and WDSU-Radio on Wednesday, April 24, 1963.)

New Orleans is scheduled to be host to the American Legion's national convention in early September.

It seems, however, there is some sentiment within the Legion's national executive committee to take the convention to another city because our hotels and motels are segregated, by law and by custom.

But, then, they were segregated when the Legion made the decision to come to New Orleans.

It is understandable that the 20 or 30 Negroes wishing to attend the convention would resent being turned down at principal hotels and motels.

By coincidence, the very law that requires this form of segregation is under attack in federal court, and a decision could quite possibly come down before the convention date.

But settled or not, the point is that the Legion chose New Orleans knowing that the racial problem existed. We would assume that our city was selected because its advantages far outweigh its disadvantages.

The Legion's national executive committee will meet in Indianapolis May 1st to discuss switching cities. A Legion committee recently visited New Orleans to determine if hotel and motel segregation would affect the convention.

WDSU believes a last-minute switch would be unfair to the city and would inflict irreparable harm on our tourist industry.

Punishing the city for its racial problems is not a Legion function. And, anyway, New Orleans admits its problems in this field...and much is being done about them.

In behalf of New Orleans, this station asks understanding and cooperation from the Legion.

- 0 -

TIME
THE WEEKLY NEWSMAGAZINE
June 7, 1963 Vol. 81 No. 23

Pub. Accounts - Gen.

THE NATION

RACES

The Revolution

Spring 1963 will long be remembered as the time when the U.S. Negro's revolution for equality exploded on all fronts.

Negroes faced snarling police dogs. They went to jail by the thousands. They risked beatings as they sat on lunch-counter stools. They were bombed in their homes. They were clubbed down by cops. They sent out their children to battle men. In the weeks, months and even years to come, there will be lulls in the revolution. But it will revive—for, after the spring of 1963, there can be no turning back.

Pain & Silence. Last week, as in all weeks, the center of the revolution was in the U.S. South. In Jackson, Miss., sit-in demonstrators entered a segregated five-and-ten lunch counter, sat stoically on the stools as white roughnecks crowded around them. At first there were only insults. Then the whites seized catchup bottles, mustard and sugar dispensers, spattered the stuff all over the demonstrators. Still there was only that stolid silence.

Infuriated, a burly ex-cop dragged Negro Memphis Norman, 21, off his stool, slugged him to the floor. As the Negro lay there, the white man kicked him in the face, kicked him again and again and again. Later, Norman was sent to a hospital—and charged with disturbing the peace.

The demonstration continued for three hours. A white college professor joined the sit-in demonstrators; he was beaten by the white hoodlums until his face was raw. He stayed hunched over the counter, flinched but did not fight back when his tormentors poured salt in his wounds.

Jackson police stood outside the store, did nothing to stop the brutality, and the sit-in protesters left only after the manager shut up shop. When other pickets appeared later in the week, Jackson officials ordered Negro prison trusties out of their cells to carry arrested Negro and white demonstrators to police cars and paddy wagons.

Jackson kept growing tenser. A gasoline bomb exploded in the carport of an N.A.A.C.P. leader. Negro leaders walked out of a meeting with city officials after a misunderstanding with Mayor Allen Thompson about their demands. The Negroes prepared for more demonstrations, and Mayor Thompson ordered a hog-wire enclosure, able to handle 10,000 prisoners, set up on the state fairgrounds.

To the Hogpen. As school let out on Friday, hundreds of Jackson's Negro students gathered in the Farish Street Baptist Church and at Brinkley High School. A minister collected knives, pencils and other sharp objects as the kids filed into the church. Then they were sent into the street.

UPI

NORMAN STOMPED AT JACKSON SIT-IN
A season of stoic rebels.

Carrying American flags, the first demonstrators headed toward a phalanx of 60 cops four blocks away. A police captain shouted through a bullhorn that they would be arrested if they did not have a parade permit. The marchers stopped. A cop smashed a Negro above the knees with his night stick. And many demonstrators obediently climbed into trucks for the trip to the hogpen prison.

But hundreds more were already jamming the streets. After half an hour, state police, armed with repeater shotguns and carbines, arrived. Negro demonstrators sprinted into alleys and the cops followed, swinging their clubs. Scores of Negroes were caught and herded into garbage trucks. In all, 500 Negroes were arrested Friday. On Saturday, another massive march was launched and police arrested another 100—including N.A.A.C.P. Executive Secretary Roy Wilkins. But at week's end Jackson Mayor Thompson succumbed to the determined onslaught and acceded to several key demands for equal Negro employment opportunities in municipal jobs.

Other Southern towns were seething too. In Tallahassee, Fla., Negro students paraded, clapping and singing, before segregated theaters. Police moved in quickly, broke up the demonstrations by arresting 257 and dispersing the rest with volleys of tear gas. In Clarksville, Tenn., 300 Negroes, including Olympic Track Star Wilma Rudolph, crowded around a segregated restaurant demanding that they be served. In Baton Rouge, 100 Negro children marched in protest against segregated public facilities. In Oklahoma City, scores of Negroes sat stubbornly for nine hours trying to buy a meal in a segregated restaurant.

Beyond Dixie. Yet if the U.S. North thought it could view the South's spectacle with any complacency, it was wrong. The Negro revolt had burst all regional boundaries. In Philadelphia, Negro pickets battled with helmeted policemen during a week of demonstrations against job discrimination at a school construction site. Knives and broken bottles flashed, more than 20 people were hurt.

True to the fever of the season, this violent outburst was run by the N.A.A.C.P.—normally a mild-tempered organization. Herbert Hill, national labor secretary for the association, made it clear that things had changed: "The arena of combat for the N.A.A.C.P. has shifted from the courtroom to direct mass action." And he snapped that there would soon be big protests over job discrimination in Boston, St. Louis, Chicago, Washington and New York.

In Chicago, the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., leader of last month's Battle of Birmingham, appeared before 5,500 excited people and brought them shouting to their feet when he said: "You must defeat segregation in Chicago be-

AP

JACKSON: TRUSTIES & INTEGRATIONIST

UPI

PHILADELPHIA: N.A.A.C.P. PICKET

AP

TALLAHASSEE: PICKET & POLICE
"We can't wait any longer."

cause the de facto segregation of Chicago is as bad as the de jure segregation of Birmingham. We're through with tokenism and gradualism and see-how-far-you've-comeism. We're through with we've-done-more-for-your-people-than-anyone-elseism. We can't wait any longer. Now is the time."

The fever was everywhere, and every act seemed to fan the flames in another place. Fifteen hundred Chicago Negroes picketed a cemetery that had refused to cremate one of their race. In Michigan, a resort shut down when 50 pickets arrived with signs charging segregation there. In Baltimore, eight people went to jail after picketing a segregated amusement park.

In the Courts. But not all the battles were waged in the streets. Last week, in an opinion written by Justice Arthur Goldberg, the U.S. Supreme Court slapped down segregationist notions of stalling on integration. Wrote Goldberg: "The basic guarantees of our Constitution are warrants for the here and now, and unless there is an overwhelmingly compelling reason, they are to be promptly fulfilled." The decision came in a suit against segregated recreation facilities in Memphis. The Supreme Court ordered that they be immediately integrated. And at week's end Memphis officials grudgingly complied, except for swimming pools, which were shut down.

Although the civil rights revolution had been building for a long time, its intensity in the spring of 1963 caught the U.S. by surprise. Now the Kennedy Administration finds itself hard up against its most urgent domestic crisis. Georgia-born Secretary of State Dean Rusk labeled it "one of the gravest issues that we have had since 1865." In a Memorial Day speech at the Gettysburg battleground, Vice President Lyndon Johnson said: "The Negro today asks justice. We do not answer him, and we do not answer those who lie beneath this soil when we reply to the Negro by asking 'Patience.' "

But at the White House, there was an air of frustrated urgency. President Kennedy and Attorney General Bobby Kennedy are both earnest workers for civil rights. But they are also acutely aware of the political problems that confront them in the Negro revolution: the Administration badly needs Southern congressional votes for its legislative program this year; moreover, there is always the white Southern vote to consider in next year's elections.

The President and the Attorney General have therefore made every effort to iron out civil rights disputes in behind-the-scenes negotiations. Bobby has attended dozens of closed-door meetings with white and Negro leaders. They have not all been successful. At one, in New York, the Attorney General sat down with a group of Negro intellectuals led by Author James Baldwin. Bobby was stunned by the militance of the Negroes, particularly when one said that many Negroes might not fight for the U.S. against Cuba because of the lame Administration stand on integration thus far. When the group suggested to Bobby that the President might help the situation by making a dramatic public appearance—such as personally escorting a Negro into the University of Alabama—the Attorney General laughed in his disbelief that it could be a serious proposal. Dr. Kenneth Clark, Negro psychologist at New York's City College, said later: "There was no communication. I think we might as well have been talking different languages."

Deals and Bargains. Still, the Kennedys persisted in their efforts at private persuasion. Bobby met with Southern theater owners, department store managers and other businessmen, hoping to convince them that segregation hurts them economically. The President called a meeting this week of some 100 Southern businessmen to apply this same technique of persuasion.

In their present mood, Negroes were hardly satisfied by the Administration's efforts at deals, bargains, and closed-door negotiations. But as of last week, about the best they could expect from the Administration was a bill, to be sent to Congress, proposing to use the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution as a weapon to bring federal suits against private segregated firms and stores. Because nearly every imaginable item—from films for theaters to catch-up for restaurants—moves in interstate commerce, such a law would bring nearly every kind of business in the country within reach of a federal suit after a refusal to integrate.

Cracks in the Wall. Despite disappointments in the President's failure to rally the great moral and political force that his office and prestige can command, Negroes could count some breakthroughs last week. The University of Kentucky became the first school in the Southeastern Conference to open its athletic program to Negroes. Atlanta announced it would integrate its swimming pools. Negroes were allowed to lunch in five Charlotte, N.C., hotels and motels that were previously segregated. Harold Richardson, the first Negro to run for office in Maine (where Uncle Tom's Cabin was written 112 years ago) was elected a trustee of the Portland water district. Across the nation, Negro boycotts of U.S. businesses had forced new equality in job opportunities (see BUSINESS).

Such advances create chinks in the walls of segregation, but do not crumble them. That can be achieved only when the U.S. Negro, with the same zeal that marked his revolution in the spring of 1963, actually earns acceptance that cannot be legislated, or ordered by courts, or won in street battles. Whites—and not just Southern whites—point to high Negro crime, indigence and illegitimacy rates. Yet it may be fairly said that the Negro cannot overcome his handicaps until he is given at least his legal rights—the right to equal education, the right to vote wherever he may live, the right to equal job opportunity. Given these, it will remain for him to take, and deserve, his place in American society. Only then will the Negro revolution be really won.

The Next Stand

Wherever the revolt of the Negro may lead in the long run, one direct clash looms dead ahead. Alabama's Democratic Governor George Corley Wallace, 43, a fiery ex-Golden Gloves featherweight, is looking toward a showdown next week when two Negroes will attempt to enter the University of Alabama for the summer session.

Wallace intends to defy a federal court order for the enrollment of Vivian Malone, 20, at the university's main campus in Tuscaloosa, and David McGlathery, 27, at the school's Huntsville extension. Wallace's plan, as outlined to confidants, goes like this: 1) he will ring the Tuscaloosa campus with highway patrolmen; 2) escorted by a large force of patrolmen, he will go to the campus himself; 3) U.S. marshals will presumably bring Vivian Malone to the campus, and Wallace personally will bar the way; 4) if the marshals attempt to push past, Wallace may order his state cops to remove the Negro girl bodily from the premises. After that, not even George Wallace knows what will happen, but the results are not apt to be pleasant.

Slight Victory. To enforce federal court orders against Wallace's defiance, the U.S. Government stands ready to use not only marshals but at least 2,500 riot-trained troops. Many of those troops, sent to Alabama at the peak of Birmingham's riots last month, have since been removed. But they can return on short notice, as nobody knows better than Wallace. He recently filed a suit with the Supreme Court insisting that President Kennedy had threatened "a military dictatorship" by ordering the soldiers into Alabama in the first place. Last week the court brushed off the Governor's suit in one terse paragraph, which said that the presence of troops was part of "purely preparatory measures," and harmed no one.

At the same time, Wallace did win one slight victory. A Federal Court in Birmingham ordered Wallace to appear at a hearing on an injunction against his threat to interfere with university integration. Two marshals chased Wallace all one day, trying to serve a subpoena on him. Wallace kept 16 armed state cops surrounding him constantly, and the marshals could not break through. They finally gave up and handed the subpoena to the Governor's maid.

"Call to Arms." It is Wallace's boast that "I am a professional Southerner." But he by no means represents the whole South, or even all of Alabama. Last week he forced a resolution through the state legislature giving him a vote of confidence in his stand at the schoolhouse door. But before it passed, State Senator James E. Horton Jr. cried to his colleagues: "The presence of Governor Wallace will by implication attract a mob which by comparison will make Oxford, Miss., look like a Sunday-school picnic." And Senator George Hawkins warned, "This resolution is a call to arms to every hoodlum in the state."

For months, Wallace had been deluged with pleas from clergymen, businessmen and educators that he take a moderate stand in the university's integration. Last week 212 Tuscaloosa business and professional leaders signed a petition urging him to carry on a fight for segregation "by whatever legal redress you choose to seek—but we respectfully urge that you do not carry out your announced intention of personally and physically interfering with the order of the United States Court."

Moreover, unlike the spineless, standaside attitude taken by the University of Mississippi faculty during last fall's bloody Oxford riot, the University of Alabama faculty seems determined that there will be no student violence on their campus. President Frank Rose, an able educator and a moderate, months ago called in student leaders, pledged strict disciplinary action against segregationist demonstrators. Last week, with most of the main campus' 9,000 students already gone from Tuscaloosa for the summer, there seemed little inclination toward violence on the part of those who remained. Said one young man: "We're not going to let just one person stop all the rest of us from getting an education."

He meant Vivian Malone. But as things now stand, the one person who seems most likely to disrupt education at the University of Alabama is the Governor of the state.

AP

ALABAMA GOVERNOR SURROUNDED BY BODYGUARDS
One person stands in the way.

THE PRESIDENCY

Jack's Town

His back still aches, and he persists in that rocking chair. His national popularity has been slipping—from a Gallup poll peak of 83% two years ago to 64% last month. Like any U.S. President, he has problems, both domestic and foreign, in plenty. Yet, as have few Presidents before him, John Fitzgerald Kennedy has managed to "project his image"—and upon no place more than on his city of temporary residence: Washington, D.C.

Just 29 months into his presidency, Kennedy sets the style, tastes and temper of Washington more surely than Franklin Roosevelt did in twelve years, Dwight Eisenhower in eight, Harry Truman in seven. A politician's politician in a city that loves and lives politics, Kennedy is slavishly followed —and more than slightly feared. Last week, as he turned 46, Washington itself was acting his age.

Kennedy represents the coming to power of a new generation, one that was blooded in World War II. A pragmatic generation, it cares more for results than philosophies. Most New Frontiersmen are of this generation, and they follow in their leader's image. President Kennedy, discussing the sort of men he wants around him, recently said: "There's nothing like brains. You can't beat brains." New Frontiersmen may not all have the best brains in the world —but they put up a mighty good show. They can reel off facts and figures about complex issues without ever consulting a note. They approach their jobs with a youthful zest that is almost gung-ho. They love to talk of their official travels, always by jet and generally to some far-off land. They may make mistakes—but they make them efficiently.

UPI

THE PRESIDENT AT 46
Cigars up, hats off and out with button-downs.

In their intense preoccupation, they sometimes seem almost too close to their jobs. Not so long ago, the abiding subject of conversation in Washington's political circles was the desires and problems of the folks back home. But no longer. To the New Frontiersmen, although they are concerned about problems everywhere, everything of final importance happens in Washington. What they talk about is Washington and the White House, and the result is a curious quality of intellectual inbreeding. Sometimes they almost sound as though they had invented the town.

Kennedy's impact on Washington is seen in countless ways. Cigar sales have soared (Jack smokes them). Hat sales have fallen (Jack does not wear them). Bureaucrats show up at work in dark suits, well-shined shoes, avoid button-down shirts (Jack says they are out of style). The more eager New Frontiersmen secure their striped ties with PT-boat clasps—and seem not the least bit embarrassed. The most popular restaurants in Washington are Le Bistro and the Jockey Club, which serve the light Continental foods that Jackie Kennedy features on the White House menu. The less palatable Colony restaurant, tops during the Republican Eisenhower Administration, went broke and has closed.

Reading Rage. Although Kennedy's back prevents him from participating too actively, his ideas about physical fitness have put all official Washington into sweat socks—or at least riding boots. The towpath along the C. & O. canal now has hikers' traffic jams. The Royal Canadian Air Force exercise manual is a hard-to-get item in Washington. Besides touch football, the White House staff has taken to softball—with more zeal than skill. The staff was recently whipped 10-3 by a bunch of newsmen.

On another level, Washington politicians of both parties eagerly collect historical quotations on file cards so they can toss them into their speeches just as Ted Sorensen does for Kennedy. Speed reading is the rage (Kennedy's well-publicized reading rate is 1,200 words per minute). Teddy Kennedy has even started a speed-reading class among his new colleagues in the Senate (the names and number of those participating are a deep dark secret). Bobby runs cram courses for New Frontiersmen on matters sometimes classic, sometimes current, in sporadic seminars in his Hickory Hill home.

Unlike the past two Administrations, in which Bess Truman and Mamie Eisenhower merely tolerated their roles as First Lady, a White House social affair hosted by Jackie obliterates all other partygoing in the capital. Her redecorations have sent White House tour attendance soaring. She helped preserve historic Lafayette Park from encroachment by glass-and-steel office façades, chased irksome street photographers and tourist guides off Pennsylvania Avenue sidewalks in front of the White House. Her hairdos and clothing fashions have long been imitated nationwide. Now she is pregnant—and a favorite greeting among the capital's menfolk is: "Is your wife pregnant? Mine is."

In today's Washington, no one really attacks President Kennedy personally. Respect plays a large part in this restraint. So does fear. The word is around that the Kennedys will exert their vast influence against those who buck them. The summary dismissal of Chief of Naval Operations George Anderson, who had publicly expressed his opposition to some of the policies of Defense Secretary Robert McNamara, is still a subject of low-buzzing Washington conversation. It is an open secret that Commerce Secretary Luther H. Hodges, who at 65 is out of style and step with most of his Cabinet colleagues, will be the next top Administration official to go. Capitol Hill's Democratic liberals often chafe at Kennedy's pragmatic politics, but they do not often express their feelings in public. Neither do Republican legislators, even in private conversations and no matter how strongly they may feel about Kennedy.

Filing the Brandy. It was in such an aura that the President celebrated his 46th birthday. He hurried through an embarrassingly commercial award as Father of the Year, not even permitting photographs of the ceremony. But he did allow some pictures as he chatted with British M.P. Patrick Gordon Walker and quipped to newsmen: "You all look older today."

He also lunched with nine Democratic Governors, accepted a keg of 46-year-old brandy from some New York doctors. Said Press Secretary Pierre Salinger: "We'll probably send it to the National Archives to age." Kennedy took in a show given by Caroline's kindergarten class and attended a party thrown by his staff. There he was coaxed into reading a Ted Sorensen-written speech that began: "Twoscore and six years ago, there was brought forth at Brookline, Mass. . . ." At night he and most of the Kennedys, plus such personal friends as Actor David Niven and Florida Senator George Smathers, cruised the Potomac on the Secretary of the Navy's yacht Sequoia. This party, planned by Jackie, lasted nearly six hours, was enlivened by a thunder and lightning storm. Next day Kennedy placed a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknowns in Arlington National Cemetery, then helicoptered with Jackie to Maryland's Camp David for a mountain rest.

FOREIGN RELATIONS

A Mess, but Wonderful

During his visit to the U.S. last January, Italy's Premier Amintore Fanfani invited President and Mrs. Kennedy to come to Italy in the spring. The President accepted, added West Germany and West Berlin to the itinerary. Then, for reasons of sentiment (and domestic politics), he decided to go to Ireland too. But no sooner had the White House announced the trip than complications began setting in. Items:

▶ In Washington, Jackie learned she was pregnant and would have to stay home.

▶ In West Germany, Christian Democratic Union leaders forced gnarled old Konrad Adenauer to agree to step down next fall and let Ludwig Erhard take over as Chancellor. Accordingly, Kennedy's host in West Germany will be a lame duck, and Kennedy will have the sticky problem of treating with Erhard while Adenauer, who openly dislikes Erhard, is still in charge. Adenauer decided to accompany Kennedy

Newsweek
THE MAGAZINE OF NEWS SIGNIFICANCE

Pub. Accounts

NBC News

An ex-cop in Jackson, Miss., mauls and kicks a fallen Negro

Jack Thornell—Jackson Daily News

'Terribly Dangerous'

Amid fresh scenes of brutality, the United States drifted last week into a growing racial crisis that confronted President John F. Kennedy with perhaps his most crucial domestic decision since he took office.

Ugly violence erupted at a Woolworth five-and-dime lunch counter (above) in Jackson, Miss.—like Birmingham, a citadel of last-ditch segregation. It broke out, too, in Tallahassee, Fla., Philadelphia, Pa., and High Point, N.C. In communities north and south of the Mason-Dixon line, nerves stretched taut as the Memorial Day weekend marked the beginning of the school vacation, when millions of students would add their pent-up energies to the fierce head of steam that was still building.

During the long, hot summer, Negro impatience with segregation was sure to increase, given new impetus by a string of favorable Supreme Court decisions. The latest of these came last week. Ruling that the city of Memphis could not wait until 1971 to desegregate the rest of its parks and playgrounds, the Court in effect said: do it now. It rejected the Memphis argument that total desegregation could lead to racial strife with the words: "The basic guarantees of our Constitution are warrants for the here and now and, unless there is an overwhelmingly compelling reason, they are to be promptly fulfilled."

Urgency: In the White House, now gripped with a sense of urgency, the President agonized over his course of action. He was under heavy pressure to demonstrate some personal commitment to the Negro's cause. No one, least of all the President, doubted that the desegregation battle, once out of control, could be a national catastrophe. The question was how best to mobilize the immense resources of the Presidency and the U.S. Government to resolve the racial crisis.

Until now, Mr. Kennedy's civil-rights efforts have emphasized action through the courts—which will be aided by the latest Supreme Court decision—and behind-the-scenes persuasion. But now many Presidential advisers, including Attorney General Robert Kennedy, favor civil-rights and desegregation measures with sharper legal teeth.

Risks: But if he plumped for a strong bill, the President ran a whole set of risks. Some argued he might exacerbate already raw Southern relationships—and fail to win passage of such a bill itself. Beyond that, he could bring on a Senate filibuster, threaten the chances of the rest of his legislative program, and risk losing the entire South in the 1964 election.

To take Congressional soundings, Robert Kennedy met secretly early in the week with eight Democratic senators representing a wide range of sentiment—from Minnesota's liberal Hubert Humphrey to Georgia's conservative Richard Russell, the acknowledged leader of Southern resistance in the Senate. Bobby Kennedy bluntly said the nation was in the middle of a civil-rights crisis—"not only in the South but in the North." And he added: "This is a terribly dangerous situation. These people are looking to the Federal government for the protection of their rights and often there is nothing we can do until we must send in troops to preserve order . . . We will need new legislation."

Kennedy said he expected the President to make requests for two specific laws that the Justice Department was drawing up. In effect, the bills would:

▶Outlaw discrimination in stores engaged in interstate commerce, thus forcing chain stores, hotels, and restaurants that do business south of the Mason-Dixon line to open lunch counters and other facilities to Negroes.

▶Allow the Federal government to take the initiative in school desegregation cases, thereby shifting the burden of litigation from private individuals to the Justice Department.

The Attorney General's proposals were flatly opposed by Senator Russell, who declared that maintenance of civil rights—and of law and order as well—must be left to the states. The meeting broke off in a stalemate. But on the Republican side, Sen. Jacob Javits, New York liberal, called a meeting of GOP senators this week to plead for a tough civil-rights bill. "This is, in a sense, the moment of truth for Republican senators," Javits told his colleagues. "Will we be the party of Lincoln; will we espouse and take up the leadership in the civil-rights struggle?"

Persuasion: While still pondering the question of legislation, the President determined to try more persuasion. He made it clear he would go on the air if a crisis arose over Negro efforts to enter the University of Alabama next week. And he followed his brother's lead in trying to convince governors, city officials, merchants, and others involved, that the fuse on the civil-rights powder keg is burning short. That was the message he delivered to a group of nine Democratic governors when he urged them to assume leadership in securing civil rights. It will be his theme this week when he meets with 100 top executives whose companies do business in the South. He will urge them—owners of such enterprises as theaters, hotels, variety stores, and drugstores—to end discrimination in accommodating the public and to open up more job opportunities for Negroes.

Herblock © 1963 The Washington Post

Eclipse

Some of the invited businessmen were bullish on the outcome of the meeting. One—Milton Elsberg, president of Drug Fair stores, which has a chain of 77 outlets in Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, and the District of Columbia, said: "We've been integrated for years. It's never hurt us a bit. I think if everyone doing business in the South could just be convinced that civil rights are here to stay, that if all of them opened up, none would be hurt. Then this problem would disappear."

But a Northern executive of Kress dime stores said: "In certain areas of the Deep South we have been forced by local custom to move as the community moves. Of course we could issue a desegregation order, but then we would have to close the stores because of violence. We know the tenor of the South. We wouldn't want to be the first or the last. It is up to the community leaders, and it would have to be all the lunch counters, not just our stores. In Mobile it worked like slicked grease because the town's top leaders acted."

Prospects: At the weekend, after long sessions of drafting and deliberating legislative proposals at the Justice Department and the White House, the Administration took stock anew of Congressional prospects. Even some advisers hitherto reluctant to take on the risks of a tough civil-rights bill had come to believe it would be an even greater risk to do nothing. Hopes for passage of such a bill were raised by the likelihood of Republican support and the spur that many congressmen have felt from the shocking scenes of violence in Birmingham and Jackson.

Finally, President Kennedy made his decision. He will send a special message to Congress this week offering his legislative proposals and the pressing reasons for them. And the Attorney General will take the same proposals later in the week before Rep. Emanuel Celler's civil-rights subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee.

In his call for legislation, and in his efforts to rally the Southern moderates, the President may well be choosing to abandon his role in the racial crisis as, only, a very interested party for the risk-fraught responsibility of a national leader. He may have come to believe—along with some of his critics—that only national leadership can avert a bloody racial clash between extremists, a clash that could leave a scar on the nation as deep as any since the Civil War.

The Battle of Jackson

The first shot in the battle of Jackson, Miss., was a jet of mustard, fired by a bouffant blonde in defense of the Southern way of life and the racial integrity of a dime-store lunch counter.

Her target was a Negro coed, sitting in at the counter with two Tougaloo Southern Christian College schoolmates. For two riotous hours that followed—while police waited outside—howling white toughs splattered, cuffed, and kicked Negro and white demonstrators. The opening battle was a rout, but it only began the war—a war over segregation as desperate and as dangerous as the barely stilled crisis in Birmingham.

With biracial negotiations spluttering, the three Negro students headed down busy Capitol Street to Woolworth's and took seats midway down the 52-seat lunch counter. Five of seven white customers stalked out. A sixth—a graying housewife—left, too, but told the Negroes: "I'd like to stay here with you but my husband is waiting for me." Only a white girl remained at the counter, eying the Negroes stonily as she finished her banana split.

'Go Get 'Em': With a crowd of duck-tailed white teen-agers gathering in the aisle, store officials roped off the counter and doused its lights. "Go back to Russia, you black bastards," someone jeered. Moments later, the blonde snatched up the mustard bottle, tugged back the Negro girl's collar, and squirted mustard down her back. Cheering, white youths bounded onto the counter for more ammunition—mustard, ketchup, salt, pepper, sugar—to shower on the impassive Negroes. From the crowd, swelling from 50 to 300, came the battle cries: "Kill the black bastards! . . . Go get 'em!"

"I'm gonna go up there and push that black bastard off of that stool," Bennie Oliver, a husky, 26-year-old former cop, muttered at the back of the crowd. Shouldering up front, he slugged demonstrator Memphis Norman, 21, in the face, spilling him and the two Negro girls beside him from their seats. While a detective watched, the sneaker-shod Oliver kicked Norman again and again in the face. Blood streamed from Norman's mouth. Finally, the detective stepped in, arresting Oliver for assault—and Norman for disturbing the peace. (Two days later, Oliver was sentenced to 30 days and fined $100. The penalties for demonstrators

Fred Blackwell—Jackson Daily News

Jackson: Whites shower demonstrators with sugar, ketchup, mustard who tried to enter white restaurants: six months in jail and $500 fine.)

More demonstrators, white and Negro, arrived, took seats, and held them through the rain of ketchup, mustard, and sugar and the volley of jeers: "You're sick, you're sick, you're sick!" One youth pushed up to white Tougaloo sociologist John Salter and gashed his face with a punch. A half-dozen cheering mates poured salt and pepper into the cut. And down the counter, a flying milk bottle knocked out Negro demonstrator Walter Williams. As he tried to get up on regaining consciousness, a thick-necked man jumped full weight on his back, whooped a Tarzan yell, and ran off into the cheering crowd. Jars, shakers, and squeeze-bottles flew, then ashtrays and glass figurines from bric-a-brac shelves nearby.

RSVP: Outside, Tougaloo's white president, A.D. Beittel, pleaded with police to "do something . . . or somebody is going to get killed." But the cops said they couldn't go in unless the management asked them to. Once the mob started chucking merchandise, store officials took their own measures; they turned off the lights and closed the store. Within fifteen minutes, the crowd broke up, and the demonstrators went back to school.

Police were quicker to act in the days that followed, arresting small bands of Negro pickets on sight and ordering hostile whites to keep moving. When some Negro pickets refused to budge, police used Negro prison trusties to carry them into paddy wagons. And if mass demonstrations came, Jackson was set to jail marchers by the thousands in state-fair exhibit buildings.

Hardly anyone thought such a face-down could be avoided. In Jackson, a city of 95,000 whites and 52,000 Negroes, integrationists had picked a target even tougher than Birmingham. There, white business leaders finally swapped promises of token desegregation for peace. But chances for a productive dialogue were slimmer in Jackson, where the militantly segregationist Citizens Council pervades both the political and business hierarchies. Gov. Ross Barnett and Mayor Allen Thompson are members, and the board of directors is heavy with business leaders. "Here," the segregationist Jackson Daily News proclaimed, "we have unity."

Walkout: So integrationists were hardly cheered when Thompson agreed to meet a Negro negotiating committee, provided he could choose some of the members. Monday's opening meeting broke up when thirteen of the seventeen Negro negotiators walked out on the unyielding mayor. After the lunch-counter outbreak next day, they met again, and the mayor—so the Negroes thought—gave some ground. But they had barely carried the news to a jubilant mass rally when the mayor denied that he had made any concessions at all.

And so, on the fourth day of the siege, the headlong cycle of mass marching and mass jailings began. Out of Farish Street Baptist Church streamed hundreds of Negro youngsters—7 to 18 years old—waving American flags and chanting: "We want freedom!"

As fast as they came, a three-deep line of police herded them, singing and crying, into prison—and garbage—trucks for the one-way ride to jail. A policeman tried to wrest a flag from one Negro. When the demonstrator held on, the cop knocked him down and clubbed him with a billy. Minutes later, 60 state troopers toting carbines, shotguns, and billies rolled up and joined 50 local cops in a surge up the crowded street. A trooper poked a gun in one Negro's back, ordered him to move, then clubbed him in the face with the gun butt. And off to the state-fair stockade —police called it the "Fairgrounds Motel"—rode 450 Negro prisoners, still chanting for freedom.

Spelldown: Next day, 100 more students were jailed. And, outside Woolworth's, police made the biggest catches of all: the NAACP's national executive secretary, Roy Wilkins, and state chief Medgar Evers. They were barely out of their car to start picketing when police closed in and demanded Wilkins' name. "R-o-y W-i-l-k-i-n-s," he spelled, and off he and Evers went on a felony charge of restraint of trade. Hope sparked when Mayor Thompson met Negro negotiators again. But he was unbudging on key demands, and demonstrations went on.

Negro leaders know when they started that, as the NAACP's Medgar Evers said, the welling crisis could "easily turn into an ugly outbreak of violence." But he summed up the Negro mood in two portentous words: "Let's march."

▶Sparks of trouble sputtered and flared elsewhere in the South in the spreading wave of Negro demonstrations. In High Point, N.C., 1,000 milling whites set off a smoke flare in the path of 500 integrationist marchers, and a white picket was beaten by a man who broke through police lines. Moving on, the demonstrators were pelted with rocks and bricks. And in Tallahassee, Fla., police broke up a line of 150 shouting Negro students with tear gas.

Nor was the North immune. In Philadelphia, lines of Negroes picketing for nondiscriminatory hiring on a school construction project clashed three times with police. Fourteen demonstrators and fourteen policemen were hurt. One cop's wrist was slashed with a knife, another's with a broken bottle. A third policeman was clubbed with a bullhorn, a fourth with a camera. In all-night negotiations, finally, the Negroes won promises of jobs. And a continent's breadth away, local Negro leaders nominated the next target of the mass-demonstration technique—Los Angeles.

Associated Press

Philadelphia: Pickets' retreat

The Other Side

While racial violence seized the headlines last week, moderates seized the day in communities scattered across the South. Sometimes under the gun—and sometimes beating Negro activists to the draw—they took down the white-only signs from doors long barred to Negroes.

▶In Knoxville, Tenn., 2,500 prominent white citizens signed a petition urging a nondiscriminatory "open city." The seeds of change thus planted bore fruit last week when leading hotel and motel operators voted to serve Negroes, and major white hospitals announced plans to integrate in August.

▶In Charlotte, N.C., unsettled by the wave of mass demonstrations that had swept five sister cities across the state, eight hotels and motels scrubbed out their color lines.

▶In Lexington, Ky., the University of Kentucky jumped the gun on the Southeastern Conference by opening all its athletic teams to Negroes—thus tapping a new well of potential talent as yet untouched by rivals sprawling from Tennessee to Mississippi.

▶In Atlanta, the city opened its public swimming pools to Negroes in compliance with a Federal court order. And the Chamber of Commerce issued a statement urging all businesses dealing with the public to desegregate "as expeditiously as good judgment will dictate." Without saying so, the chamber plainly meant some hold-out downtown

Haywood Paravicini—Montgomery Advertiser

Ducking U.S. marshals, Alabama's Wallace (center, in white coat) stands behind state police guards hotels and restaurants that had been picketed sporadically in recent weeks.

Just such an open-door policy had been enacted into law by the Louisville, Ky., city council by the time integrationist leader Martin Luther King Jr. and a cadre of lieutenants—fresh from the battle of Birmingham—flew into town last week for a speaking date.

The trip itself was routine. What was remarkable—though it raised hardly an eyebrow in Louisville other than King's—was the red-carpet treatment the city gave the nation's best-known apostle of integration. A police crew headed by a Negro lieutenant gave his Cadillac—on loan from a local auto dealer—a VIP escort from the airport. And when it came time for King to leave his integrated hotel for a visit to city hall, Mayor William O. Cowger sent his official limousine to ride him there in style.

Bargain With the Devil

To most Americans, it was a twice-told tale. Only the names, the dates, and the places had been changed since Orval Faubus made his last stand in Little Rock and Ross Barnett barred the gates to Ole Miss—both to be shouldered aside by Federal troops. Now, incredible as it seemed in this tenth year of the Supreme Court's school desegregation ruling, Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama was playing out the sad old story once again.

Was he serious about his vow to block two Negro applicants due at the University of Alabama under Federal court order on June 10? If there were any lingering doubts, Wallace set about dispelling them last week. He and Ross Barnett—who had integration worries of his own with a second Negro student bound for Ole Miss this week—digressed from an official-business chat to swap notes. And Wallace played tag all week with U.S. marshals trying to serve him an order to appear in Federal court on a government injunction suit to halt his vowed obstruction.

Screening himself behind sixteen helmeted state troopers, Wallace managed to duck, though once he had to ride ingloriously up the freight elevator at a downtown Montgomery hotel.

The marshals handed the papers to his maid—a prison trusty—and told her: "Now you be sure the governor gets this," but Wallace claimed that expedient was illegal.

Let George Do It: Next day, his dark hair combed back and his smallish frame well turned out in a black suit, Wallace propped his feet on his cluttered office desk and told NEWSWEEK's Joseph Cumming wryly: "If Martin Luther King, in order to test the trespass laws of a state, can break the law when he is only an individual, why can't the governor . . . test the laws?"

And to Wallace, testing a law meant defying it, no matter how well settled it had become in case after case. In his world, integrationists are kissing cousins to Communists, the Federal government is a poacher on the state's preserve, and Washington liberals are so many dilettantes who naïvely ignore the Negro threat in their own backyard and will be "unjoined from their theories by a tire chain." And the Court? "Thomas Jefferson warned us about the Supreme Court. In 1821, he called it a thief in the night . . . taking away our rights bit by bit . . ."

Such a world is well suited to quixotic gestures. "When I go to stand in the door, it is to raise dramatically the question of sovereignty of the state," Wallace said. "It is raising a constitutional question . . . If I feel we should not admit people to a school because it would bring about a disruption of stable social relationships, then I'm doing my duty to carry this out."

For all his legal rhetoric and his pledge to keep order, responsible Alabamians were worried about Wallace's flirtation with danger. More than 200 residents of the university town of Tuscaloosa talked down the objections of the Ku Klux Klan's Imperial Wizard, Robert Shelton, and petitioned Wallace not to come. Groups of businessmen and doctors sent similar messages. And in a State Senate debate over a resolution supporting Wallace's stand, James E. Horton Jr. warned that the governor's presence "would, by implication, attract a mob the like of which will make Oxford seem like a Sunday picnic." Chastened by the memory, the senate tacked on an amendment urging Alabamians to stay home and "leave the matter . . . [to] the governor." And in a speech, the governor himself seconded the idea: "I don't want you to stand with me . . . I won't need any help."

Dreams: Indeed, Wallace seemed less touched by the nightmare of Ole Miss than by his own dreams of martyrdom in this latest of the South's Lost Causes. "We're going to keep the peace," he insisted. If the Negroes are enrolled, would he still maintain order? "The state of Alabama is not going to baby-sit on people who forced their way," Wallace flared. But, on second thought, he added: "I'll do my duty to the people of the state."

The tragic flaw was that Wallace had forgotten the lesson he mastered so well as Golden Gloves bantamweight champ of Alabama two years running: never lead with your chin. Even his best friends tried to tell him that his doorstep defiance was implausible, but Wallace kept on acting like a man courting conquest by Federal arms. "He's got to keep a poor bargain with the devil," one associate said. "He knows he hasn't got a leg to stand on. But he's just as determined to go through with it."

Pub. Accomm.
Gen.

88TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

S. 1732

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

JUNE 19, 1963

Mr. MANSFIELD (for himself, Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. KUCHEL, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. KEATING, Mr. MORSE, Mr. SCOTT, Mr. DOUGLAS, Mr. BEALL, Mr. SYMINGTON, Mr. FONG, Mr. CLARK, Mr. JAVITS, Mr. HART, Mr. CASE, Mr. YOUNG of Ohio, Mr. COOPER, Mr. DODD, Mr. BAYH, Mr. BREWSTER, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. ENGLE, Mr. GRUENING, Mr. HARTKE, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. JACKSON, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. LONG of Missouri, Mr. MCCARTHY, Mr. MCGOVERN, Mr. MCINTYRE, Mr. MCNAMARA, Mr. METCALF, Mr. MUSKIE, Mr. NELSON, Mrs. NEUBERGER, Mr. PASTORE, Mr. PELL, Mr. PROXMIRE, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. RIBICOFF, Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey, Mr. DOMINICK, Mr. CHURCH, Mr. MOSS, and Mr. MCGEE) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Commerce

A BILL

To eliminate discrimination in public accommodations affecting interstate commerce.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Interstate Public Accommodations Act of 1963."

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. (a) The American people have become increasingly mobile during the last generation, and millions of American citizens travel each year from State to State by rail, air, bus, automobile, and other means. A substantial number of such travelers are members of minority racial

1 and religious groups. These citizens, particularly Negroes,
2 are subjected in many places to discrimination and segrega-
3 tion, and they are frequently unable to obtain the goods and 4 services available to other interstate travelers.

5 (b) Negroes and members of other minority groups who 6 travel interstate are frequently unable to obtain adequate
7 lodging accommodations during their travels, with the result
8 that they may be compelled to stay at hotels or motels of 9 poor and inferior quality, travel great distances from their 10 normal routes to find adequate accommodations, or make 11 detailed arrangements for lodging far in advance of scheduled
12 interstate travel.

13 (c) Negroes and members of other minority groups
14 who travel interstate are frequently unable to obtain adequate 15 food service at convenient places along their routes, with 16 the result that many are dissuaded from traveling interstate, 17 while others must travel considerable distances from their 18 intended routes in order to obtain adequate food service.

19 (d) Goods, services, and persons in the amusement and 20 entertainment industries commonly move in interstate com-
21 merce, and the entire American people benefit from the in-22 creased cultural and recreational opportunities afforded
23 thereby. Practices of audience discrimination and segrega-24 tion artificially restrict the number of persons to whom the 25 interstate amusement and entertainment industries may offer

1 their goods and services. The burdens imposed on inter-
2 state commerce by such practices and the obstructions to the 3 free flow of commerce which result therefrom are serious
4 and substantial.

5 (e) Retail establishments in all States of the Union
6 purchase a wide variety and a large volume of goods from 7 business concerns located in other States and in foreign 8 nations. Discriminatory practices in such establishments, 9 which in some instances have led to the withholding of 10 patronage by those affected by such practices, inhibit and re-
11 strict the normal distribution of goods in the interstate 12 market.

13 (f) Fraternal, religious, scientific, and other organiza-
14 tions engaged in interstate operations are frequently dissuaded
15 from holding conventions in cities which they would other-16 wise select because the public facilities in such cities are 17 either not open to all members of racial or religious minority
18 groups or are available only on a segregated basis.

19 (g) Business organizations are frequently hampered in 20 obtaining the services of skilled workers and persons in the 21 professions who are likely to encounter discrimination based 22 on race, creed, color, or national origin in restaurants, retail 23 stores, and places of amusement in the area where their 24 services are needed. Business organizations which seek to 25 avoid subjecting their employees to such discrimination and

1 to avoid the strife resulting therefrom are restricted in the 2 choice of location for their offices and plants. Such dis-
3 crimination thus reduces the mobility of the national labor
4 force and prevents the most effective allocation of national 5 resources, including the interstate movement of industries,
6 particularly in some of the areas of the Nation most in need
7 of industrial and commercial expansion and development.

8 (h) The discriminatory practices described above are 9 in all cases encouraged, fostered, or tolerated in some degree
10 by the governmental authorities of the States in which they 11 occur, which license or protect the businesses involved by 12 means of laws and ordinances and the activities of their 13 executive and judicial officers. Such discriminatory prac-
14 tices, particularly when their cumulative effect throughout 15 the Nation is considered, take on the character of action by 16 the States and therefore fall within the ambit of the equal
17 protection clause of the fourteenth amendment to the Con-
18 stitution of the United States.

19 (i) The burdens on and obstructions to commerce which 20 are described above can best be removed by invoking the 21 powers of Congress under the fourteenth amendment and the 22 commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States to 23 prohibit discrimination based on race, color, religion, or 24 national origin in certain public establishments.

1 RIGHT TO NONDISCRIMINATION IN PLACES OF PUBLIC
2 ACCOMMODATION

3 SEC. 3. (a) All persons shall be entitled, without dis-
4 crimination or segregation on account of race, color, religion,
5 or national origin, to the full and equal enjoyment of the 6 goods, services, facilities, privileges, advantages, and accom-
7 modations of the following public establishments:

8 (1) any hotel, motel, or other public place engaged
9 in furnishing lodging to transient guests, including guests
10 from other States or traveling in interstate commerce;

11 (2) any motion picture house, theater, sports arena,
12 stadium, exhibition hall, or other public place of amuse-
13 ment or entertainment which customarily presents mo-
14 tion pictures, performing groups, athletic teams, exhibi-
15 tions, or other sources of entertainment which move in 16 interstate commerce; and

17 (3) any retail shop, department store, market, 18 drugstore, gasoline station, or other public place which 19 keeps goods for sale, any restaurant, lunchroom, lunch
20 counter, soda fountain, or other public place engaged in 21 selling food for consumption on the premises, and any 22 other establishment where goods, services, facilities,

1 privileges, advantages, or accommodations are held out
2 to the public for sale, use, rent, or hire, if—
3 (i) the goods, services, facilities, privileges,
4 advantages, or accommodations offered by any such 5 place or establishment are provided to a substantial
6 degree to interstate travelers,
7 (ii) a substantial portion of any goods held out
8 to the public by any such place or establishment
9 for sale, use, rent, or hire has moved in interstate
10 commerce,
11 (iii) the activities or operations of such place
12 or establishment otherwise substantially affect in-13 terstate travel or the interstate movement of goods
14 in commerce, or 15 (iv) such place or establishment is an integral 16 part of an establishment included under this sub-
17 section.
18 For the purpose of this subsection, the term "integral part"
19 means physically located on the premises occupied by an 20 establishment, or located contiguous to such premises and 21 owned, operated, or controlled, directly or indirectly, by 22 or for the benefit of, or leased from the persons or business
23 entities which own, operate or control an establishment.
24 (b) The provisions of this Act shall not apply to a 25 bona fide private club or other establishment not open to

1 the public, except to the extent that the facilities of such
2 establishment are made available to the customers or patrons
3 of an establishment within the scope of subsection (a).

4 PROHIBITION AGAINST DENIAL OF OR INTERFERENCE WITH 5 THE RIGHT TO NONDISCRIMINATION

6 SEC. 4. No person, whether acting under color of law
7 or otherwise, shall (a) withhold, deny, or attempt to with-
8 hold or deny, or deprive or attempt to deprive, any person
9 of any right or privilege secured by section 3, or (b) inter-
10 fere or attempt to interfere with any right or privilege
11 secured by section 3, or (c) intimidate, threaten, or coerce 12 any person with a purpose of interfering with any right or 13 privilege secured by section 3, or (d) punish or attempt to 14 punish any person for exercising or attempting to exercise
15 any right or privilege secured by section 3, or (e) incite or 16 aid or abet any person to do any of the foregoing.

17 CIVIL ACTION FOR PREVENTIVE RELIEF

18 SEC. 5. (a) Whenever any person has engaged or 19 there are reasonable grounds to believe that any person is 20 about to engage in any act or practice prohibited by section
21 4, a civil action for preventive relief, including an application
22 for a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order,
23 or other order, may be instituted (1) by the person
24 aggrieved, or (2) by the Attorney General for or in the 25 name of the United States if he certifies that he has received

1 a written complaint from the person aggrieved and that in 2 his judgment (i) the person aggrieved is unable to initiate 3 and maintain appropriate legal proceedings and (ii) the 4 purposes of this Act will be materially furthered by the 5 filing of an action.

6 (b) In any action commenced pursuant to this Act by 7 the person aggrieved, he shall if he prevails, be allowed a
8 reasonable attorney's fee as part of the costs.

9 (c) A person shall be deemed unable to initiate and 10 maintain appropriate legal proceedings within the meaning of 11 subsection (a) of this section when such person is unable,
12 either directly or through other interested persons or organi-
13 zations, to bear the expense of the litigation or to obtain 14 effective legal representation; or when there is reason to be-15 lieve that the institution of such litigation by him would 16 jeopardize the employment or economic standing of, or might 17 result in injury or economic damage to, such person, his 18 family, or his property.

19 (d) In case of any complaint received by the Attorney
20 General alleging a violation of section 4 in any jurisdiction
21 where State or local laws or regulations appear to him to 22 forbid the act or practice involved, the Attorney General
23 shall notify the appropriate State and local officials and,
24 upon request, afford them a reasonable time to act under 25 such State or local laws or regulations before he institutes an action. Compliance with the foregoing sentence shall not be required if the Attorney General shall file with the court a certificate that the delay consequent upon such compliance in the particular case would adversely affect the interests of the United States, or that, in the particular case, compliance would be fruitless.

(e) In any case of a complaint received by the Attorney General, including a case within the scope of subsection (d), the Attorney General shall, before instituting an action, utilize the services of any Federal agency or instrumentality which may be available to attempt to secure compliance with section 4 by voluntary procedures, if in his judgment such procedures are likely to be effective in the circumstances.

JURISDICTION

SEC. 6. (a) The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction of proceedings instituted pursuant to this Act and shall exercise the same without regard to whether the aggrieved party shall have exhausted any administrative or other remedies that may be provided by law.

(b) This Act shall not preclude any individual or any State or local agency from pursuing any remedy that may be available under any Federal or State law, including any State statute or ordinance requiring nondiscrimination in public establishments or accommodations.

88TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

S. 1732

A BILL

To eliminate discrimination in public accommodations affecting interstate commerce.

By Mr. MANSFIELD, Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. KUCHEL, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. KEATING, Mr. MORSE, Mr. SCOTT, Mr. DOUGLAS, Mr BEALL, Mr. SYMINGTON, Mr. FONG, Mr. CLARK, Mr. JAVITS, Mr. HART, Mr. CASE, Mr. YOUNG of Ohio, Mr. COOPER, Mr. DODD, Mr. BAYH, Mr. BREWSTER, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. ENGLE, Mr. GRUENING, Mr. HARTKE, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. JACKSON, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. LONG of Missouri, Mr. MCCARTHY, Mr. MCGOVERN, Mr. MCINTYRE, Mr. MCNAMARA, Mr. METCALF, Mr. MUSKIE, Mr. NELSON, Mrs. NEUBERGER, Mr. PASTORE, Mr. PELL, Mr. PROXMIRE, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. RIBICOFF, Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey, Mr. DOMINICK, Mr. CHURCH, Mr. MOSS, and Mr. MCGEE

JUNE 19, 1963

Read twice and referred to the Committee on Commerce

Pub. Accommn. South

The Courier-Journal THURSDAY, JUNE 27, 1963

Combs Orders Bias Ended In State-Licensed Firms

Violators' Permits May Be Suspended

Capitol Might Deny Funds To Schools Not Integrated

By ALLAN M. TROUT
Courier-Journal Bureau

Frankfort, Ky., June 26.—Governor Bert T. Combs issued an executive order Wednesday aimed at ending racial discrimination in all establishments and by all professions licensed by the State.

Full-faith enforcement of his order would erase the color barrier in such areas as merchandising, entertainment, public dining, housing, recreation, personal services, hospitals, nursing homes, barber and beauty shops, funeral homes, and the like.

Potentially, the order is broad enough to reach into virtually every facet of secular activity in Kentucky outside the private homes of citizens.

GOVERNOR BERT COMBS

The Governor's action was taken at 10 a.m. in his conference suite. It was witnessed by Negro and white representatives of the various groups working toward realistic integration in Kentucky.

Responds To Pressure

The order was his response to pressure to amend the call to permit the Legislature now sitting in special session to consider a bill to ban by law racial discrimination in public accommodations.

Governor explains reasons for his order. Page 12.

The Governor acknowledged that his order is not underpinned by a State law against bias, as was the case in Indiana. But, he went on, his order is founded legally on this premise:

That the holders of State permits and licenses are under as much compulsion to comply with the federal law as they are to observe State law.

One significant by-product of the order, the Governor said, might be for the Department of Education to deny State support to school districts that do not integrate fully.

There are five such districts without a plan for integration. Few public schools could remain open without State support.

The order is embodied in four sections. They are:

1. All agencies in the executive branch that license business or professions shall take such lawful action as necessary to prevent racial discrimination.

Shall Revise Rules

2. Such licensing authorities shall, if necessary, revise their rules and regulations to forbid racial discrimination by all permittees and licensees.

3. Within 60 days licensing agencies must file with the Governor a report covering all current programs affected by the order.

4. Heads of the licensing authorities are directed to proceed with "all deliberate speed" toward a program of full compliance. The responsibility to do so is "nondelegable."

Most licensing is done in Kentucky by the State Department of Health and related agencies. Physicians, surgeons, and osteopaths are licensed by the State Board of Health, for example. But the Health Department directly licenses every sort of establishment where food is handled in any way.

Included here are resturants, hotels, boarding homes, and outlets for dairy products.

Licenses Hospitals

The Department of Health licenses hospitals, nursing and convalescent homes, chiropodists, barbers, and beauticians.

Other State agencies license dentists, registered nurses, chiropractors, pharmacists, embalmers and funeral directors, real-estate brokers, engineers, architects, watchmakers, optometric examiners, veterinarians, opthalmic dispensers, accountants, and attorneys.

The Alcoholic Beverage Control Department licenses premises where such beverages are sold by the drink or package, including bars in private clubs.

The Governor made these principal points in response to a barrage of questions from the press:

He does not propose to conduct a school of law, but here are his best answers at this stage of the game:

As to means of enforcement: After an agency revises its rules to forbid racial discrimination by the licensee, the agency will have the power to suspend or revoke licenses for infractions.

Can Remove Head

If an agency refuses so to act, the Governor can remove its head and appoint one who will.

All these transactions, of course, would be subject to lawsuits for court determination of such questions as are raised by the aggrieved parties.

As to the legal basis for the order: Federal law, as well as State law, must be observed by licensees, and the grantor of licenses is charge with seeing that compliance is observed. With the growing body of federal law against racial discrimination, the absence of specific State laws is not material.

Housing Action Possible

As to a possible end to discrimination in housing; The State, having power to license real-estate brokers, might well forbid them to traffic in deeds that contain restriction clauses relating to race.

As to possible denial of State support to hold-out school districts: In the official anti-discrimination climate to be created by the executive order and its aftermath, the Department of Education could hardly afford not to apply whatever pressure is needed to integrate the hold-out districts.

Cites Precedents

As to official attitudes of the Combs Administration: The fixed policy will be to resolve all questions in favor of non-discrimination.

As to precedents at the State level: Kentucky is following California, New York, Nevada, and Indiana.

The Governor issued a supplementary statement to clarify his choice of an executive order rather than amending his call of the special session. In it he made four principal points:

1. Primary purpose of the session was a nonpartisan bill to save the five United Mine Workers hospitals in Eastern Kentucky. To have broadened the call with a controversial subject would have been a breach of faith with legislators.

2. It was the Governor's considered judgment no effective bill against discrimination could have been enacted.

Awaits Congress' Action

3. Until Congress acts, no state knows what local laws will be needed to implement the federal position.

4. Meantime, substantial progress can be achieved by the executive order.

The white and Negro leaders present at the Governor's action withdrew for a private meeting afterward. They issued a statement commending the order, but insisting upon the ultimate passage of a civil-rights law by the Legislature.

"The order against discrimination should prove to be an effective weapon in advancing civil rights in Kentucky," the group stated.

"At the same time we reaffirm the statement of Governor Combs that: 'A necessary step is to enact State civil-rights law which will inevitably be presented to future general assemblies.'

'Must Be Begun Now'

"It is our consensus that since the executive order is no substitute for necessary statutes, plans must be begun now for preparing the legislative climate.

"We commend the order's probability of license suspension and revocation for racial discriminatory practices as a welcome supplement to the Louisville ordinance and future antibias legislation which may be enacted by the State."

This group included:

The Rev. Robert Estill, Lexington, chairman, and Frank Stanley, Sr., Louisville, vice-chairman of the Kentucky Commission on Human Rights.

Paul Oberst, Lexington, chairman of the commission's legislative committee.

Lyman Johnson, president of the Louisville branch, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and James Crumlin, Louisville, chief counsel of the Kentucky branch.

Includes Louisvillians

The Rev. D. E. King and Mrs. Lois Morris, of the Louisville Commission on Human Relations.

Harry S. McAlpin, Louisville, attorney in several integration cases.

Charles Steele, executive director of the Louisville Urban League.

The Rev. E. G. Sampson and Frank Stanley, Jr., of the steering committee for demonstrations in Louisville.

COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS
COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY
168 Capitol Annex Building
Frankfort, Kentucky

Text Of Combs' Order

Courier-Journal Bureau

Frankfort, Ky., June 26.—The text of Governor Bert Combs' executive order Wednesday intended to end racial discrimination by businesses and professions licensed by the State follows:

"Whereas, the denial of equal opportunity in and access to places of public accommodations because of race, color, creed, or national origin is unfair, unjust, and inconsistent with the public policy of the Commonwealth of Kentucky as manifested in its Constitution and the Constitution of the United States; and

Cites Responsibility

"Whereas, the executive branch of the Government in executing the laws of the Commonwealth of Kentucky and the United States which prohibit discrimination based on race, religion, creed, color, or national origin, is charged with an obligation and duty to assure that those laws are fairly administered and that benefits thereunder are made available to all Kentucky citizens without regard to race, religion, color, creed, or national origin;

"Now, therefore, by virtue of the authority vested in me as Governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky by the Constitution and laws of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, it is ordered as follows:

"Section 1. All departments and agencies in the executive branch of State Government, insofar as their functions relate to supervising or licensing persons or organizations (doing business or practicing a profession) in this state, shall take all lawful action necessary and appropriate to prevent at all times discrimination because of race, color, creed, or national origin.

Reports Required In 60 Days

"Section 2. All such executive departments and agencies shall take such other appropriate action permitted by law, including revising the rules and regulations, if required, to promote the abandonment of discriminatory practices by all permittees or licensees under their jurisdiction.

"Section 3. Each executive department and agency subject to this order is directed to submit to me within sixty (60) days from this date a report outlining all current programs administered by it which are affected by this order.

"Section 4. The chief administrative officer of each executive department or agency of state Government administering programs affected by this order is directed to proceed with all deliberate speed toward a program of full compliance with the purposes and intents of this executive order. This responsibility is nondelegable."

Combs Explains Reasoning Of Order

Courier-Journal Bureau

Frankfort, Ky., June 26.—Governor Bert Combs Wednesday issued the following statement in support of his order intended to end racial discrimination in professions and businesses licensed by the State:

"There is no more urgent problem facing Kentucky and our nation than that of civil rights. Our state must continue to make progress until all discrimination is removed.

"While Kentucky has made great strides, both through voluntary and legislative action, additional action is needed to make it possible for all Kentuckians to become first-class citizens.

Legislation Expected

"A necessary step is to enact State civil-rights laws. Such laws will inevitably be presented to future General Assemblies. This is why I entertained the thought of including the subject on the agenda of the current session of the Legislature.

"There are several reasons, however, why I have decided not to extend the call.

"1. The extraordinary session was called to save the hospitals. The legislative leaders agreed to put partisan considerations aside, and it has been pointed out to me that I left the legislative leaders with the understanding that there would be no additional controversial legislation.

Consequently, many of the legisltaors came to this session unprepared to consider a public-accommodations law. They are reluctant to have an extended session at this time. Many of them are currently engaged in a campaign for office. The matter is too important to get involved in partisan political controversy.

"2. It is my judgment, based on contact with key members of the Legislature, that no effective bill could be passed at this extraordinary session.

"3. Congress is considering the broad civil-rights act proposed last week by President (John F.) Kennedy. At a meeting with the governors last week, the President asked us to be prepared to propose State legislation which would implement the forthcoming federal legislation. Until the content of the federal laws is known, appropriate State legislation cannot be drafted.

"4. In the meantime, however, substantial progress can be made by an executive order directed to the licensing authorities of the state. I have previously issued directives to guide State officials in employment and integration of State facilities. I am now issuing an executive order to the licensing authorities directing them to use all lawful measures to end discrimination in the businesses and professions which they are charged with regulating."

Another Historic First For Kentucky

THE EXECUTIVE ORDER issued by Governor Bert Combs, banning racial discrimination in business places serving the public and licensed by the state, is another evidence of Kentucky's coming of age. The order, the first of its kind ever undertaken by a governor without supporting legislation, marks the first effort by a Southern or border state to ban discrimination in public accommodations on a statewide basis, and once more places Kentucky in the forefront of the fight to insure justice and decent treatment to all of its citizens.

The order is being hailed as a morally sound and progressive move, which it is. But it is also a very practical one. If it survives the constitutional tests to which it will undoubtedly be put, it will go a long way toward removing racial discord and conflict as an obstacle to the state's future economic growth. It will eliminate the cause of and need for the bitter clashes and public demonstrations that have not only shamed other states but have hurt and disrupted business, and damaged chances for getting the new businesses that Kentucky especially needs.

In effect, the Governor's order directs state agencies that license businesses serving the public to require as a provision for licensed operation that they serve all of the public without regard for race. He had been under considerable pressure, much of it politically motivated, to demand an anti-discrimination law of the special session of the legislature. But his decision to use the executive order, while unusual, was as sound as it was courageous. For the fact is (and many of his loudest political critics could hardly have been unaware of it) that the Governor had little chance of getting a substantial anti-bias law through this special session.

Indeed, Governor Combs has been under the strongest pressure from all sides on the matter of anti-discrimination legislation. Many Republicans saw in the issue possible political profit in the upcoming fall campaign. A few Negro leaders, most of them from the politically-critical Third District, had been urging immediate legislation, and implying threats of embarrassing street demonstrations unless action was taken. At the same time, legislative leaders from both houses were urging the Governor not to ask for an anti-bias law.

Governor Combs

They reminded him that they had been given tacit assurance, when called into special session to save the Miners Memorial Hospitals, that they would not be asked to act on further controversial legislation, and warned that a fight over such a bill could inject a dangerous element into the fall campaigns in which they were involved. They notified the Governor, in effect, that the legislators were not prepared to consider such a bill.

To The Governor's Credit

It is to the Governor's credit that he was not willing to let the matter end there, or to use the mood of the legislature as an excuse for inaction on a potentially dangerous issue. Instead, he has lived up to his earlier promise to "take some step to ease the damaging effects" of racial discrimination in public business places. In doing so by this unusual recourse to executive order he may have angered some members of his own party, at a time when the party is facing an election that will decide the future of many of the most important Combs programs. But in the long run it is probable that more Kentuckians will be relieved to have this problem honorably decided and to have the reputation of their state again upheld by positive action by the Governor.

And in many respects, the Governor's executive order, if upheld by the courts, could prove more effective than an anti-bias law enacted by the legislature. Under such a law, violators would have faced no more than a fine or brief suspension, if the law followed the pattern adopted by other states. Under the executive order, state regulatory and licensing agencies can simply close places practicing discrimination if operators refuse to end the practice.

This may not bring an overnight end to racial bias and discrimination in Kentucky. It will, indeed, depend for its effectiveness on the good conscience with which it is enforced, through the state agencies, by future governors. For this reason, it may require supporting legislation by future sessions of the General Assembly. But it will give future governors an enforcement implement they cannot neglect without political danger. And it paves the way for an improved climate that will produce legislation from the Assembly to accomplish the goal now in sight for Kentucky—dignity, decency and justice for all citizens without regard for race.

COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY

BERT T. COMBS, Governor

GOVERNOR'S CODE OF FAIR PRACTICES

Preamble

The Constitution of the United States of America forbids any state to deny the equal protection of the laws to any of its citizens. No state constitution, nor state law may hinder the pursuit of equality, justice, and liberty; neither must common practice.

The Commonwealth of Kentucky is making significant progress in championing the cause of equal opportunity through executive leadership, legislative action and judicial edict. We are taking steps to guarantee the rights of all citizens.

The General Assembly, through the creation of our Commission on Human Rights has established a public policy in favor of fair and equal treatment for all racial and ethnic groups. The existence of this policy imposes a special responsibility on all agencies to keep their own houses in order. The operations of state government must serve as a model for business, industry, education and labor. It is our responsibility to see to it that race, creed, or national origin are never factors in licensing, recruiting, hiring, up-grading, conditions of employment, dismissals, referrals and training programs.

ARTICLE I Appointment, Assignment, and Promotion of State Personnel

State employees shall be appointed, assigned and promoted on the basis of merit alone. Race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry shall play no part in state personnel policies or practices. Appointing authorities should make a special effort to make certain that their flexibility in making selections is not used to circumvent utilization of minority group persons.

ARTICLE II Promotion of Non-discriminatory Employment Practices

All state agencies shall promulgate a clear, definitive written policy of non-discrimination in employment; they shall review regularly their personnel practices and procedures and correct any which may contribute to the possibility of discrimination; they shall include in their continuing on-going programs of orientation and training special emphasis on non-discriminatory employment.

ARTICLE III State Services and Facilities

Equal treatment of all persons without regard to race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry shall be guaranteed by all state agencies in performing their services to the public. Segregation will not be tolerated in Kentucky state facilities, nor shall any facility be used in the furtherance of any discriminatory practices.

ARTICLE IV State Employment Services

All state agencies engaged in employment referrals and placement services for private or public employers shall fill job orders only on a non-discriminatory basis; they should refuse any job orders specifying any preference or limitation based on race, color, religion, national origin, or ancestry and shall inform the Commission on Human Rights of this prohibited request.

ARTICLE V State Financial Assistance

All state agencies engaged in granting financial assistance shall deny it to any applicant and withdraw it from any recipient engaged in discriminatory practices, consistent with the statute under which they operate.

ARTICLE VI State Licensing and Regulatory Agencies

Race, color, religion, national origin, or ancestry shall play no part in a state licensing agency's decision to grant, deny or revoke a license. Where a duly constituted governmental authority, in an official proceeding conducted according to law, finds that a licensee has, in his capacity as such, discriminated against anyone because of race, religion, national origin or ancestry the appropriate licensing authority shall take such disciplinary action against the licensee as may be provided for.

ARTICLE VII Obligations of State Contractors

Every state contract for public works or for goods or services shall contain the following provisions which shall be fully and effectively enforced by the contracting agency:

"In connection with the performance of work under this contract, the contractor agrees as follows:

"(1) The contractor will not discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because of race, creed, color, or national origin. The contractor will take affirmative action to ensure that applicants are employed, and that employees are treated during employment, without regard to their race, creed, color, or national origin. Such action shall include, but not be limited to, the following: employment, upgrading, demotion or transfer; recruitment or recruitment advertising; layoff or termination; rates of pay or other forms of compensation; and selection for training, including apprenticeship.

"(2) The contractor will, in all solicitations or advertisements for employees placed by or on behalf of the contractor, state that all qualified applicants will receive consideration for employment without regard to race, creed, color, or national origin.

"(3) The contractor will take such action with respect to any subcontract or purchase order as the contracting agency may direct as a means of enforcing such provisions, including sanctions for non-compliance."

ARTICLE VIII Education, Training, and Apprentice Programs

All educational and vocational guidance programs and all apprenticeship programs and on-the-job training programs of the state, or in which the state participates, shall be open to all qualified persons without regard to race, color, religion, national origin, or ancestry.

ARTICLE IX Cooperation with the Commission on Human Rights

All state agencies shall cooperate fully with the Commission on Human Rights and shall duly comply with its requests and recommendations for effectuating the state's policy against discrimination.

ARTICLE X Annual Reports

The Commission on Human Rights shall report annually to the Governor activities of all state agencies undertaken in the past year to effectuate this CODE OF FAIR PRACTICES.

ARTICLE XI Publication and Posting of this Code

Copies of this Code shall be distributed to all state officials and appointing authorities. Copies shall be posted in prominent locations in all state facilities.

Bert Combs

GOVERNOR
COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY

Frankfort, March, 1963

Newsweek 7/8/63 Pub. Accom. Southern

Newsweek—Gordon Baer

Glove buyer in a Louisville store: 'A great many people are ready to make changes'

The Economics of Integration

In the Justice Department, the phone call from Kentucky one morning last week was as welcome as it was unexpected. Gov. Bert Combs was on the line to Burke Marshall, chief of the civil-rights division, with word of a dramatic flank attack on commercial segregation in the South. He was about to sign an executive order banning discrimination by all state-licensed businesses in Kentucky.

"He read it to me over the telephone," Marshall said later, "and we talked about it at some length. I thought it was most imaginative and responsible."

Combs' order, which touched off an immediate swirl of controversy, will affect businesses ranging from bars and restaurants to beauty parlors and funeral homes. Kentucky's licensing agencies were ordered to report within 60 days on how the order could be enforced, but Combs suggested procedures similar to those now used by the liquor control board: after receiving a complaint, the board orders a licensee to show cause why his license shouldn't be suspended or revoked.

Teeth: Combs said he chose an administrative order, rather than a request for civil-rights legislation, because the current special legislative session wouldn't pass an effective bill. In addition, he said, the order "will be much more effective than filing a citation with the local court. The penalty . . . would go to a man's pocketbook."

Kentucky integrationist leaders, who had been pushing hard for legislation, reacted cautiously. But James Farmer, national director of the Congress of Racial Equality, called the order the "most significant stride accomplished so far in the fight for civil rights." Some businessmen agreed, although with a complete lack of enthusiasm. Jack Lowery Jr., attorney for the Louisville Tavern Operators Association, called the order "unconstitutional" and warned: "Talk about Star Chamber sessions—there won't be any cases won before that commission."

Combs' executive order was the most dramatic indication of the progress being made in the quickening campaign to integrate Southern business facilities. What had been a creeping effort at voluntary integration has been running at a buoyantly fast pace in the six weeks since the Kennedy Administration mounted a quiet campaign of coaxing, needling, and mediating. Immediately after the Birmingham violence, Justice Department officials began meeting with Southern retailers—drugstore owners, theater operators, department-store heads. Many of the retailers were among the 1,000 state and community leaders who attended ten later meetings with the President.

Combs: Pocketbook penalty

"The whole problem is to create an atmosphere," Burke Marshall explained. "We have to create communications in the face of threats, so that the conscience of a community will do the right thing."

The Change: The results of the Administration campaign have sometimes been spectacular. On returning from Washington, the owner of a border-state drugstore chain told his store managers to desegregate. "We have had no resistance to our policy," he wrote the Attorney General. In Austin, Texas, Henry Akin, president of the Night Hawk restaurant chain, called the city's restaurateurs together following his visit to the White House. Nearly all of Austin's 60-odd restaurants now operate on an integrated basis. Before the meeting only a handful of dining spots near the University of Texas campus served Negroes.

Businessmen in 190 southern cities—37 per cent of all those with populations of more than 10,000—had reported by last week to Justice officials tangible steps in integrating lunch counters, theaters, hotels, and restaurants.

"These reports demonstrate that the South is not a monolithic bastion of resistance," commented a high Justice Department official. "A great many people are ready to make changes."

But the readiness is far from uniform. The Justice Department also lists at least 38 "hard-core" cities such as Gadsden, Ala. "We made an effort to desegregate one of our facilities," wrote the owner of a theater chain. "The action had to be reversed . . . Damage has been done to the property by the use of firearms."

Even the most progressive of cities seldom move to integrate without being pushed. For years the push came almost entirely from Negro organizations in boycotts, demonstrations, picketing, and sit-ins—and the threat of such action is still by far the biggest impetus to change.

Once begun, integration in the South tends to proceed by fits and starts. Resistance usually begins with civic leaders; in Jackson, the mayor and the Chamber of Commerce originated the present line of resistance. Next, local merchants refuse to negotiate; in Gadsden, Negro leader Dr. James W. Stewart says: "My people don't want to put themselves out in the streets. But hell, if they won't talk to you, what are you going to do?" And all too often, as in Birmingham, the result is violence.

Expedience: But resistance starts crumbling when the economic impact of demonstrations and violence begins to be felt. "We never argue the moral issues," says Greenfield Pitts, a white leader in Nashville's peaceful integration movement. "Our whole approach has been business." In Greensboro, N.C., the process began two years ago with sit-ins and picketing to protest segregation at a Woolworth lunch counter. Business dropped disastrously. When the manager's own salary (derived in part from sales commissions) started falling, too, he agreed to integrate—and now says desegregation didn't hurt business.

But with one point made, Greensboro's Negroes demonstrated again to desegregate theaters, cafeterias, and drive-in restaurants. At this, businessmen and civic leaders, accepting integration as inevitable, formed a biracial committee to work out solutions in privacy. Some 55 Southern cities now have such committees, which negotiate in secret and arrange the steps of desegregation with as little publicity as possible.

The long-range threat to a community's economic development is often an even more powerful spur to integration than direct boycotts or demonstrations. George LeMaistre, president of Tuscaloosa's City National Bank, spearheaded a drive for peaceful integration with a series of speeches recalling that for three years after the 1957 riots in Little Rock, "not a single company employing more than fifteen people moved into the Little Rock area." With Little Rock in mind, a biracial group in Birmingham has persuaded the city to reopen its libraries, parks, golf courses, and auditorium on a desegregated basis.

Segregationists have also tried the economic weapon. "Don't let that nigger be smarter than you are," Eugene (Bull) Connor, former Birmingham safety commissioner, told a Citizens Council meeting in Tuscaloosa last month. "Copy him. Boycott the devil out of everybody." But in spite of similar calls in a good many Southern communities, there has never been an effective segregationist boycott. Indeed, the whites themselves unwillingly add to the effectiveness of Negro economic pressure; understandably, they tend to shun shopping where demonstrations are going on.

Most progress in the South has been on the basis of economic self-interest. But there is also—largely undiscussed, and almost furtive—a real moral drive behind the acceptance of integration. "We've done what is right for Atlanta," said Ed Negri, spokesman for the integrated restaurants. "[But] most important, we've done the right thing."

Bill Crawford—NEA

Alitalia spoofs IATA's 'geese': 'They're bound to lay a few eggs'

AIR FARES:

Pan Am's Ploy

With the seventeen international airlines on the blue-ribbon North Atlantic run flying at only 51.6 per cent of capacity, a heated controversy has been boiling lately on how best to fatten their disappointing revenues. The two U.S. lines with the bulk of the market, Pan American and Trans World Airlines, argue that fares should be reduced to lure more passengers. But some of the foreign state-subsidized lines, mired in huge deficits, want to raise fares on the existing clientele.

Pan Am last week pulled the latest ploy in the fare squabble with a radical proposal to add a new thrift class. Eliminating all meals and liquor, thrift-class fares would run 39 per cent below economy-class rates. The minimum New York-London round trip would drop to $320 from $499.70 and the New York-Rome fare to around $400 from $658.40.

Pan Am president Juan Trippe said the new fares were "economically justified" and that they would attract "hundreds of thousands of new travelers." But the maneuver was clearly tactical as well as economic. Even Pan Am officials doubted that they could put through fares as low as they proposed. However, their move underscored U.S. determination to get a cut of some sort.

Lampoon: The basic difference in fare philosophy led to a May showdown. After tense maneuvering, the U.S. knuckled under to European demands and accepted a 5.5 per cent boost in economy-class transatlantic fares adopted earlier by the International Air Transport Association, the airline trade group which sets standard international fares. Lampooning the whole hassle, the Italian airline, Alitalia, is circulating a pamphlet which compares IATA to a gaggle of geese and draws the moral that "when geese get together they are bound to lay a few eggs."

The foreign lines, though, were not taking Pan Am's latest gambit so lightheartedly. Publicly, they uttered courteous vows to study it. But behind the scenes they were fuming about Pan Am's "publicity stunt."

All sides will formally confront the Pan Am proposal when it is presented for approval at a September IATA meeting in Salzburg, Austria. Though IATA has the final say under current law, the Civil Aeronautics Board too must pass on the proposal. The board's previous fare policies all but assure its support, and its stature will be buttressed by two bills, set to pass Congress, allowing it to veto IATA fares it dislikes.

Thus, some foreign lines were already beginning to talk of compromise. "It seems obvious," a spokesman for British Overseas Airways Corp. conceded, "that lower fares of some kind will be recommended at Salzburg."

7/9/63

dependence may well be seeing their victory star on the rise.

EXHIBIT 1

THE HARRIS SURVEY: TEST-BAN PACT HAS CAUTIOUS SUPPORT OF 73 PERCENT OF AMERICANS, POLL SHOWS

(By Louis Harris)

When Under Secretary of State Averell Harriman sits down a week from today in Moscow to negotiate a nuclear test-ban agreement with the Soviet Union, he can count on the cautious support of better than 7 out of every 10 Americans, according to a survey just completed of a scientifically chosen cross section of the public.

Here is what emerged when the question of a test ban was put directly to the people:

Attitudes toward test-ban agreements with Russians

[Percent]

	Total public
Favor ban agreement	73
Unqualified approval	47
Qualified approval	26
Oppose ban agreement	17
Not sure	10

Outright opposition to any ban agreement on atomic testing runs to no more than one voter in every six across the country. The number who would support a test-ban settlement with the Russians are divided, however, between those who feel we should bend any and all efforts toward this end, and those who insist that varying safeguards be strictly observed.

Here are the reasons of the American people—the whys behind their stated opinions—told in their own words:

Reasons for favoring or opposing test-ban agreement

[Percent]

	Total public
Reasons for unqualified approval	47
Find way to end tests	16
End risk of atom war	11
Cut fallout	10
Stop world suicide	6
Halt cost of testing	4
Terms for qualified approval	26
If Russia keeps word	11
Only with inspection	11
If on our terms	4
Reasons for opposing	17
Russia will break it	15
Can't be weak	2
Not sure	10

The 47 percent who most strongly urge a test-ban agreement feel that a continued nuclear arms race with further testing will lead to the ultimate destruction of the human race. However, this view constitutes a plurality, not a majority of the people. The balance of opinion rests with those who want an agreement, but only if it works. This means inspection and, by implication, leaving as little as possible to faith in dealing with the Russians.

It would be a mistaken reading of American public opinion for Chairman Nikita Khrushchev and the Communists to assume that the people of this country share in any measure a "ban the bomb at any price" philosophy. If the Russians were to resume testing again, the pressures from the American public on President Kennedy to begin our own testing again would be enormous and overwhelming.

This sentiment for nuclear test resumption was evident when we asked the voting public how they now feel about Mr. Kennedy's decision in 1961 to renew American nuclear tests after the Soviets resumed their tests:

Attitudes toward U.S. decision to test when Russians test

[Percent]

	Total public
Approve U.S. testing	82
Oppose U.S. testing	10
Not sure	8

There is little doubt that any Soviet move to resume testing would meet with a massive response that this country should test nuclear weapons immediately. Here is the reasoning behind these attitudes, as people expressed them in their own words:

Reason for approving or opposing U.S. testing

[Percent]

	Total public
Why approve U.S. tests	82
Stay ahead of Russia	45
No other choice	13
Be ready for anything	12
Develop weapons system	6
Stand up to Russia	5
Test peaceful uses	1
Why oppose U.S. tests	10
Tests endanger health	4
Have enough bombs now	3
Two wrongs don't make a right	3
Not sure	8

As on so many issues, American public opinion is both tough and practical-minded. Our people recognize the dangers of total nuclear war and want every effort bent to avert it. By the same token, most Americans embrace the policy of peace through strength, feeling that a ban on testing is possible only when this country possesses a striking power sufficient to discourage any Russian move toward nuclear aggression.

Pub. Accomm. Md.

AMUSEMENT PARK ARRESTS DEMONSTRATE NEED FOR TITLE II OF OMNIBUS CIVIL RIGHTS BILL

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am sure my colleagues have read the recent newspaper articles on the demonstration which occurred at Gwynn Oak Amusement Park, outside of Baltimore, Md. If doubts existed prior to this weekend about the desirability of President Kennedy's pending proposal to secure equal access to public facilities, these events surrounding the mass arrests at Gwynn Oak Amusement Park should have banished them.

The demonstrations and subsequent arrests of such prominent American churchmen as Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, chief executive officer of the United Presbyterian Church, and others surely provided a graphic illustration of the fact that businessmen opening their doors for public business have a responsibility to serve all the public. Dr. Blake is one of my good friends. I have known him many years.

The practice of discrimination on the basis of color alone constitutes an arbitrary abuse of the rights associated with the ownership of property and a flagrant refusal to accept certain responsibilities to serve the general public that private businessmen must accept.

The owners of the Gwynn Oak Amusement Park do not claim to operate a private club. Their doors have been opened to the general public. Having made this decision, they have the clear obligation to serve all potential customers, assuming that accepted rules of decorum and behavior are maintained.

Opponents of the President's civil rights proposals cannot claim that such respected churchmen as the Right Reverend Daniel Corrigan, director of the home department of the National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church; Rabbi Morris Lieberman, of the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation; various Roman Catholic priests; and hundreds of religious leaders and laymen constituted a lawless mob disturbing the peace and tranquility of the Baltimore community. The demonstrators presented a model of orderly behavior and nonviolence. Their white antagonists, however, hooted and threatened violence so directly that the use of police dogs was necessary in order to avert a riot.

Who, then, was disturbing the peace in these circumstances, and who should have been jailed, if anyone?

One of the owners of the amusement park read portions of the Maryland trespass law to persons attempting to desegregate the park. The existence of such anachronistic State legislation as this clearly demonstrates the need for prompt Federal action in the area of public accommodations. If ever there was proof of need of the President's program, it took place within 40 miles of the Nation's Capital; and no responsible citizen of the United States can rationalize with credibility or with a sense of decency the arrest of these fine, distinguished churchmen and good citizens.

They can explain it, but they cannot rationalize it with credibility and with a sense of decency. Ample precedents exist for such Federal initiative on the basis of the interstate commerce clause of the U.S. Constitution and the 14th amendment.

In this particular instance, I am confident that merchandise and facilities used in the park were transported across State lines. Persons from all sections of the country, that is, white persons, are welcomed as customers. The impact of the park on interstate commerce cannot be doubted.

The spectacle of national church leaders being hauled off to jail in a paddy wagon demonstrates the absurdity of the present situation regarding equal access to public facilities in Maryland and the absurdity of the arguments of those who oppose title II of the President's omnibus civil rights bill. These events also indicate why the response of Congress to these proposals raises such fundamental questions. In this regard I call the attention of my colleagues to two recent columns by Walter Lippmann and Roscoe Drummond. Both of these respected political analysts dealt with the harsh fact that Congress itself is on trial as it considers this legislation.

I ask my colleagues in Congress how, in the light of the Constitution of the United States, we can rationalize local police arresting respected national spiritual religious church leaders in an amusement park because they wanted to walk in with an American citizen whose skin is a different color.

I do not think we ought always to be required to quote from political analysts to obtain direction and counsel. I wonder if sometimes we could not sit down and reason problems out for ourselves. One need not be a constitutional lawyer to read and understand the 14th amendment. One need not be a constitutional lawyer to know that it is within the power of the Federal Government under the commerce clause of the Constitution to regulate commerce. And I will put on the line what little limited mental resources I have that some part of the park in Baltimore came there through the vehicle of interstate commerce. Therefore it is subject to the regulations of the Congress.

If Congress finds itself unable to respond affirmatively to this crisis of civil rights, the American people will be entirely justified in asking whether or not Congress is now capable of meeting its obligations as the legislative branch of the Federal Government.

Negroes are not on trial in our country. Churchmen are not on trial. We are. And we are not giving a very good demonstration. The antiquated procedures of the Congress surely contain little to commend them to modern government.

Mr. Lippmann has put the question quite directly. He states: "What kind of legislative body is it that will not or cannot legislate?"

We cannot pretend that a social revolution of historical proportions is not engulfing the entire Nation. It will not do us any good to wring our hands about the demonstrators and the demonstrations. There is not a day but what I hear, "Oh, these demonstrations are terrible." "Oh, if these demonstrations come to Washington, it will be terrible."

I say to Members of Congress that if there is concern that there will be 200,000 or 300,000 fellow American citizens coming to Washington when we take up the civil rights bill, the way to respond most constructively is to announce that we will pass the civil rights bill, that we do not intend to engage in a filibuster, that we are going to treat the proposed legislation responsibly, that we will debate the bill, argue it, and then vote upon it.

I remind my fellow Americans and others that I am not advocating a march on the Nation's Capital. But I am advocating that we in the Congress do our duty. If we do our duty, we will not have to have the galleries filled with demonstrators. We will not have to have the streets packed with demonstrators, and we shall not need any demonstrations. The reason that there are demonstrations in the streets of American cities is that we are not demonstrating legislative responsibility in the Congress of the United States. We are late—very late. We have not legislated. We have been pinned to the wall by the instrument of parliamentary filibuster, delaying tactics, and apparently the lack of proper concern over the welfare of those who are victims of discrimination and prejudice.

A government does not gain allegiance by giving more to those who already have too much. A government does not justify its existence by merely handing out more justice to those who are already overloaded with social privilege. What a government of free people ought to do to justify its existence is to see to it that those who have too little at least have an opportunity to gain enough for a decent living, and that those who are the victims of prejudice and inequality shall have a government stand alongside of them to give some balance to eliminate the inequality and to do away with the overt discrimination.

This is a battle for moral justice and not merely political justice. So Mr. Lippmann is proper in what he asks "what kind of legislative body is it that will not or cannot legislate?"

I do not think we can pretend that President Kennedy has not responded to this social revolution with a package of civil rights bills designed to meet the crisis. I have had the privilege of working with him. I know the hours that have gone into consultation, the many meetings that he has held, how he has reached out to find answers, and how he seeks to propose legislation that can receive a favorable response in the Congress.

The President has acted responsibly. The President has acted courageously and prudently. He is calling upon the Congress to do its part. I say that we are only servants of the people. We do not have any prerogatives, and we should have no privileges. Our one privilege, if any, is to serve the American people and to see to it that the Constitution of the United States is respected and applied equally.

In these circumstances of a nation undergoing an historic social upheaval we can only pretend that Congress lacks the responsibility to act on these proposals as promptly as possible. We know we have the responsibility. To say to the contrary is to avoid responsibility and to make us unworthy of our public trust.

As I have asserted many times during the debates over the resolution to amend rule XXII, I am quite willing to abide by the decision of the Congress once the Members have been permitted to cast their votes on the merits of a particular proposal. But while I am fully prepared to accept this decision whatever it may be, I am not prepared to accept anything less than this. I am not prepared to accept endless statements, weakness, and incapacity to reach a definitive decision on the merits of the President's civil rights legislation.

I say this because there are many signs now indicating delay. I am hopeful that our colleagues in the other body will act promptly on the President's civil rights bill. I am hopeful that when that bill comes to the Senate it will be a full package, including the feature known as public accommodations with enforcement power. I am hopeful that we in the Senate will act on that package.

I am also hopeful that we will strengthen our educational establishment, so that civil rights will be something more than a legal doctrine.

Jobs, expansion of industry, economic growth to provide jobs, training of citizens to fill jobs—all are a part of civil rights. Yet there are people who wonder, "Is the tax bill to have priority, or is the civil rights bill to have priority?" They are tied together. The education bill is tied in, too. All these bills have priority. We have time to act on all of them, if we wish to act.

Let it be quite clear that we shall be here for a long time, Mr. President.

I suggest to my colleagues that they make plans for a "Merry Christmas" in Washington—at least for Thanksgiving dinner—unless we can step up the pace of this body and fulfill the responsibilities which we have been assigned.

There is a full program yet to be acted upon. There are education measures and appropriation bills to be considered. There is a tax reduction bill, which is needed to sustain our economy. There are other items too numerous to mention—and civil rights legislation. The President's program of area redevelopment still waits to be completed, although the Senate has passed it. Manpower training is important. Every bit of it is vital business.

I suggest that, instead of trying to figure out how to put an exile government in Guantánamo, we might well try to figure out how to protect the rights of American citizens in the United States. I love the Cubans, but frankly I think more of citizens of the United States.

If there were as much bleeding of the hearts for the Americans who have paid their taxes, who have fought for their country, who have fulfilled the duties of citizenship but who are denied the rights of citizenship and the privileges of citizenship because of color as there is moaning and groaning and bleeding of hearts about what has happened to the Cubans, perhaps we could do something about both Cuba and the United States.

I think we will be better accepted in the world if we can come with clean hands. Our friends in Cuba who believe in freedom will think more seriously of our commitments if they find we are doing something about our own minorities.

I am not referring only to the American Negroes, who have suffered. Others in the minority in this country over the years have been treated unfairly. The hour has arrived in this democracy when we shall no longer tolerate discrimination and prejudice because of color, religion, national origin, or ethnic background.

There is no finer title or honor than to be a citizen of the United States, and there is no greater derogation of title than to be called a second-class citizen of the United States. Regrettably, there has been forced upon some people that unbelievable disgrace of being called second-class citizens.

I am not at all sure that this will attract any votes. If any Senator plans to vote for these measures because he thinks it will strengthen him politically, he may be making a very serious mistake. But I suggest that it is rather odd, and indeed contradictory and ironical, that when there is an honor guard of American Marines to guard our President, in that honor guard will be a Negro, a Catholic, a Protestant, a Jew, a Spanish-speaking American or an American Indian, who is there as the symbol of our Nation, protecting and honoring the Presidency of the United States; yet some of those men, because of color or even religion, are denied equal privileges guaranteed under the Constitution of the United States. We cannot justify it. No one can. Thus Senators will vote for these civil rights proposals because they are right and just.

In my opinion, the events of the past weekend only make more evident the urgent need for prompt congressional action on civil rights.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD "The Strength To Govern Well," by Walter Lippmann, a column from the July 4, 1963, issue of the Washington Post; "Congress on Trial," by Roscoe Drummond, a column that appeared in the July 8, 1963, issue of the Washington Post; and "Races and Churches," an editorial that appeared in the July 8, 1963, issue of the New York Times.

There being no objection, the articles and editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, July 4, 1963]

STRENGTH TO GOVERN WELL

(By Walter Lippmann)

This Congress was already in a jam before the Negro demonstrations caused the administration to propose the new civil rights bill. Without any filibuster on the floor of the Senate there has been so much delay and obstruction in the committees that after 6 months no important measure has been acted upon, and many of the critical measures, such as tax reduction are bogged down—it would seem deliberately—in the committees.

What kind of legislative body is it that will not or cannot legislate?

This would be a serious question at any time. But it is a critical question at this time. A new generation of Negroes has emerged, one which has lost the fear of being arrested and jailed, and has steeled itself to use the weapon of the weak, which is to be prepared to suffer more pain than the oppressor will dare to inflict. When an aggrieved people reach this point, they have created a force which governments must reckon with and people must respect.

But it turns out that the Government is divided and impotent to deal with their grievances, the prospect is indeed dark and true, quite evidently, that in their discontent the Negro people might be tempted, even exploited, to permit acts of violence which would recoil upon the Negro community itself. But how is wisdom to be expected to prevail as against reckless folly? There is only one way. By an unmistakable demonstration that the Negroes live under a strong government, one which is not only strong enough to suppress mobs but is also strong enough to redress grievances and raise the level of public righteousness.

When the President has proposed legal remedies for an undeniable evil, the Congress of the United States then smothers and obstructs the enactment of laws, on what ground can a rational appeal be made to the Negro people and their leaders? As one who has always opposed cloture except in extreme emergencies, I would say now that the present situation is extreme. It is whether the Negro can count upon the Government under which he lives to redress his undeniable grievances.

If, therefore, we have a filibuster against civil rights on top of the logjam about everything else, we shall have to say—distressing as it is—that in one of the coordinate branches the capacity to govern has broken down. If this continues, if we linger on in a deadlock in which the President proposes and Congress will not even dispose, there are very difficult days ahead for the Republic. A government must be able to govern. When it cannot govern, a government is sick.

If things go as badly this summer as they threaten to go, and the session drags on into the autumn with little accomplished amidst many angry words, something will have to be done about it. Next to defense and the enlightened conduct of the cold war, the question of highest priority will be how to overcome the paralysis of Congress.

My own view is that the most important and most needed reform would be a rule that measures proposed by the President, if he labels them urgent, must be reported out of committees within a certain time and brought to a vote within a certain time. The administration should have the right to have its proposals voted up or voted down within a reasonably short time. It cannot be the genuine right of a legislature to smother and strangle the proposals of the Executive. For that would leave us with just about the worst of all forms of popular government—government by large assemblies, or, as we call it in this country, congressional government.

Writing this on the day before the Fourth of July, I find myself thinking how rarely free governments have been overthrown by foreign tyrants, except temporarily in time of war, but how often free governments have fallen because of their own weakness and incapacity. To one thinking such thoughts there is nothing reassuring about the present Congress.

[From the Washington Post, July 8, 1963]

ACTION OF FILIBUSTER?—CONGRESS ON TRIAL

(By Roscoe Drummond)

Nearly every day there is evidence of increased support for the civil rights measures now before Congress.

Ahead is a period of long, earnest, even bitter debate. That is part of the democratic process.

The question is not whether there is a clear majority for strengthened civil rights legislation. There is. The only question is whether, after full debate, the Senate can contain a possible filibuster in order to prevent minority rule.

Very few voices are going to be raised to say that there is nothing further the Federal Government can or should do in order to provide equal protection to all citizens against unconstitutional discrimination including voting, schooling, and public accommodations.

But after the minority has been fully heard, there is an additional issue beyond that of racial justice which the majority of Congress and its responsible leaders in both parties will have to face up to. It is this:

At the time and on this issue of racial justice there is no choice open to Congress which will not have far-reaching consequences.

Action will have far-reaching consequences; inaction will have far-reaching consequences.

Enactment of strengthened civil rights legislation would be an act of national policy. But rejection of strengthened rights would also be an act of national policy.

I stress this point because only a filibuster—which is the last resort of minority power—can prevent the passage of strengthened civil rights. If the Senate permits a filibuster to prevail, it will thereby permitting the most crucial and critical national policy to be determined by minority rule.

Bear in mind that unlimited debate is not a constitutional right. It is not an unconditional procedural right. It is a privilege which stems from Senate rules and is conditional by the right of the Senate to determine debate by a two-thirds vote. Therefore, when some Senators say that, however much they favor strengthened civil rights, they cannot vote to end a filibuster because it would compromise a right ("and what is right is right," as one put it) they are using a suspect argument. Apparently such Senators are willing to compromise the right of two-thirds of the Senate to end a filibuster in order to preserve the right of the minority to continue a filibuster.

Everyone in Washington knows that there is a clear majority in both houses for the pending civil rights measures, with possibly one or two limiting amendments. There is, therefore, another question which the leaders and Members of Congress will have to ponder long and well.

Can the majority of Senators and Representatives permit Congress, supposedly coequal in authority and responsibility with the judicial and the executive branches, to stand helpless, unable to play its part in dealing with a great and grave national problem?

Can the majority of Congressmen permit national policy on the issue of racial justice to be determined by minority rule?

I do not believe that the majority of Congressmen will wish to stand before the country and, indeed, before the exacerbated, long-patient, long-discriminated-against American Negroes, and say that representative Government cannot govern.

I wonder if, in the end, even the minority in Congress will wish to carry their views and their tactics to such an extreme as to weaken and discredit Congress at a time, with its whole legislative agenda in disarray, it urgently needs to recapture respect and credit.

Congress itself is on trial.

[From the New York Times, July 8, 1963]

RACE AND THE CHURCHES

Historians writing about the struggle for racial equality in this period are going to have a number of milestones to guide them. One such, surely, will prove to be the demonstration at Gwynn Oak Amusement Park near Baltimore on July 4 which was repeated yesterday.

Leading Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish clergymen participated in the July 4 attempt to integrate the 68-acre park whose manager, James Price, blandly announced: "The white man in this area does not accept the Negro on a social or recreational basis." The clergymen, having broken the Maryland trespass law, accepted the penalty and were among the 283 demonstrators arrested and jailed.

Their gesture was the most spectacular to date in a sudden and impressive determination by U.S. church leaders to do something rather than just say something, about the evil of segregation.

How much effect active intervention by religious forces is going to have in this struggle cannot yet be gaged, but it stands to reason that it is bound to have a great impact if they keep it up. Pope Paul VI encouraged all Catholics to join the fray by his strong endorsement, when President Kennedy saw him at the Vatican, of the struggle to achieve "for all your citizens the equal rights of citizenship." Since January the National Council of Churches, the National Catholic Welfare Conference, and the Synagogue Council of America have been urging bold interfaith action against racial discrimination.

The principal religious elements in our southern States are Protestant Episcopal, Methodist, and Baptist. Bishop Boynton of the New York Protestant Episcopal Diocese has issued a statement authorizing clergymen and laymen to take part in antidiscrimination demonstrations "held anywhere under responsible leadership." It is understood that Methodist and Baptist church leaders are preparing to urge their flocks to join the antisegregationist campaigns.

The road to integration is not a straight and narrow one. There are many paths to the goal, and it may turn out that the road followed by all religions, for whom men are equal in the sight of God, will be one of the most successful.

THE VISIT OF CARDINAL SILVA

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, this noon I was honored to serve as host at a luncheon for one of the great social leaders of Latin America, Raul Cardinal Silva Enriquez, archbishop of Santiago, Chile. I am happy that my colleagues on the Foreign Relations Committee and leading officials of the Alliance for Progress program were able to meet with Cardinal Silva and discuss some of the most important problems confronting the Alliance for Progress program today.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks an article from the New York Times describing the leadership which Cardinal Silva is providing in the movement for economic and social reform in Chile.

To give my colleagues some idea of the progressive role which the church is now playing in many Latin American countries in promoting the aims of the Alliance for Progress, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks a copy of the pastoral letter issued by the Chilean bishops in November of 1962 advocating basic structural reforms in Chile. It is a model document for all Latin American countries to follow in implementing the aims of the Alliance for Progress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request by the Senator from Minnesota? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, it is a great pleasure to meet Cardinal Silva, who is providing leadership in achieving the aims of the Alliance for Progress in Latin America.

If the Alliance for Progress is to succeed and the spread of communism be halted, the traditional ruling groups must provide the leadership for a peaceful economic and social revolution in Latin America.

As recently as a decade ago, it could be said that the indifference and fatalism of the ruling groups was well expressed in the remark of the late 19th century Chilean President, Barros Rocco:

There are only two kinds of problems facing society: Those which get solved by themselves—and those which defy solution.

The example offered by our guest of honor today, Cardinal Silva, is proof that this is no longer true of Latin American countries today. In Chile, he has taken the lead in implementing the social philosophy embodied in the recent encyclicals of Pope John XXIII, "Mater et Magistra" and "Pacem in Terris."

The Pastoral Letter of the Chilean bishops, published in November 1962, reflects this philosophy—calling for rapid and drastic economic and social reforms. Under Cardinal Silva's leadership, the church in Chile has set an example for others by redistributing most of its own lands to local peasants.

Cardinal Silva has done much to encourage pioneering projects by voluntary associations in Chile—such as the Techo project—which I have visited. He has also supported the work of men at the Bellarmino Center like Father Roger Vekemans and Father Lyons, who are providing leadership in student and intellectual circles, and in the labor movement.

I am happy to note that the work of voluntary agencies in Chile and in Latin America generally is receiving more attention from Alliance for Progress officials. I am happy to note a definite change in the attitude of Alliance officials in the past year toward voluntary associations. Today there is a greater appreciation of the role voluntary groups can perform, not only in alleviating the sufferings of the poor, but also in fostering needed economic and social development and in introducing the political skills necessary for a functioning democratic Government.

EXHIBIT 1

[From the New York Times, Nov. 5, 1962]

CHURCH DEMANDS REFORMS IN CHILE—CARDINAL LEADS MOVEMENT TO EASE COMMON MAN'S LOT

(By Edward C. Burks)

SANTIAGO, CHILE, October 31.—Chile's Roman Catholic Church is trying to help solve critical political and economic problems here to improve the lot of the common man.

The move is under the leadership of 55-year-old Raul Cardinal Silva Enriquez, archbishop of Santiago, who calls for drastic social reforms.

The gist of his message is that Chile must overhaul her unbalanced social system and make great changes to ease the lot of millions of her underprivileged or the job is going to be done in totalitarian manner by Communist methods.

Chile is a nation of 7,800,000 strung out along the western coastline of South America over an area slightly larger than that of Texas. It has been one of the Western Hemisphere's most stable democracies but has big problems because of tortuous terrain, vast desert regions and great numbers of underfed people with limited opportunities.

COMMUNISTS ARE STRONG

Chile has a strong Communist Party, a labor movement dominated by Communists and other leftists and a main opposition bloc in Congress based on a tight alliance of Socialists and Communists.

Added to Chile's problems are a fast-growing population, a vast gap between a few rich and the masses and chronic budget and trade deficits.

Under Cardinal Silva Enriquez the church has been becoming more and more outspoken on the need for reforms.

Recently the church laid down its position in a 9,000-word pastoral letter that was read to the congregations in every Catholic church in Chile.

No sector of the Chilean community was spared from criticism as the pastoral letter ranged over a wide range of problems and attitudes.

The pastoral letter started out by stating that it was obvious that great numbers of Chilean people not only are living under miserable conditions that are basically intolerable but that these conditions seem to be perpetuated.

The letter noted that in the Chilean countryside a minority of proprietors had the greatest part of the best lands and that the majority lived in poverty.

It also noted that one-third of the Chilean population did not have a decent home where normal family life and family virtues could be developed despite recent Government efforts in building homes for low-income families.

The letter declared that about one-tenth of the population received half of all the national income. It emphasized that one of every three Chilean children stopped school after the first year and that the second did not finish primary school.

Despite some gains, there is general agreement here that there are gross social inequalities. But the meat of the latest message from the church hierarchy is that reforms are going entirely too slowly and that too many so-called faithful Christians in Chile are showing cold indifference to problems of the masses that have now reached the emergency stage.

The pastoral letter deplored that the great mass of Chileans really was left outside the supposedly beneficent social laws and that they had no real recourse with the authorities in seeking to right injustices.

The pastoral letter criticized those wealthy Chileans who deposit their money abroad or who "spend enormous sums on totally useless things or amusements here" while millions are in misery.

It hit out also at lip-service Christians who seemingly fulfill their religious duties yet in their business and professional lives seem to forget all about their fellow-Chilean who is bowed by poverty and lack of opportunity.

While attacking the abuses of the liberal capitalist system, the pastoral letter also declared flatly that it was impossible to collaborate with the Communist movement here. The Communists are working with various democratic parties only with the idea of using them as a stepping stone to totalitarian power, the letter said.

Cardinal Silva Enriquez, named last year, has considerable credentials for the job he has undertaken.

A native of Talca, in the south, he holds a law degree, was a Catholic editor for years and also founded and managed Chile's main Catholic relief organization.

TRANSLATION OF PASTORAL LETTER ADDRES[illegible] BY THE 24 CATHOLIC BISHOPS OF CH[illegible] THE PEOPLE OF THEIR COUNTRY, N[illegible] 1962, ON SOCIAL REFORM AND THE [illegible] GOOD

Beloved children, the obligation [illegible] erate effectively in the solution of p[illegible] relating to the common good is a pre[illegible] duty of the Christian. It springs f[illegible] maximum mandate of the law. It i[illegible] practical expression of the eminently s[illegible] character of Christianity.

Therefore, the church insistently re[illegible] us of it, and the bishops of Chile f[illegible] certain times in the life of our coun[illegible] serious responsibility to urge the fai[illegible] comply with their social duty.

We believe that we find ourselves [illegible] of those times and that our silenc[illegible] be a blameworthy omission. We do [illegible] to be guilty of the biblical anathema [illegible] why did I keep quiet" (Isaias 6–5).

We speak with no other purpose th[illegible] good of our Chilean native country and [illegible] eternal happiness of its children.

I. INTRODUCTION

1. All the countries of Latin America, w[illegible] can say, are passing through a period [illegible] great difficulties which particularly affect [illegible] economic, political and social order. T[illegible]

Pub. Accomm. VA.

NEWS from Danville Christian Progressive Association
226 North Union Street
Danville, Virginia
Telephones: SW 3-0544 SW 2-6062 Area code 703

July 9, 1963

DANVILLE, VA. --- Representatives of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) and the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) have organized renewed demonstrations in this Southside Virginia city designed to announce an international boycott of products of Dan River Mills.

Matthew Jones, 22, of SNCC led a group of 30 silent pickets in front of the main entrances to Danville's chief industry, the Dan River Mills on July 8. One sign read, "We Call for a World-Wide Boycott of Dan River Mills - SNCC."

"These demonstrations are part of a request for an international boycott of Dan River Mills products," reported the Rev. L. G. Campbell, Secretary, Danville Christian Progressive Association (D.C.P.A.) "The Mills employ about 10,000 people and the industry is the economic bastion of the power structure of this segregated community of 47,000," Campbell continued. "We are asking freedom-loving people all over the world to stop buying Dan River Mills products," Campbell said.

As part of what the D.C.P.A. calls a "selective buying campaign," 60 youthful pickets walked ten feet apart in groups of six or less on July 8. This was the third day of silent picketing within the provisions of an anti-demonstration ordinance passed on June 14. There were no arrests.

Later on July 8 eleven young people picketed a meeting at City Hall where Mayor Julian Stinson and three white leaders met with eleven Negroes selected by the Mayor for the alleged purpose of easing racial tensions here. None of the Negroes at the meeting have participated in the Danville protest movement.

Last week D.C.P.A. leaders issued a statement that they would not be bound by any agreements made by this group.

"The mass demonstration phase of our protest will be resumed with the arrival of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. and a task force of Protestant and Jewish clergymen on Thursday, July 11," said the Rev. L. W. Chase, President, D.C.P.A. "In light of the city's refusal to negotiate, Dr. King was invited to Danville to do whatever necessary to settle the grievances of our people," Chase said.

The Rev. Dr. King is President of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference with which the D.C.P.A. is affiliated.

#

NEWS from Danville Christian Progressive Association (D.C.P.A.)
226 North Union Street
Danville, Virginia
Telephones: SW 3-0544 SW 2-6062
Area code 703

July 9, 1963

BACKGROUND INFORMATION: Danville Protest Movement

DANVILLE, VA. --- From May 31 to June 5 there were peaceful pickets carrying signs in the downtown Danville area each day except Sunday, sponsored by the Danville Christian Progressive Association. On June 5 students marched into the Mayor's office and demanded to be heard. Five people were arrested including the Rev. L.G.Campbell, Secretary, D.C.P.A., and the Rev. A.I.Dunlap, 2nd Vice President of the D.C.P.A. They were released several hours later and resumed demonstrations that night.

A biracial committee formed by City Councilman Charles Womack is now defunct due to censure by the remaining Councilmen.

On June 8 Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) field secretary Avon Rollins arrived, and on June 10 SNCC field secretary Bob Zellner arrived at the invitation of the D.C.P.A.

Demonstrations continued until June 10. At 12 noon high pressure fire hoses were turned on the peaceful demonstrators, and several people were beaten. Several persons were jailed.

A march to the city jail to protest the afternoon's jailings was staged that night, June 10. While the Rev. H.G.McChee was on his knees praying in the alley beside the jail, he was arrested. Police barricaded the alley and high pressure fire hoses were turned on the people. While the demonstrators were staggered from the force of the water and washed under the cars and down the street, the police beat them with riot sticks, black-jacks and sawed-off baseball bats. Chief McCain was among those beating the demonstrators, and he grabbed the camera of SNCC field secretary Bob Zellner and smashed it to the ground.

Approximately 48 people were hospitalized for injuries that night. Heads were beaten, faces broken open and noses broken, breasts lacerated, limbs broken, eyes nearly punctured, bodies cut, and clothes torn off by the force of the water. Prior to the march the demonstrators had turned in all pencils, nail files and anything that could possibly inflict a wound, and they had committed themselves to nonviolence.

June 11 and June 12 saw peaceful demonstrations continue. Robert Gore, national representative of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) arrived.

On June 13 a demonstration was held on the steps of the municipal building. Tear gas was used to disperse the peaceful demonstrators. On this occasion, state police joined in the beatings.

On June 14 a city ordinance was issued by a police court and an injunction was issued by the Danville Corporation Court to stop all demonstrations. 13 leaders were indicted by the Grand Jury on charges of "inciting the colored population to acts of violence and war against the white population," a felony punishable by 5 - 10 years under Virginia law.

On June 14 and on June 15, demonstrations were held despite the injunction and ordinance.

Ezell Barksdale, 18, and Ernest Smith, 46, were tried and convicted in the Corporation Court on June 17. Barksdale was given 90 days on the city farm, with 45 days suspended, and Smith was given four months on the city farm, with two months suspended. Bond and appeal were denied. Judge Aiken of the Corporation Court had all Negroes entering the courtroom searched, whether they were attorneys, defendents or spectators. No whites were searched. The judge wore a pistol. Attorney General Robert Kennedy later stated that a Negro could not receive justice in the Danville courts while the judge carried a pistol.

On June 22 the police kicked open a door in the main sanctuary of the High Street Baptist Church and arrested three members of the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee, Bob Zellner, Avon Rollins, and Daniel Foss, under the indictment. Bond was set at $5,500.

At present the ordinance and the injunction are before Federal Judge Michie awaiting his approval or disapproval of removal from the Danville Corporation Court to the District Federal Court.

On July 8, the third day of silent picketing in the downtown area since the passing of the ordinance on June 14, an international boycott of Dan River Mills was called for by officials of the D.C.P.A.

#

D.C.P.A.
MEK:SNCC
w/rel

Pub. Accomm - Sen.

From the office of:

SENATOR JACOB K. JAVITS (R-N.Y.)

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
TUESDAY, JULY 9, 1963

****
The following is the testimony of Senator Jacob K. Javits prepared for delivery at a hearing of the Senate Commerce Committee on the Public Accommodations Bill, Tuesday morning, July 9, 1963.
****

The bill before this committee reaches an aspect of the civil rights crisis now sweeping the nation which almost no other civil rights proposal can reach in the same way: I speak of the moral issue of personal dignity. To understand fully what this legislation is about, one need only for a moment put himself in the position of a Negro who, walking into a restaurant or a hotel or a store, must first look around apprehensively to see whether or not he or she is welcome. I have seen this human tragedy a thousand times myself.

I would like to read to you a short passage from a very fine article, entitled "Discrimination in Hotels: A Cause for Crisis?", which, you will be surprised to hear, was carried in a trade journal, The Hotel Monthly, just a year ago:

> One balmy January midnight on St. Petersburg's motel-lined Treasure Island a tired and hungry family of four pulled their new Chrysler into the driveway of a modern 100-room motel hotel. The father got out, stretched and straightened his tie. Through the large glass doors he could see a middle-aged woman behind the registration desk engrossed in a book.
>
> Ralph Sims went in and greeted her with his best smile. The woman looked up startled and without a word disappeared through a door behind her. Moments later her drowsy husband appeared through the door-way with a frozen stare fixed on the traveler.
>
> "Yes?" he inquired at last.
>
> "How much are your double rooms?" said Sims. "I notice there's a vacancy."
>
> The manager sucked in his breath and looked Sims in the eye. "Fifty thousand dollars," he said.
>
> Even Sims, who owned a $500,000 a year appliance business, was caught off guard, "I don't get it," he said, forcing a laugh.
>
> "That's what the price is," repeated the manager. "That's how much it would cost me in business to serve you. I've got 75 guests here tonight and I've got to think of them."
>
> "Look, mister," said Mr. Sims finally. "I'll pay you twice the price. I've got two kids out there. They haven't had a good meal all day, we're all exhausted and we can't find any place to sleep."
>
> "Sorry," said the manager, shrugging his shoulders. "I feel sorry for you, but I just can't do it." And with that he abruptly disappeared through the same door.
>
> That night the Sims family, who were Negroes, tried to doze curled up inside their parked car, counting the minutes until sunrise when they could begin hunting a colored restaurant for breakfast.

- More -

I begin with this very human anecdote because I believe it helps to portray the deep importance which this proposal has to the Negro community and to the Nation itself, which is at last becoming mobilized to begin to meet head-on the justifiable demands of its Negro citizens for equal opportunity and equal treatment now. Other aspects of civil rights - in voting, education, administration of justice, housing, even employment -- vital as they are in themselves -- do not involve the day-by-day confrontation in restaurants, lunch counters, hotels, motels, stores and shops and other similar public accommodations which make this one of the most explosive aspects of racial relations.

It is because of this very human, moral element that, in my judgment, the Negro community has directed most of its campaign of demonstrations against discrimination in public accommodations. I believe it was no accident that the beginning of this movement, in the Spring of 1961, the sit-ins in Greensboro, South Carolina, was directed against segregated lunch counters.

The public accommodations bill is the pivotal part of the President't civil rights package. If this part is left out of the bill as finally enacted, I believe that a vital aspect of the President's purpose will have been vitiated. The rest of the President's program is meaningful and it represents measurable progress, but I believe that only enactment of a public accommodations bill can provide major relief for the current Negro drive for true emancipation.

It is important to understand this, because the surge of activity which has stirred the national conscience and brought about this current crisis in civil rights has occurred precisely because Congress has failed in the past to enact that meaningful legislation which would give vent to the Negro desire for justice.

For example, Congress missed the boat in 1957 and in 1960 in failing to enact Part III to give the Attorney General authority to bring injunctive suits in representative civil rights cases, including school desegregation. It missed the boat again in failing from 1957 to date to crack down on the use of Federal funds to subsidize state programs in which segregation or discrimination were practiced.

As a result, the Negro community lost confidence in the will of the Federal Government to redress its reasonable grievances and felt the need to express its impatience by direct action and demonstrations. We in Congress will not restore that confidence with limited, restricted or watered-down measures. In the name of the national interest and in our quest for national order, Congress must "rise to the occasion" to meet this civil rights crisis. We cannot limit ourselves to buckets of water to still the raging fires of racial unrest lighted by resentment against the denigration of the citizenship of millions of our fellow Americans.

We must remember that it was just because the Negro community brought home to the nation through peaceful demonstrations its refusal any longer to stand for segregation and discrimination in places of public accommodation that the President finally asked for meaningful civil rights legislation. If this part of the package is not enacted along with the rest, I believe the demands -- which are only fair and reasonable -- will continue just as strongly as now -- and with the best reason in the world.

- More -

For the same reason -- that is, the moral and human element involved here, which requires an enforceable standard -- I feel very strongly that a public accommodations bill which did not have enforcement powers built into it would be toothless. Without the possibility of enforcement, when the problem is equal opportunity, the die-hard minority would instead be given power to set a standard for a majority wishing to obey the law. The conciliation technique is a valuable one, but if there is no sanction for failing to negotiate in good faith, it can be exploited and nullified. Enforcement provisions are a guarantee of serious intent to the Negro community; without them, they are again given recourse only to their own direct action in the streets.

In view of the fundamentally human aspect of the problem, I would hope that the legal questions -- interesting as they are -- which have been debated lately, even among supporters of the objectives of the bill, would not get in the way of prompt approval of it. The chief problem being debated is the choice of the Commerce Clause of the Constitution rather than the Fourteenth Amendment as the constitutional basis for this legislation. As a lawyer and a legislator, I find no difficulty in the Commerce Clause approach taken in this bill. I introduced a public accommodations bill premised on the Commerce Clause in March of this year; S. 1217 which was co-sponsored by Senators Beall, Case, Fong, Keating, Kuchel and Scott. A similar bill was introduced at a later date by a number of Senators on the Democratic side. I also joined in co-sponsoring S. 1591, introduced by Senators Cooper and Dodd, which takes the Fourteenth Amendment approach, based upon the state licensing concept, which is in my judgment wholly proper and within Congress' power to implement under the Fifth Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

My recommendation to the Committee is to resolve the differences between those who take one approach and those who take another approach by taking both: in other words, exhaust Congress' power by invoking both the Commerce Clause and the Fourteenth Amendment. This is the course recommended by the Leadership Conference on civil rights, Senator Keating and others.

This could be done by amending Section 3, which defines those places of public accommodation covered by the prohibition against discrimination, so as to include those in which discrimination is enforced by State action as well as those which affect interstate commerce. In this way, the total scope and constitutional basis for the legislation can be established utilizing all the authority of the Congress in the field rather than only part of it.

The legal arguments for such an approach as this are, in my view, entirely sound. The basis for action under the Commerce Clause is firmly embedded in the dozens of Congressional enactments under that clause, including the National Labor Relations Act, the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and the Food and Drug Act. The Attorney General, in testimony before this Committee last week, referred to the Oleomargarine Act, which sought to regulate under the Commerce Clause the shape and color of oleomargarine. Just as in those enactments, the bill before the Committee is validly within the Congress' interstate commerce power because the practices which it seeks to regulate are a burden upon interstate commerce. Denial of services and accommodations on the basis of race or color interferes with the freedom of interstate travel by Negroes. I believe the incident which I referred to at the beginning of my testimony is eloquent evidence of just how such discrimination does interfere with such travel; I am sure the Committee will hear more such testimony firsthand during these hearings.

The Fourteen Amendment also could support legislation along these lines, although as I have suggested it would probably be best to spell out the reliance on that Amendment by expanding the definition of establishments covered by the bill in order to make it clear that it proscribes discrimination on grounds of race or color by any business in which such discrimination is enforced by State action. The sit-in cases decided by the Supreme Court on May 20 made it clear that the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment prohibits lunch counter segregation which is enforced by a State statute, a municipal ordinance, or which is the subject of official action or the threat of it. What the bill would do in these cases, if it were amended to rely squarely upon the Fourteenth Amendment (in addition to the Commerce Clause), is to provide, under the necessary and proper clause of the Amendment, authority for the Attorney General to bring suit where private suits, such as those decided by the Court, are impractical and where the presence of the United States is warranted. No new rights would be created, but as is true of the Civil Rights Acts of 1957 and 1960 in relation to the Fifteenth Amendment regarding voting rights, the Constitutional rights would be given protection through enforcement by the Federal Government. The precise extent of the Fourteenth Amendment in the absence of a State statute, a municipal ordinance, or official action has not yet been determined by the Court; in deciding the cases mentioned above the Court remanded for additional evidence the remaining case in which a pattern of segregation, but no overt State involvement, was alleged. If the Court ultimately determines that the pattern of segregation maintained throughout society in a State constitutes "State action" within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment, the bill as amended would include them automatically and the Attorney General would be authorized to bring such suits.

I have joined in sponsoring, as a constructive alternative suggestion, S. 1591, introduced by Senator Cooper, which would rely upon the Fourteenth Amendment by prohibiting discrimination by any business licensed by a State for public use. This, too, has not yet been squarely decided by the Court as falling within the meaning of State action under the Fourteenth Amendment. By including in the bill discrimination enforced by State action, the Congress could also extend its prohibition to this class of cases if the Court decides that the reach of the Fourteenth Amendment extends to State licensing.

I do feel that the Fourteenth Amendment base for the statute has the greater chance of being uneven in its application for it may depend too heavily on legal or factual situations generally found only in the South, while regulation under the Commerce Clause would be applicable everywhere across the board.

I should state at this point that I do not believe that the Civil Rights Cases of 1883 are particularly relevant to the constitutionality of the Commerce Clause and Fourteenth Amendment-based provisions which I am discussing. In the 1883 decision the Court struck down the Civil Rights Act of 1875, which sought to prohibit discrimination in public accommodations without reference either to their relation to interstate commerce or to any State action, and as applied to cases which neither interstate commerce nor State action was proved. The decision stands for the proposition that unless the statute is applied to State action, the Fourteenth Amendment, which in terms applies only to States and not to private persons, cannot support it. Since subsequent decisions do not question this proposition, and since the Court specifically withheld any judgment as to the Commerce Clause as a basis for the statute, I do not believe the decision is any bar to enactment today of public accommodations antidiscrimination legislation based clearly on the Commerce Clause or the Fourteenth Amendment or a combination of both.

The argument has also been made in these hearings and elsewhere that some countervailing rights of privacy or freedom of association are infringed by these proposals. To me a complete answer is that almost every regulatory enactment of the States as well as of the Congress involves some loss of privacy or freedom of association, yet our Nation could hardly exist without them. Labor legislation, food and drug legislation, farm legislation, all involve some countervailing loss of freedom on the part of some in order to serve the national interest. A minister in Atlanta, Georgia, Rev. Roy Pettway, recently put this very well in a sermon. He said:

> When a man operates a store, restaurant, hotel, or other business, he may do so as a corporation chartered by the State, and in any event, he can do so only by license from the government. He can not do so privately, without a government license, and thus the right to operate his business is a privilege granted to him by the government. And his business may be worth so many thousands of dollars: but those are United States dollars, and without the United States government, his property would be worth no more than Confederate currency.
>
> If your private building is dangerous, the government can make you tear it down. If a private druggist has tainted drugs, the government can seize and confiscate them, even though they are his private property. If a physician or lawyer does not follow the regulations of the government, his license will be revoked. If you don't obey traffic rules, your driver's license will be taken away from you. And if a man does not operate his business in accordance with the law, his business license can be taken away, and his place of business "padlocked."

What this legislation would do is only to deprive operators of public places of the freedom to discriminate against patrons because of the color of their skin.

The freedom of operators of public places has long been restricted in many ways which no one has seen fit to challenge as a deprivation of private property rights. In common law innkeepers were required to make their establishments open to all travellers. Today in most States those who invite the public onto their property to do business are obligated to provide greater precautions for the physical safety of their customers than owners of wholly private property. Some thirty-two States already prohibit operators of public places from exercising freedom to discriminate on grounds of color. And a number of Southern States indicate no countervailing protection of private property rights because they prohibit operators of public places from exercising freedom not to discriminate on grounds of color.

At this point I should make some reference to the so-called "Mrs. Murphy" problem about which there has been so much discussion. I do not believe an explicit cut-off - in either dollar volume or number of employees - should be written into this bill to exempt outright smaller businesses from the effect of the Act. To do so would negate the moral and human basis for this legislation. I do not believe Congress should itself discriminate against the larger businesses in favor of the smaller in order to permit the latter the capability of racial discrimination. A Negro should not be forced to decide whether the particular hotel or motel he is approaching is one large enough to treat him like any other fellow American. Unfortunately, this is going to be the result as a practical matter no matter how the legislation is phrased, since limitations of manpower and funds would ordinarily prevent the Department of Justice from pursuing any but the prominent cases. And the Commerce Clause approach itself requires a substantial involvement in interstate commerce so that again the smallest establishments would practically not be covered. But I do not feel that the Congress should go beyond these built-in exemptions to exempt specifically any class of proprietors of public places. If a small rooming house in which the proprietor lives - which is the case most often described in this connection - is regulated as a public place by the city and State through licensing, special fire laws, and public health standards, I see no reason why it sould not also be subject to the same moral code as its larger competitors. Just as in the choice between the Commerce Clause and the Fourteenth Amendment, my recommendation here too is that Congress should exhaust all of its power to do away with the blight of racial segregation and discrimination.

In conclusion, it is my firm belief, as a lawyer and as a legislator, that the pending legislation is wholly constitutional and vitally needed.

# # #

Pub. Accomm. VA.

NEWS from Danville Christian Progressive Association
226 North Union Street
Danville, Virginia
Telephones: Area Code 703 SW2-6062 SW3-0544

July 15, 1963

DANVILLE, VA. --- In a precedent-setting event July 14, a serviceman led a demonstration while in full uniform and carrying the American flag. Pfc. Buford G. Holt, 23, a native of Danville, led a demonstration of six persons in front of the home of Mayor Julian Stinson at 2 Country Club Drive. The Mayor has branded leaders of the movement as "criminals" and has continually refused to negotiate. Mr. Holt (82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, N. C.) went limp and was carried by four policemen to the pound truck. "This is the first time in the civil rights struggle that a Negro soldier has demonstrated in uniform for his rights, " said Bob Zellner, Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) Field Secretary.

Mr. Holt said that he had heard of the treatment of his family and friends who had been speaking out for their rights in Danville and that he could not be on the alert to fight in Cuba when there was a more basic battle for Democracy to be fought in America. He carried a sign reading: "I serve in the forces which guard our country and our way of life. I am prepared to give my life for the United States to defend the rights of her citizens. But I must ask this nation if America is prepared to defend my rights as an American citizen."

An Emergency Food Drive has been announced by representatives of SNCC and the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) who are working in Danville, Va., to help ease hunger due to the cutting off of unemployment compensation and loss of jobs which occurred in reprisal for participating in demonstrations.

"There are also many families where one or both parents are in jail, and they have vowed to remain there without bail. Food is needed for their children," according to Rev. L. G. Campbell, Executive Secretary of the Danville Christian Progressive Association (D.C.P.A.) Staples such as flour, canned milk, and canned vegetables and meat are needed for immediate distribution. "We are making a special appeal to all friends of justice for small and large packages to be sent to 226 North Union St., Danville, Va.," said Avon W. Rollins, Executive Committee, SNCC.

In other developments during the past week, a Mother's March for Freedom was led through the downtown district on July 10 by Dorothy Day, Editor, Catholic Worker (international circulation of 75,000). Mrs. Day told a mass meeting that, "I have come to Danville to show you that I believe in the struggle for elementary human rights in which you are engaged, and therefore I shall demonstrate for those rights with you." She carried a sign with a portion of the Pope John XXIII Peace Message.

Congressman James Corman (22nd District, California) and an aide conferred with local and organizational leaders here a week ago, July 7. The aide returned to observe a rally addressed by integration leader Martin Luther King, and the demonstration of about 100 persons following his speech. Yelled at by police, the aide was told to "Go back to the 22nd District where you belong." King is president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC) with which the D.C.P.A. is affiliated.

Spokesmen for the Danville movement earlier called for an international boycott of the Dan River Mills which employs about 25% of the city's population and reputedly has extensive federal contracts. Negroes number 15,000 out of the total population of 47,000 but only 900 of the 10,000 employed by the mill are Negro, according to a union official. In a letter to some 90 U. S. Senators, officials of the D. C. P. A. said, "The shame of Danville can end immediately with a phone call from the president of Dan River Mills."

As the situation in Cambridge, Md. grows tense under imposed martial law, local leaders called for James Forman, Exec. Dir. of SNCC and Avon Rollins, SNCC Exec. Comm. member here, to come to Cambridge immediately. In a telegram to President Kennedy, SNCC worker Bob Zellner wired: "SNCC URGES YOU TO MOVE IMMEDIATELY TO BLOCK THE NATIONAL GUARD FROM DENYING CIVIL RIGHTS ADVOCATES IN CAMBRIDGE, MD. THEIR CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS."

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Look
7/16/63
Pub. Accomm. Miss.

FIVE DAYS IN MISSISSIPPI

A search for an unknown blonde turns up a stark view of reality in the South

By THOMAS B. MORGAN

The face of the future: A winsome Negro demonstrator, parading without a license in Jackson, Miss., is undaunted by arrest.

EARLY IN JUNE, LOOK photographer Douglas Jones and I spent five days in Jackson, Miss., searching for the blond girl in the photograph at the right. A few days earlier, a silent, stoical handful of Negro and white sit-ins and a mob of more than 150 white men, boys and girls had created this and other scenes at the lunch counter in the F. W. Woolworth store on Capitol Street.

On TV and in newspapers, the world saw big Benny G. Oliver, at 26 a former member of the Jackson police force, stomping a sit-in boy's face (see following page), and our blond girl shown here shaking catsup on a sit-in girl's hair, while onlookers smile. During the melee, Jackson boys in clean summer clothes also painted "Go home, nigger" and the inevitable obscenities on the backs of the sit-ins' shirts and blouses. Armed police in blue helmets and pale-blue tieless shirts finally stepped in—two hours later.

The catsup blonde, even more than Benny Oliver, had the power to shock us. So we looked for her in Jackson, hoping she could tell us why.

As it happened, we did not find her. We talked to some 60 likely people, but no one told us her name. We plowed through back numbers of the two local daily newspapers and pored over hundreds of photographs in high-school yearbooks.

One of the sit-ins told us that she had heard the blonde call out, "Take my picture!" to a local TV cameraman just before the catsup was slopped. We soon found a cameraman who said he "knew" the girl, but he "couldn't remember" her name. Later, he offered to rerun some of his film for us. (The violent parts, he said, had been edited out for Jackson TV viewers.) But he withdrew the offer at the last minute, and we never heard from him again. We were told later that he'd gone off on his vacation, a day early.

Meanwhile, by checking up at one of the white high schools, we got the names of three teen-age boys who stood and watched the riot. We visited the home of each. One refused to answer the door. The second hid behind his mother while she assured me that her son knew nothing about that girl in the picture. We met the third in his driveway painting a dinghy with his father. The

continued

The face of prejudice: As seen nationally on NBC-TV, the "unknown" blonde pours catsup over stoical sit-ins at Woolworth's lunch counter, Jackson. Sit-in at left is Annie Moody; far right, John Salter (see text).

A glimpse of the white problem in Jackson, Miss., U.S.A.

Jackson police, trained in military techniques, somberly confiscate demonstrators' flags, posters. Moments later, Negro youth at left gaily winked at photographer.

father took the picture from me, looked it over carefully, and said he didn't know the girl. He was sure his boy didn't either. He didn't.

It went that way for five days. We exhausted every lead, invariably losing the trail somewhere in the white silence that hangs over Jackson. We gave up. But in the process, we discovered, we had had a glimpse of the white problem in Mississippi.

Jackson was having a heat wave when we arrived. Once, the temperature reached 104 degrees. The American flag and the Confederate flag hung limply from poles in front of the Robert E. Lee Hotel. Scores of Negroes and a few sympathetic whites were in jail for having demonstrated day after day in the streets and stores of downtown Jackson following the Woolworth riot. On Capitol Street, the police were out in force—on foot, on motorcycles, in squad cars and in the paddy wagon—waiting for the next demonstration. Hud was playing at the Paramount, and Mutiny on the Bounty at the Lamar. Both theaters are for whites only. "Sure made the niggers mad," a man leaning on a mailbox said to me, "when that nigger movie Raisin in the Sun came to town, and they couldn't get in here to see it."

FBI men patrolled the streets too. You could recognize them by the radio receivers they wore, like hearing aids. And a doughty little man from the Department of Justice was around a lot, keeping an eye on things, a police sergeant confided, "for Bobby Kennedy." Business was almost as usual, although many Negroes were boycotting the Capitol Street stores.

Like the foolish hare, the whites thought they were winning.

There was the white school principal who carefully used the word "Negro" in the early stages of a long conversation with us. Then he slipped to "nigrah." And for the last half hour, he relaxed with "nigger." He said he knew lots of good niggers, though they were prone to venereal diseases, but their schools were just as good as Sit-in Memphis Norman, bleeding from mouth and nose, is kicked again by Benny Oliver.

Medgar Evers, left, field secretary for the NAACP, addressed his people at a Jackson rally. He told LOOK: "Someday Jackson will be a better place for Negroes than New York." Three days later, he was shot dead through the back, in an after-midnight ambush in front of his home in Jackson.

Dick Gregory uses bitter humor to inspire new hope in audience.

Negroes stand up to sing at close of rally. Their song: We Shall Overcome.

the whites', and except for outsiders coming into Jackson, none of this would have happened, although he'd worked alongside of them on his dad's farm, only, the South will fight if you push a man into a corner, but, well, there's plenty of niggers who like things just the way they are.

At a roadhouse on the edge of town, you could buy bootleg whiskey a dollar cheaper than you could at the hotels in town. (Mississippi is the only dry state in the Union.) Better yet, a swinging, two-piece white combo was playing popular jazz, and white teen-agers were dancing an exciting, loose-jointed step. I asked one couple what they called it. "The nigger twist," they said.

Benny Oliver was duly fined $100 and sentenced to 30 days for his part in the Woolworth riot. (Negro and white demonstrators were fined as much as $200 and collected sentences of up to six months in jail for saying a prayer on the steps of the Federal building on Capitol Street.) Freed on an appeal bond, Oliver took a job as a member of the campaign staff of a Jackson chiropractor running for lieutenant governor in the August Democratic primaries. The chiropractor said he had hired Oliver because he knew how to handle the racial problem.

A prominent professional man in Jackson invited us to dinner one evening, but made us promise not to tell anyone. He was what many Southerners call "moderate." While he's against integration, of course, he's not willing to risk everything to preserve segregation.

One local newspaperman said that during the first four days of demonstrations, his paper had printed his stories just about the way he wrote them. Now, though, when he referred to the Negroes as "demonstrators," he said, his editor changed the word to "agitators."

The afternoon paper ran a front-page "Agitation Box Score" on police action against "pavement packers, sign toters, stool sitters, curb squatters, sluggers, chunkers and knee benders."

It also published a regular front-page column by the editor. "Well," he wrote, "Dickie Boy Gregory, a professional Negro and an alleged comedian from Chicago's slumland, is in town. As far as Jackson is concerned, this fellow's visitation recalls the story about the tom-cat who was courting a skunk and was heard to remark, 'I've enjoyed as much of this as I can stand.' "

In another column, he said, "Did you hear about the new Bobby Kennedy doll? You hum 'Dixie' in its ear and it calls out the troops." And, referring to front-page stories under the headline, RACIAL TURMOIL LINKED TO REDS, he stated: ". . . it is understandable why the vast majority of Jackson Negroes will not participate in racial agitation. Our good colored people are to be commended for their foresight and good citizenship."

Jackson's morning paper has a columnist too. "Senator Jakie Javits," he wrote one day, "wants '10 million more immigrants in the next 20 years,' yet the New York rabble-rouser professes alarm

continued

PHOTOGRAPHED BY DOUGLAS JONES

Nine-year-old demonstrator urges adults to join fight.

Question: Will Negroes save the white South from itself?

over the scarcity of suitable jobs and decent housing for Negroes."

At our motel, in the privacy of the parking lot, a Negro said to us, "Take care of yourselves. I mean really take care. You remember what happened to that French reporter up at Ole Miss. He stayed at this motel, and I was sorry the way he got killed. . . . So, now I worry about guys like you. . . . We need you!"

Several "outside" reporters in Jackson advised us that telephone calls from our rooms or from the NAACP headquarters might be tapped. They also suggested that a local reporter was quite possibly exchanging information about the demonstrators' plans with the police or other Jackson officials. One afternoon around two, I deliberately called the LOOK office in New York about an imaginary demonstration scheduled for 4:30 p.m. that day. Ten minutes later, on Capitol Street, a friend of ours told us he'd just had a tip from a man about a 4:30 demonstration.

If phone calls were actually being monitored, it might then be said that at least one channel of communication between white and black Jackson was still open. Certainly all others were closed or clogged by emotion. The local editors, TV men and politicians had utterly failed to inform themselves or the white public of the truth about Negro despair and determination. Not many whites realized the depth of the Negroes' passion and their willingness to go to jail now for "freedom someday." Except for a few white ministers, cautiously exchanging ideas with a few Negro ministers, there was no dialogue. All of which raised the question in our minds of what might happen in the South—or the North, for that matter—given the whites' ignorance of Negro strength, indifference to Negro intentions and dangerous miscalculation of Negro impatience.

Perhaps only Negroes could save the whites from themselves, but one could not be sure that they would.

A field secretary for the NAACP, Medgar Wiley Evers, 37, born and raised in Mississippi, was in command of the uprising in Jackson. He used to sell insurance, but for nearly ten years had been devoted to the cause, full-time. He named his son, now 9, Darrel Kenyatta Evers, for Jomo Kenyatta, premier of Kenya and former Mau Mau leader. We talked to Evers for a harassed 10 minutes at the NAACP headquarters in the Masonic Building on Lynch Street. He was on the run. No, he said, he didn't know the girl in the picture. No, he couldn't imagine who would. But he would help any way he could. . . . No, there was not a chance in the world that the NAACP would give up in Jackson. "It's as I've said many times," he smiled. "Someday, Jackson is going to be a better place for Negroes to live than New York City."

At 12:25 one morning, a few days after we had returned from Jackson, Medgar Evers was shot by an unknown rifleman in front of his home. The bullet hit him in the back, passed through his body and tore into the house, where his wife and three children were asleep. Evers stumbled a few feet and collapsed on his doorstep. He died less than an hour later.

Among the other leaders of the Jackson integration movement was John R. Salter, a young Arizona-born professor at Tougaloo Southern Christian College (a Negro school not far from Jackson). Salter had been a white sit-in at Woolworth's. To help plan strategy at headquarters, he was staying out of demonstrations—and out of jail—for the moment.

"You cannot imagine the violence, the gutter obscenity of the mob," he said. "It wasn't just a blonde throwing catsup. I received a cut on the face, and then someone came up and poured salt into it. Someone else mixed pepper with water and dashed it into my eyes. Two of our girls were dragged from their stools and along the floor to the door. Someone threw a sugar bowl and knocked out one of our boys. And all this after Benny Oliver was arrested. But, somehow, worst of all was the language they used, the things they called us. It was beyond vulgarity. It was pure hate." Salter said that nonviolence, for him, was a tactic and not a matter of principle. "After what has happened," he said, "I'm not against violence."

Annie Moody, 22, a Tougaloo student from Centreville, Miss., was "afraid to go back home" because of her work with NAACP in Jackson. She said she was trying to love "these people," but finding it very difficult. "Four of us went to the Woodland Hill Baptist Church," she told me, "a white church on Old Canton Road, and before we could park the car good, a man came out and the doors were sealed tight shut. We said we would like to go to church. And the man said, 'This is a private house of God, and you are not welcome.' And then we asked, 'As sisters and brothers in Christ, we're still not welcome?' and he said, 'You're still not welcome.' So then, as we drove away, he took down our license number—imagine! A private house of God!"

That same day, after Jackson's largest Methodist church turned away five Negroes, the pastor and assistant pastor said they would ask their bishop for another appointment. "I know in conscience," said the Rev. W. B. Selah, "there can be no color bar in a Christian church."

Jesse DeVore, an NAACP man from New York, was in Jackson handling the movement's press relations. He told us that 664 demonstrators had been arrested in the first 13 days of activity and that almost all were out on bonds, backed by the NAACP, totaling $64,000. "Man," he said, "where's the money going to come from?"

Toward the end of our five days, more than 100 teen-age Negroes gathered in a small meeting hall on the ground floor of the Masonic Building. The temperature in the room was high up in the nineties, and it was muggy, but no one seemed to mind. The youngsters were preparing themselves to march and, ultimately, to go to jail.

Some gave speeches: "They hate us because they hate themselves. They call us niggers, but they're the ones who raped our grandmothers."

Some led cheers: "Let's have three big ones for the NAACP!"

All of them listened to a prayer for themselves and for the white people of Jackson. Then they joined in a march around the room, between the rows of chairs, hands clapping, feet dancing, voices chanting, "We're going to walk and talk, walk and talk, WALK and talk, TALK and walk. . . ."

Late that afternoon, while sitting in at a restaurant, or parading on Capitol Street with little American flags and "Register to Vote" signs, or attempting to play softball in Riverside Park, 47 of them were arrested. (Doug Jones photographed the restaurant sit-in for LOOK and, in turn, was photographed by the identification specialist of the Jackson police department.)

In the evening, two days after the funeral of his youngest son (age two months, dead of pneumonia), Dick Gregory, the comedian, flew from Chicago to rally the Negro community of Jackson at a mass meeting in the Masonic auditorium. About 2,500 Negroes and a sprinkling of whites crammed into the big room to hear him, along with Lena Horne, the singer, and a 9-year-old boy who said a Jackson policeman had arrested him and had twisted his arm until he called him "Sir." Gregory's speech lasted more than an hour. It was a joyous, bitterly funny, roof-raising monologue that brought the audience to its feet, cheering and laughing, again and again.

"Tell 'em! Tell 'em! Tell 'em!" a voice cried, and Gregory, sucking on a cigarette, said:

"You folks gonna get the vote down here ("Tell 'em, Dick!"), and when you do, you're going to have more votes than the white folks. ("It's true! You-all-right, Dick!") And when you got more votes than the white folks, I promise YOU that the Kennedys will be down HERE eatin' chittlins with you."

Gregory bore down: "People, we're goin' march. Yes, and we're goin' get arrested. Maybe we all goin' get arrested. ("We will! Pour it on!") And if we all get arrested, well, I still got two sons left—and they can come here from Chicago and get arrested, too!"

And, at last, with the audience perfectly in tune with the rhythm of his speech, Gregory said: "You know that I was arrested over in Alabama. ("We know!") Well, I was. Now, this white policeman, he put his hand on my arm. He put his hand on my arm, and do you know what I said to him? ("What'd you say, Dick, baby!") I said to that policeman, 'Get your hand off of me, nigger!'"

Pandemonium.

In the room then was a sense of Negro passion and power, a depth of feeling and expectation rarely acknowledged by white Americans. It seemed all the more telling because Gregory had inspired it with humor, which, finally, involves laughing at one's self. Had he wished it, Gregory could have suggested a march on the State Capitol, and the audience would have marched for him.

But, of course, he did not.

Instead, the members of the audience crossed arms, held hands and sang, We Shall Overcome.

health? Has it threatened the independence of the church? The Federal Government started off with complete separation of church and state; it was in the States that discrimination on the basis of religion lingered on. When Madison proposed that the prohibitions of the first amendment be applied to the States, his proposal was defeated.

Has the National Government threatened the integrity of arts and letters and science? On the contrary. Since the early years of the 19th century, the National Government has maintained such institutions as the Library of Congress, the U.S. Geological Survey, the National Observatory, the Smithsonian Institution, and, more recently, the National Archives and the National Gallery of Art. Have these institutions been free? Certainly they have been more free than many State universities. Congress has never interfered with the Library of Congress, for example, as the legislatures of Ohio and Colorado are even now interfering with their State universities.

It is precisely because the National Government is so generous to arts and sciences that the proponents of States rights fear it, for they do not really believe in freedom, nor in those institutions that preserve and prosper freedom: universities, libraries, scientific institutes. All of these foster the open mind and the cosmopolitan spirit. How alien these are to the philosophy of States rights can be observed in the South of 1860—or of 1960.

Has the National Government threatened the general welfare, or failed to promote it? On the contrary. That whole body of welfare legislation whose woof is interwoven with the warp of private enterprise to make the fabric of our life today finds its authority and support largely in the National Government: Social security, public health, conservation and, now, education, and civil rights.

It is precisely because the Federal Government does promote the general welfare that proponents of States rights fear it. They proclaim that these enterprises should not be performed by the National Government, but by the States. But they are not truly concerned with the general welfare, but only with that of members of their own faction. And they have failed egregiously to promote the welfare of even these—to provide schools and housing, for example. All too often, the States have wasted their resources of water and forest and soil, or handed them over to predatory private interests. Ever since the days of Theodore Roosevelt it has been the United States which has stepped in to protect these resources.

Has the National Government failed to form a more perfect union, to provide for the general defense, to insure domestic tranquility? Quite the contrary. There has never been a serious threat to the Union from the National Government, or to the domestic tranquillity. There has never been an adventurer, a soldier of fortune, a dictator, or a tyrant in the Executive chair.

The only threats to the Union have come from the States. States' rights imperiled the Union in 1803 when New England States flirted at secession because Congress had bought Louisiana. States' rights threatened the disruption of the Union during the War of 1812, when States refused to permit their militias to serve outside State territories. States' rights threatened the integrity of the Union in the 1820's when Georgia nullified Federal treaties and Supreme Court decisions protecting the Cherokee Indians, and in the 1830's when South Carolina nullified tariff laws and enforcement laws. States rights actually broke up the Union in 1861, and precipitated the most tragic war in which the American people have ever been engaged. We cannot say that the doctrine of States' rights threatens the Union today, but clearly it disturbs domestic tranquillity by defying the constitutional mandate of equality and justice.

And what of the States? Have they, in fact, lost any of the rights or powers they originally possessed? They have lost the right to secede. That, at least, was settled by Appomattox. They have lost the right to deprive persons of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or deny the equal protection of the laws; they have lost the right to deprive any person of suffrage on account of race or color. These rights they did indeed forfeit, and it was Appomattox which settled them all.

It would be a mistake to imply that the current revival of States rights had been entirely insincere or misguided. Bigness is dangerous; the welfare State can dry up initiative; power does tend to corrupt, and there is much to be said for fragmentation of political authority; eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.

But a States' rights philosophy that has its origin in fear of Government itself, and is rooted in a deep distrust of majority rule and of the democratic processes, forfeits its claim to respect. A States' rights philosophy which is never inspired by generosity, never excited by a passion for freedom or for justice, never exalted by magnanimity, but takes refuge in narrowness and selfishness and vindictiveness, exhausts its claim to tolerance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. YOUNG of Ohio in the chair). Is there further moring business? If not, morning business is closed.

LOCATION OF CHANCERIES OR OFFICES OF FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS IN CERTAIN RESIDENTIAL AREAS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 646) to prohibit the location of chanceries or other business offices of foreign governments in certain residential areas in the District of Columbia.

Pub. Accom. Ben.

THE 14TH AMENDMENT AND PUBLIC ACCOMMODATIONS

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, in a July 11 Senate floor speech, I presented my general objections to the enactment of S. 1731, the omnibus civil rights bill presented by the administration to the Congress. At that time, I stated:

> I seriously doubt that the groups and individuals who have been called upon by the administration to endorse its far-reaching proposals received a full explanation of the fundamental and basic constitutional issues which are involved and the threat which this bill poses to individual rights, liberties, and freedom. I do not believe that fully informed Americans would sponsor or support resolutions which endorse the surrender of principles and concepts which are so inseparable from our cherished system of government.

I wish to enlarge on that statement and more clearly and more fully set forth the implications of this bill and the radical departure from established constitutional principles it would represent. Today I shall confine myself largely to the legal principles involved. This bill proposes a novel and dangerous legal philosophy. Many of its provisions are so clearly unconstitutional that I cannot conceive their being enacted by this Congress.

Title II is the so-called public accommodations section of S. 1731. A similar section appears in S. 1732. My remarks today will be limited primarily to consideration of the authority of Congress to enact these sections under the powers granted by the 14th amendment to the Constitution.

I believe it is agreed by all that Congress is a body with limited legislative powers. Any bill that it passes must be bottomed upon a constitutional grant of power. Otherwise on its face the bill would be invalid.

These provisions attempt to impose Federal authority directly and primarily on the individual citizens of the United States. Section 202 of S. 1731 provides simply that—

> All persons shall be entitled, without discrimination or segregation on account of race, color, religion, or national origin, to the full and equal enjoyment of the goods, services, facilities, privileges, advantages and accommodations of the following public establishments.

The following provisions than enumerate the facilities involved and circumstances under which it is attempted to secure these accommodations.

Those services include hotels, motels, restaurants, theaters, and related service groups.

It is clear from a mere perusal of this section that an attempt is here made to create separate and independent Federal rights and actions, and it is likewise unmistakably clear that no such authority or power is granted to the Congress by the 14th amendment. Section 1 of the 14th amendment states:

> All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Section 5 of the amendment provides:

> The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

The key word in that amendment is State. The civil rights bills, especially in respect to public accommodations, are bottomed on the 14th amendment and the authority that the proponents hope to squeeze from its contents.

The provisions of section 1 have uniformly been held to mean that the prohibitions therein set forth are restrictions on the actions of the several States only and do not operate in any mann to inhibit the actions of individuals a ing alone.

An illustration of that point woul an individual who operates a restaur

Yet it cannot be disputed that the visions of the bill now under consid tion purport to regulate and rest purely private acts of individuals. It has been held by the Supreme Court, of course, that any action on the part of a State or any of its political subdivisions, whether such action be by its legislative, executive or judicial branch, shall be sufficient to make the amendment operative in a given situation. But S. 1732 and title II of S. 1731 do not pretend to require any action on the part of any State agency.

Further, the Supreme Court has uniformly held since the adoption of this amendment that its provisions are self-executing, and that the authority conferred on the Congress by section 5 to enforce the enumerated rights is corrective only. That is, Congress can only enact legislation to prevent the States from violating the provisions of the amendment or to abrogate prohibited State action, but the Congress cannot, on the basis of the amendment, act directly and primarily on the people and thereby create any new rights. It must restrict itself to preventing the States from encroaching on the rights of its citizens.

These questions have been looked upon as political and moral issues. We live under a government that protects the rights of everyone. Before the Congress can pass a law, the bill must be bottomed on a constitutional grant of authority.

Having stated these constitutional principles as to the meaning of the 14th amendment and the powers conferred thereby on Congress, let me now briefly review the decisions of the Supreme Court and other court decisions interpreting the amendment. The authorities presented here, while far from being exhaustive, clearly present the status of the law today.

The U.S. Supreme Court first interpreted the meaning of the 14th amendment in The Butchers' Benevolent Association of New Orleans v. The Crescent City Live-Stock Landing and Slaughter-House Company, 16 Wall. 36, 83 U.S. 36, 21 L. Ed. 394 (1873). This decision, popularly known as the Slaughter-House cases, dealt primarily with the meaning of the citizenship clause and the privileges and immunities clause, and it is not now necessary to set forth the facts giving rise to the case. The Court did, however, discuss the meaning of the equal protection of the laws clause, and with reference to both the 13th and 14th amendments, laid the basis for later pronouncements when it stated:

> In the light of the history of these amendments, and the pervading purpose of them, which we have already discussed, it is not difficult to give a meaning to this clause.
>
> The existence of laws in the States where the newly emancipated Negroes resided, which discriminated with gross injustice and hardship against them as a class, was the evil to be remedied by this clause, and by it such laws are forbidden. (83 U.S. 36.)

Only a few years after the adoption the 14th amendment, we thus find Supreme Court stating that it was existence of State laws—and that ot be repeated with too much emis: it was the existence of State —which the amendment was de-d to prohibit.

Greater clarity was given to the meaning of the due process and equal protection clauses when the Court rendered its decision in United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U.S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 587 (1875), wherein certain defendants were indicted in Federal court on 32 separate counts. The indictment was brought under the Enforcement Act of 1870 and charged the defendants with banding together and conspiring to injure, oppress, threaten and intimidate two U.S. citizens of African descent with the intent thereby to hinder and prevent them in the free exercise and enjoyment of rights and privileges alleged to be granted and secured to them by the Constitution and laws of the United States. The indictment charged, in part, that the defendants had sought to hinder and prevent the plaintiffs in exercising their right to peaceably assemble, to keep and bear arms, to vote, and further to deprive them of their lives and liberty without due process of law and to deprive them of the equal protection of the laws. In a rather lengthy discussion of the respective powers and the relationship of the Federal and State Governments, the Court found the indictment to be faulty in each and every count but stated, however, that even had it been sufficient, this action could not be maintained because:

> The 14th amendment prohibits a State from depriving any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; but this adds nothing to the rights of one citizen as against another. It simply furnished an additional guaranty against any encroachment by the States upon the fundamental rights which belong to every citizen as a member of society (92 U.S. 542, 554).

And, likewise:

> The 14th amendment prohibits a State from denying to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws; but this provision does not, any more than the one which precedes it, and which we have just considered, add anything to the rights which one citizen has under the Constitution against another. The equality of the rights of citizens is a principle of republicanism. Every republican government is in duty bound to protect all its citizens in the enjoyment of this principle, if within its power. That duty was originally assumed by the States; and it still remains there. The only obligation resting upon the United States is to see that the States do not deny the right. This the amendment guarantees, but no more. The power of the national government is limited to the enforcement of this guaranty (92 U.S. 542, 554).

The next major decision of the Supreme Court, and possibly the most well-known, involved five separate cases which collectively are cited as the Civil Rights cases, 109 U.S. 3, 3 S. Ct. 18, 27 L. Ed. 835 (1883). Each of these cases arose under the Civil Rights Act of 1875—chapter 114, sections 1 and 2, 18 Stat. 335—section 1 of which provided:

> That all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall be entitled to the full and equal enjoyment of the accommodations, advantages, facilities, and privileges of inns, public conveyances on land or water, theatres, and other places of public amusement; subject only to the conditions and limitations established by law, and applicable alike to citizens of every race and color, regardless of any previous condition of servitude.

It will be readily noted that the provisions of this act were very similar to those now proposed in S. 1731 and S. 1732. The language is almost identical. Let us see what the Supreme Court said about that act. The Constitution has not been changed one iota since that time.

Section 2 of the Civil Rights Act of 1875 provided that any person guilty of violating section 1 by denying to any person the full and equal enjoyment of such accommodations would be liable to the person aggrieved in the amount of $500 for each offense, and further provided that such action would constitute a misdemeanor with appropriate penalties.

The Court rendered a collective opinion in these cases, two of which involved indictments for denying Negroes accommodation and privileges of a hotel, two of which involved indictments for denying to Negroes the full enjoyment of theater accommodations, and one of which involved an indictment for denying to a Negro the full and equal use of a railroad car. All of said indictments were brought under the aforementioned Civil Rights Act of 1875.

The Court declared this act unconstitutional, holding that Congress had no authority by virtue of the 14th amendment to enact said legislation. In reaching this conclusion, the Court said:

> It is State action of a particular character that is prohibited. Individual invasion of individual rights is not the subject matter of the amendment. It has a deeper and broader scope. It nullifies and makes void all State legislation, and State action of every kind, which impairs the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, or which injures them in life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or which denies to any of them the equal protection of the laws (109 U.S. 3, 11).

The Court further held that, to enforce the provisions of the amendment, section 5 thereof gives the Congress authority to enact corrective legislation only; that is, to adopt appropriate legislation for correcting the effects of such prohibited State laws and State acts. The Court clearly stated:

> This is the legislative power conferred upon Congress, and this is the whole of it. It does not invest Congress with power to legislate upon subjects which are within the domain of State legislation; but to provide modes of relief against State legislation, or State action, of the kind referred to (109 U.S. 3, 11).

In its full discussion of the meaning of the equal protection clause and the power of Congress to enforce the rights secured thereby, the Court further stated:

> In this connection it is proper to state that civil rights, such as are guaranteed by the Constitution against State aggression, cannot be impaired by the wrongful acts of individuals, unsupported by State authority in the shape of laws, customs, or judicial or executive proceedings. The wrongful act of an individual, unsupported by any such authority, is simply a private wrong, or a crime of that individual; an invasion of the rights of the injured party, it is true, whether they affect his person, his property, or his reputation; but if not sanctioned in some way by the State, or not done under State authority, his rights remain in full force, and may presumably be vindicated by resort to the laws of the State for redress. An individual cannot deprive a man of his right to vote, to hold property, to buy and sell, to sue in the courts, or to be a witness or a juror; he may, by force or fraud, interfere with the enjoyment of the right in a particular case; he may commit an assault against the person, or commit murder, or use ruffian violence at the polls, or slander the good name of a fellow citizen; but, unless protected in these wrongful acts by some shield of State law or State authority, he cannot destroy or injure the right; he will only render himself amenable to satisfaction or punishment; and amenable therefor to the laws of the State where the wrongful acts are committed (109 U.S. 3, 17).

This decision of the Supreme Court rendered in 1883 thus clearly and forcefully announces, first, that the prohibitions of the 14th amendment apply solely to denials by the several States of the rights guaranteed thereby, and second, that section 5 of the amendment does not grant unto Congress the authority to enact direct and primarily legislation to enforce its provisions, but only grants authority to enact corrective legislation to prohibit the States from denying the rights set forth in section 1. Wrongful acts of individuals, unsupported by State law or some State action through its officers or agents, are not prohibited by the amendment and the Congress has no authority to enact legislation designed to prevent such purely private acts.

The decision of the Supreme Court in the civil rights cases has been followed and reaffirmed without exception to the present time.

Mr. President, I stand on that statement. The decision of 1883 has been followed and reaffirmed without exception down to the present time. In the very recent case of Williams v. Howard Johnsons Restaurant, 268 F. 2d 845 (U.S.C.A., Fourth, 1959), for example, the plaintiff brought a class action against the defendant, alleging that he had wrongfully been refused service in the defendant restaurant solely because of his race. He sought a declaratory judgment that his exclusion on racial grounds amounted to discrimination against a person moving in interstate commerce as well as being a violation of the Civil Rights Act of 1875. He conceded that no statute of the State of Virginia, where the restaurant was located, requires the exclusion of Negroes from public restaurants, but he cited other statutes of the State requiring segregation of the races in facilities furnished by carriers, and he emphasized the long-established local custom of excluding Negroes from public restaurants and contends that acquiescence of the State in these practices amounts to discriminatory State action.

The court stated:

The essence of the argument is that the State licenses restaurants to serve the public and thereby is burdened with the positive duty to prohibit unjust discrimination in the use and enjoyment of the facilities.

On motion of defendant the suit was dismissed in the district court, and the court of appeals affirmed, holding that the dismissal was in accord with the decisions of the Supreme Court and other Federal courts.

The court cited as authority the holding of the Supreme Court in the civil rights cases of 1883, and further held that the licensing of the defendant restaurant to operate did not constitute such State action as is required to make the provisions of the 14th amendment applicable. The court stated in this regard:

This argument fails to observe the important distinction between activities that are required by the State and those which are carried out by voluntary choice and without compulsion by the people of the State in accordance with their own desires and social practices. Unless these actions are performed in obedience to some positive provision of State law they do not furnish a basis for the pending complaint. The license laws of Virginia do not fill the void (268 F. 2d, 845, 847).

The court then cited the applicable section of the Virginia Code which makes it unlawful for any person to operate a restaurant in the State without an unrevoked permit from the Commissioner, who is the chief executive officer of the State board of health. Speaking of this statute, the court said:

The statute is obviously designed to protect the health of the community but it does not authorize State officials to control the management of the business or to dictate what persons shall be served (268 F. 2d 845, 848).

The Supreme Court has, of course, in several cases found that certain acts of individuals were either supported by some State action or the acts of the individuals or organization constituted State action by the very nature of the act. For example, in March v. Alabama, 326 U.S. 501, 66 S. Ct. 276, 90 L. Ed. 265 (1946), the Court held that the ownership and operation of a small "companytown" by the Gulf Shipbuilding Corp. amounted to a "public function." A member of the Jehovah's Witness was refused the right to distribute literature on a sidewalk of the town and was subsequently arrested and convicted under a State statute making it a crime to enter and remain on the premises of another after having been warned not to do so. The Court held that the private ownership of property in such a case could not justify restricting the fundamental liberties of its townspeople, but the decision was primarily directed at the act of the State in enforcing through its courts the restriction established by the property owner.

In Smith v. Allwright, 321 U.S. 649, 64 S. Ct. 757, 88 L. Ed. 987 (1944), the Court held that Negroes could not be excluded by the Democratic Party from participation in its primaries when the primary election constituted an integral part of the general election. The Court found that the primary elections in Texas were conducted by the party under the statutory authority of the State and said:

We think the statutory system for the selection of party nominees for inclusion on the general election ballot makes the party which is required to follow these legislative directions an agency of the State insofar as it determines the participants in a primary election. The party takes its character as a State agency from the duties imposed upon it by State statutes (321 U.S. 649, 663).

The Supreme Court has also held that the enforcement of discriminatory acts through the judicial machinery of a State also constitutes "State action" and therefore is subject to the provisions of the 14th amendment. For example, in Shelley v. Kraemer, 334 U.S. 1, 68 S. Ct. 836, 92 L. Ed. 1161 (1948), the Court held that a racial restrictive covenant established by a private property owner cannot be enforced in the courts of a State. However, the Court clearly recognized the rule established in the civil rights cases when it said:

Since the decision of this Court in the Civil Rights cases, 109 U. S. 3 (1883), the principle has become firmly embedded in our constitutional law that the action inhibited by the first section of the 14th amendment is only such action as may fairly be said to be that of the States. That amendment erects no shield against merely private conduct, however discriminatory or wrongful.

We conclude, therefore, that the restrictive agreement standing alone cannot be regarded as violative of any rights guaranteed to petitioners by the 14th amendment. So long as the purposes of those agreements are effectuated by voluntary adherence to their terms, it would appear clear that there has been no action by the State and the provisions of the amendment have not been violated (334 U.S. 2, 13).

In other cases the Court has held that the granting of a license in the nature of a franchise, such as those granted to public utilities and common carriers, constitutes the recipient an agency of the State to the extent that the utility or carrier is subject to the provisions of the equal protection of the laws clause. It is clear beyond doubt, however, that there is a significant distinction between this type of license and that required, for example, for the operation of a restaurant, a barber shop, or other place of public accommodation. A very clear and lucid explanation of this distinction is found in the recent case of Boman et al. v. Birmingham Transit Company, 280 F. 2d 531 (U.S.C.A., Fifth, 1960). It was there held that a city transit company could not require separation of the races on its buses, but the Court stated:

Because of the peculiar function performed by this transit company as a public utility, and its relation to the city and State of Alabama through its holding of a special franchise to operate on the public streets of Birmingham, we conclude that so long as such an ordinance was in force, the acts of the bus company in requiring racially segregated seating were State acts and were thus violative of appellants' constitutional rights (280 F. 2d 531, 534).

The ordinance referred to provided that carriers of passengers for hire could formulate such rules and regulations for the seating of passengers on public conveyances as are reasonably necessary to assure the speedy, safe, orderly, convenient, and peaceful handling of its passengers.

The court also stated:

It is, of course, fundamental that t justification for the grant by a State t private corporation of a right or franc to perform such a public utility servic furnishing transportation, gas, electri or the like, on the public streets of the is that the grantee is about the pu business. It is doing something the S deems useful for the public necessity convenience. This is what differentiates the public utility which holds what may be called a special franchise from an ordinary business corporation which in common with all others is granted the privilege of operating in corporate form but does not have that special franchise of using State property for private gain to perform a public function (280 F. 2d 531, 535).

In conclusion, the court specifically stated:

Moreover, we fully recognize what has been known by all to be the law since the Supreme Court decided the Slaughter-House cases * * * that "the action inhibited by the first section of the 14th amendment is only such action as may fairly be said to be that of the States * * *" (280 F. 2d 531–535).

The most recent decisions of the Supreme Court involving this question were rendered on May 20, 1963, just 60 days ago, in what has popularly become known as the sit-in cases. In Peterson v. City of Greenville, 373 U.S. 244 (1963), petitioners, who were all members of the Negro race, attempted to sit in the white section of a lunch counter in the S. H. Kress & Co. store in Greenville, S.C. They were refused service, were subsequently arrested by city police officers, and convicted for violating the trespass statute of the State. On appeal to the Supreme Court, these convictions were set aside, but the Court specifically cited and recognized the ordinance of the city of Greenville which required the separation of restaurant facilities for white and Negro customers. The Court stated in this regard:

It cannot be denied that here the city of Greenville, an agency of the State, has provided by its ordinance that the decision as to whether a restaurant facility is to be operated on a desegregated basis is to be reserved to it. When the State has commanded a particular result and thereby "to a significant extent" has "become involved" in it, and, in fact, has removed that decision from the sphere of private choice (373 U.S. 244, 247, 248).

In so ruling, the Court cited with approval the following statement from its decision in Burton v. Wilmington Parking Authority, 365 U.S. 715, 81 S. Ct. 856, 6 L. Ed. 2d 45 (1961):

Private conduct abridging individual rights does no violence to the equal protection clause unless to some significant extent the State in any of its manifestations has found to have become involved in it (365 U.S. 715, 722).

In the case of Lombard et al. v. State of Louisiana, 373 U.S. 267 (1963), a similar set of facts existed except that there was no State law or city ordinance requiring segregation in restaurants. There the Court found the required State action in public announcements of the superintendent of police and the mayor of the city of New Orleans. Four days before petitioners' arrest, for example, the mayor stated publicly:

I have today directed the superintendent police that no additional sit-in demon- tions * * * will be permitted * * * re- ess of the avowed purpose or intent of articipants.

e Court further stated that there evidence which tended to indicate the actions of the particular store officials involved was coerced by the city, and held that these facts constituted State action, stating:

A State, or a city, may act as authoritatively through its executive as through its legislative body. See Ex Parte Virginia, 100 U.S. 339. As we interpret the New Orleans city officials' statements, they here determined that the city would not permit Negroes to seek desegregated service in restaurants. Consequently, the city must be treated exactly as if it had an ordinance prohibiting such conduct (373 U.S. 267, 273).

The existence in every State of the Union of a specific State statute requiring discrimination of the most flagrant nature based on race, creed, or color, could not provide the constitutional authority for Congress to enact these measures to regulate the conduct of individuals and their private acts.

Now, Mr. President, I have briefly discussed a number of decisions involving the application of the provision of section 1 and section 5 of the 14th amendment. As stated at the beginning of my remarks, I have not cited each and every decision of the Federal courts on the points under consideration, but those here mentioned do accurately reflect the status of the case law today under the holdings of the Federal courts. Some of those which I have discussed reached the conclusion that only individual acts were involved; in others the court found the presence of a State law or some other State action in support of or sanctioning individual discriminatory acts. My purpose in presenting cases reaching both conclusions is to point out as emphatically as possible that in every single case in which this question has ever been considered, the Supreme Court, as well as the lower Federal courts, have repeatedly held that section 1 of the 14th amendment is a prohibition against State action only. This is the original holding of the Slaughter-House cases, as affirmed and made more clear in the Civil Rights cases. No principle of law could be more clear than this. There is no other principle of constitutional law to which the Supreme Court has more uniformly and consistently adhered than this one. What authority is there to the contrary? There is absolutely none.

Thus, we have a definite and clear constitutional interpretation which has continued, unbroken and unaltered, and repeatedly affirmed by the Court from 1873 until 1963—a period of 90 years. The first major decisions by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1873 and 1883, came soon after the adoption of the 14th amendment. The membership of the Court in 1883, as well as in 1873, were of the same generation which adopted the amendment. The members of the Court personally knew the history and the purposes of the amendment.

The Civil Rights cases decision of 1883 declaring invalid an act of Congress similar to the proposal of 1963 was not challenged by the Congress or by the people of the Nation. No proposed constitutional amendment to offset the decision was seriously considered.

I point out with emphasis that here was a Court which was composed of a membership that was of the generation that adopted the 14th amendment, the same generation that had passed the law of 1875. The Court knew the purposes, the argument, and the political and moral, as well as the legal side, in and out. Nevertheless, they declared and firmly set forth the extent of the powers and the amount of authority under the 14th amendment. Then they cut down a law which had been enacted by Congress, and said Congress had no such authority. Every Court from then until now, as recently as 60 days ago, has affirmed, reaffirmed, and followed consistently that basic principle, without any kind of exception.

Moreover, as heretofore pointed out, the 1883 decision has been expressly affirmed and followed by the Court for these 900 years, including the recent case, Williams against Howard Johnson's Restaurant, decided by the U.S. Court of Appeals, Fourth Circuit, in 1959.

Still, in this wave of hysteria and as a part of this colossal grab for naked power by the Attorney General, in these bills, we are asked by the President and the Attorney General to ignore this long line of Court decisions on a constitutional principle and pass this law in defiance of the plain wording of the Constitution and the Court decisions. Congress is now asked to reverse the Supreme Court on a constitutional question with a statute. Then, in order to uphold the legislation, the Court will be asked to reverse itself with a decision upholding the more modern law.

In short, the Congress has no power whatsoever to overrule the Court on a constitutional question by the passage of mere legislation. The Congress has no power to overrule the Court on a constitutional question by the passage of a simple bill. The only way the Supreme Court can be overruled on a constitutional question is by the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution. Of course, this must be done in the manner set forth in the Constitution itself.

In order to amend the Constitution, each House must by a two-thirds vote propose such amendment, and this must be followed by the ratification of the proposed amendment by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States; or the proposed amendment must originate with the States and be approved by three-fourths of them.

I have not heard a single advocate of these bills proposing such an amendment.

If the people of the Nation want to amend the Constitution on this point, they can do so. But, as the Constitution is writen, every citizen regardless of race or color, has the constitutional right to earn and save money and, with it, to buy property. Every citizen has the right to use his own property in keeping with his desires and wishes, subject only with regard for public health, publice safety, and related matters. This right is fundamental, and cannot be destroyed or impaired under the guise of the Federal Government enforcing the alleged or real civil rights of another individual. This fundamental right applies to every citizen, including, of course, the owners of restaurants, hotels, motels, theaters, and other business activities included in these bills.

This proposed legislation therefore would destroy far more rights than it could ever possibly protect.

Even limiting the legislation to those who would come within the limits of the bill would not be the end of the tragedy. There would be a collapse and a breaking down, not only on that subject, but on all subjects of basic constitutional limitations upon the legislative branch and the executive branch of the Government—limitations which protect all the people. It is a question of authority. Congress does not have the authority under the wording of the amendment or under any of the interpretations.

After all possible points are fully weighed, this basic hard fact remains: The Federal Government is totally without jurisdiction insofar as the 14th amendment is concerned in all the matters covered by title II of S. 1731 and S. 1732, the so-called public accommodations provisions.

Insofar as the 14th amendment is concerned, the Congress is totally lacking in authority to pass the "public accommodations" provisions of these proposals.

At a later time I shall address myself to the commerce clause and other provisions of these bills.

Everyone had better be skeptical when a great mass of far-reaching proposed legislation is bottomed on two different provisions of the Constitution of the United States, and real doubt is engendered by the mere putting it on two bases. However, we do not have to stop with inference. We can go to the Attorney General's testimony. He is the one who has written the proposed legislation, or at least it was written under his direction. He is the man who would be given this power. I read from his prepared statement given before the Commerce Committee on July 1, 1963:

> In addition to the commerce clause, we rely on the power of Congress under the 14th amendment to prohibit the denial of equal protection of the laws to any person. The 14th amendment also provides that Congress may enforce this provision by appropriate legislation.

Mr. President, I challenge the Attorney General to make such statement or reach such a conclusion if he has read the plain, unmistakable and unbroken decisions of the Supreme Court interpreting the 14th amendment.

I quote further from the statement of the Attorney General:

> We recognize that in 1883 the Supreme Court held in the Civil Rights Cases, 109 U.S. 3, Congress did not have power under the 14th amendment to prohibit discrimination in privately owned places of public accommodation, and that Congress' power under that amendment is only over discrimination accomplished by the action of a State.

The Attorney General of the United States, in a formal statement, agrees with the interpretation of that amendment and the Supreme Court decision of 1883, which has been affirmed as recently as 1963.

He agrees with that interpretation. He says it is a correct one. I quote him further:

> But in 80 years, much of the force of that decision has disappeared. State regulation of private business has increased. State relationships with business have become more varied and complex, and views of what action may be attributed to the State have changed.

There is a bold, brazen attempt to amend the Constitution of the United States, to reverse it, to make it say and do something it does not say in language, and by a contrary interpretation, in order to have the power, the springboard, for a legislative enactment that has heretofore been condemned by the Supreme Court, merely on the flimsy statement and argument that times have changed and there has been more regulation of business by the States. The Attorney General does not cite any opinions or give anything in proof of his bare, bald statement, a statement unsupported by logic, and certainly unsupported by any legal reasoning. I quote him further:

> There are a number of recent cases in which the Federal courts have held that private decisions to discriminate may be attributed to the State for purposes of the 14th amendment.

I have already reviewed those kinds of cases. They are beside the point. The Supreme Court took them up and refused to change its own decision or to use new situations, circumstances, or facts in any way, except in keeping with the original decision by the Supreme Court in 1883. The Attorney General said:

> Consequently, if the Supreme Court were now asked to pass upon the constitutionality of a public accommodations law based on the 14th amendment, it might well uphold the law.

The Attorney General did not even say, in the statement I have just quoted, that he believed the Court would reverse itself after all these years and after the repeated affirmances, as recently as just a few years ago. He said the Supreme Court "might," if called upon to pass upon such a statute, uphold a new statute now. I quote him further:

> However, the 1883 decision has not been overruled and remains the law of the land.

That is the very argument I have made. Further quoting the Attorney General:

> It is for this reason that we rely primarily on the commerce clause.

I have posed this question for every Senator. I said in my previous speech that I was certain every Senator wanted to do what he believed was his duty. He wants to uphold the Constitution of the United States, rather than to violate it and trample on it. Senators do not want to use any authority that is not granted to them by the terms of the Constitution. But here we have an argument made by the Attorney General to the effect that a public accommodations bill can be bottomed on the 14th amendment. In the face of this flimsy argument, which has no substance, the Attorney General himself comes before the committee and says:

> It is for this reason that we rely primarily on the commerce clause.

Congress is asked to write off the 14th amendment. That is like a man coming before a jury and pleading self-defense by one set of witnesses, but proving accidental discharge of a weapon by another set of witnesses. He cannot stand on both grounds.

The Attorney General begins by trying to stand on both provisions of the Constitution. That is a fatal admission in substance by the Attorney General himself, when he says, in effect, "We rely primarily on the commerce clause." How can any Senator say, in view of what the law is, and of what even the Attorney General says it is, that such a proposed law can be bottomed on the 14th amendment? I quote the Attorney General further:

> Some Congressmen, who seek objectives similar to those of the bill, would place sole reliance on the 14th amendment.

I do not know who they are.

> There are others who strongly oppose any reliance on the 14th amendment.

I quote this statement because it shows how desperate the Attorney General was for some kind of authority which he could present to the committee, when the clear point at issue was, Where is the law under the 14th amendment that gives Congress the authority to pass such bills?

I quote the Attorney General further:

> We recognize that there is some merit in both positions.

He had just said, in a sentence or a paragraph earlier, in effect, that there is precious little in the 14th amendment, because he said:

> It is for this reason that we rely primarily on the commerce clause.

I quote him further:

> However, we feel it is absolutely clear that Congress has the power to end discrimination in places of public accommodations under the provisions of the commerce clause.

I shall not recite the commerce clause. I shall continue to quote the Attorney General. I continue to quote the Attorney General because, in fairness to him, his statement should be placed in the RECORD.

> Should it ultimately be decided that Congress can regulate these businesses under the 14th amendment, the fact that the bill describes them in terms of their impact on interstate commerce would not diminish Congress' power.

There is a bold, brazen statement by the Attorney General of the United States, and others, admitting doubt about each of these provisions; admitting that there is little, if any authority to stand on the 14th amendment. Here is a bold statement to the effect, "We will run the bills through the Halls of Congress on both wheels, on both grounds; and then, if either of them is upheld by the Court, we will still be in business." That shows the inherent weakness, the lack of firmness, the lack of faith as a basis for the enactment of the bills.

I have also a statement by the distinguished senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE], who asked questions at that time, showing that he had his doubts. I mention this to show that there is concern in the committee. I did not want to omit anything that might be a defense. The quotation have given from the testimony of the Attorney General were taken from the reporter's notes; they are not available now in printed form. However, I am certain that they are accurately quoted because they have been taken directly from the reporter's notes.

In discussing earlier certain rights of individuals in connection with my point that Congress has no authority to pass such a law under the 14th amendment, the Senator from Mississippi intended to cite section 1983 of title 42, with reference to certain civil actions, that are based on civil law statutes of many years past, passed in 1871, which give persons certain civil rights on a person-to-person basis. I quote that section now:

> Every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any State or Territory, subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other person within the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress.

That section does not have any application to the subject being discussed; but I desired to point out that it exists, that it has not been overlooked, and that it fills out the picture of the pertinent law, so as to put the whole subject in a different category.

Later I shall submit, for the consideration of the Senate, articles on the commerce clause, as well as other articles on these bills.

I am certain—and I believe that the great majority of the Senate will reach this conclusion—that authority does not exist in either of these constitutional provisions as a proper basis for the enactment of the proposed laws, and that they will fall by the wayside, for the very reason that 80 or 90 years ago the Supreme Court held that such a law was invalid; and since that time no such congressional statute has been permitted by the courts to stand.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. STENNIS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. COOPER. The Senator from Mississippi knows the great respect I have for him and for his learning as a lawyer and a judge. Later, I shall speak on the application of the 14th amendment to the issue of public accommodations. However, I thought that at this time I would intervene briefly, because, together with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD] and other Senators, I have introduced a bill which rests upon the 14th amendment.

Is it not correct that in the 1883 decision of the Supreme Court there was a specific finding by the Court that it did not pass upon the issue as to whether there was an equal right of access for all citizens to the public accommodations named in the act of 1875? That issue was not determined by the Court, was it?

Mr. STENNIS. I recall language to what to that effect in that decision. The Court moved on.

I am glad to yield to the Senator from Kentucky; I have a high regard for his judgment.

Mr. COOPER. And the Senator from Mississippi knows my respect for him.

Later I shall elaborate upon this point. It is that the Court specifically said that it was not ruling on the question of whether there was equal access for all citizens to the public accommodations named in the statute of 1875.

Mr. STENNIS. As I recall, the Court said, in substance, that it was not necessary to decide on that involved point, because by all standards it was beyond the constitutional authority of the Congress to pass such an act. So it was struck down.

Mr. COOPER. The Senator from Mississippi is correct in saying that the Court held it was not necessary; but the Court did specifically state that it was not passing on the question of whether there was such a right.

Is it not also correct that what the Court actually passed upon was the language incorporated in the 1875 act; and in its findings, the Court said that nothing in the language of the 1875 act specified in any way State involvement?

Mr. STENNIS. Neither the language nor the facts showed it; but since then the Court has passed on many matters in which a State was involved; and in the absence of any law the Court has upheld the power of the 14th amendment, as the Senator from Kentucky knows.

Mr. COOPER. I am sure the Senator from Mississippi will agree that the 1875 act incorporated no language or statement which indicated State involvement.

Mr. STENNIS. That is correct.

Mr. COOPER. Is it not also correct that in considering any statutes which may be enacted by Congress, the issue for the Court would be whether the language of such an act and the findings upon which it was based showed an involvement by a State—or, more precisely, as the Supreme Court has said in its recent decisions such a manifestation of State activity or authority as to bring it within the scope of the 14th amendment?

Mr. STENNIS. That is what the Court has consistently held; it has recognized at all times that under this amendment, Congress has no authority to pass such a law, and has stated that the Court would, of its own accord, correct a State action or State manifestation.

Mr. COOPER. I respectfully disagree, because Congress has passed various acts under its powers under the 14th amendment.

I merely state the point, which I shall make in more detail later, that if Congress passed an act which showed on its face the involvement of a State's authority and if that was also shown by the facts, the Court could pass upon the specific act, and distinguish its decision and the 1883 decision, rather than be called upon to reverse the 1883 decision. I do not think this point has been made in the congressional debates or in the general debate in the country.

Mr. STENNIS. I believe the situation would be that the facts of any case tried or heard would have to show a State involvement or a State pattern or manifestation of some kind. If so, the Court could take action in the absence of such a statute.

However, State involvement cannot be shown merely by the language used in a preamble or in a congressional finding of facts. Congress has no mission of finding facts, anyway. These are declaratory statements in the introduction of the bill—discussions of the experience all over the Nation, and so forth. Such things have no place in the bill.

Mr. COOPER. I agree wholly with the Senator from Mississippi that a bill which contains only a preamble, and does not have an operative section, would present no issue for the Supreme Court. I have taken the position, that the administration bill does not rely at all on the 14th amendment, as is asserted, because there is only a finding in the preamble, but nothing in the operative section.

Mr. STENNIS. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. The cases passed on thus far by the Supreme Court have dealt with legislation by a State or ordinances of a State subdivision or orders of a State offered acting officially under color of law—positive State action.

Mr. STENNIS. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. There have been some other cases. I recall one in which a franchise had been given to a private bus company—in Alabama, I believe.

Mr. STENNIS. A public utility.

Mr. COOPER. In that case the court held that discrimination could not be practiced, because the State had given a franchise.

Mr. STENNIS. I cited that case in my argument.

Mr. COOPER. I thought so.

I point out that this holding marked a step from the original holding that State legislation or ordinances—were necessary to bring discriminatory acts under the 14th amendment.

Mr. STENNIS. With all deference to the Senator from Kentucky, the courts have uniformly held that if there is any State action—legislative, judicial, or executive, the 14th amendment applies of its own vigor and effect. That was expressly held by the Court. But the Court also held that a mere licensing, even on an interstate highway, was not sufficient to bring the action before it.

Mr. and Mrs. Murphy do not have a franchise; they have only a permit to operate their business.

Mr. COOPER. The point I make is that if Congress should inact a law which, in its language and upon the facts, showed sufficient State involvement, there would be an issue which could be brought before the U.S. Supreme Court; and the Court would not be called upon to reverse its 1883 decision, but could distinguish between its 1883 decision and its decision on a different set of facts.

I know the Senator from Mississippi is an able lawyer and judge, and I believe he knows that distinction can properly be drawn by a court.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I am glad to yield to the Senator. I appreciate his comments. I hope to hear his speech when he makes it.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to consideration of executive business, to consider the nomination on the Executive Calendar under "New Reports."

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PROUTY in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no reports of committees, the clerk will state the nomination on the Executive Calendar.

FEDERAL COAL MINE SAFETY BOARD OF REVIEW

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Charles R. Ferguson to be a member of the Federal Coal Mine Safety Board of Review for the term expiring July 15, 1966.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of this nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

RICHARD R. CONLEY—RECOMMITTAL OF NOMINATION

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nomination of Richard R. Conley, to be postmaster at Rome City, Ind., which is presently on the Executive Calendar, be recommitted to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONVENTION ON POLITICAL RIGHTS OF WOMEN—REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, there was transmitted to the Senate today a Convention on the Political Rights of Women, Executive J, 88th Congress, 1st session, which was signed at New York on March 31, 1953, in behalf of certain governments, but not the Government of the United States of America. I ask unanimous consent that the injunction of secrecy be removed from the Convention, and that the Convention, together with the President's message, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that the message from the President be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The message from the President is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to accession, I transmit herewith the Convention on the Political Rights of Women, which was signed at New York on March 31, 1953, in behalf of certain governments, but not the Government of the United States of America.

I transmit also, for the information of the Senate, the report of the Secretary of State with respect to the Convention.

In the event that the Senate advises and consents to accession to the Convention, it is recommended that it indicate that such accession is subject to the understanding that in Article III the phrase "public office" does not include military service and the phrase "public function" is co-terminous with "public office."

JOHN F. KENNEDY.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 22, 1963.

CONVENTION RELATING TO ABOLITION OF FORCED LABOR—REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, the President of the United States also transmitted to the Senate today a convention concerning the abolition of forced labor, Convention No. 105, being Executive K, 88th Congress, 1st session, adopted by the International Labor Conference at its 40th session, Geneva, June 25, 1957. I ask unanimous consent that the injunction of secrecy be removed from the convention, that the convention, together with the President's message be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that the President's message be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The message from the President is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith the convention concerning the abolition of forced labor (Convention No. 105), adopted by the International Labor Conference at its 40th session, Geneva, June 25, 1957.

I transmit also, for the information of the Senate, the report of the Secretary of State concerning the Convention, together with the copy enclosed therewith of a letter from the Secretary of Labor.

JOHN F. KENNEDY.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 22, 1963.

SUPPLEMENTARY CONVENTION ON ABOLITION OF SLAVERY, THE SLAVE TRADE, AND INSTITUTIONS AND PRACTICES SIMILAR TO SLAVERY—REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, the President of the United States further transmitted to the Senate today the Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery, being Executive L, 88th Congress, 1st session, which was signed at Geneva on September 7, 1956, in behalf of certain governments, but not the Government of the United States of America. I ask unanimous consent that the injunction of secrecy be removed from the supplementary Convention, that the Convention, together with the President's message be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that the President's message be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The message from the President is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to accession, I transmit herewith the Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery, which was signed at Geneva on September 7, 1956, in behalf of certain governments, but not the Government of the United States of America.

I transmit also, for the information of the Senate, the report of the Secretary of State with respect to the Convention.

JOHN F. KENNEDY.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 22, 1963.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

LOCATION OF CHANCERIES OR OFFICES OF FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS IN CERTAIN RESIDENTIAL AREAS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 646) to prohibit the location of chanceries or other business offices of foreign governments in certain residential areas in the District of Columbia.

STATE COMMERCIAL FISHERY RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending bill, S. 646, be laid aside temporarily and that the Senate resume the consideration of Calendar No. 312, Senate bill 627, and that it be made the pending business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 627) to promote State commercial fishery research and development projects, a for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is objection to the request of the Se from Montana?

There being no objection, the Se resumed consideration of the bill.

7/29/63

people of America. You have my best wishes for continuing success and an expanded program in the future.

With warmest personal regards. May the Almighty be with you and yours always.

Sincerely,

JOHN A. BURNS,
Governor of Hawaii.

THE LAW AS IT AFFECTS DESEGREGATION: IMPLICATIONS OF THE SUPREME COURT DECISION

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, much has already been written about the need for civil rights legislation this session of Congress. Much more will be written before Congress adjourns sometime this fall. While there is no dearth of material dealing with this critical national issue, I would like to direct the attention of my colleagues to a frank and forthright essay, "The Law as it Affects Desegregation: Implications of the Supreme Court Decision," prepared by Miss Pauli Murray, tutor of law, Yale University Law School. This essay was delivered at the Radcliffe Alumnae College, June 14, 1963, in Cambridge, Mass.

Miss Murray has served as visiting professor of law at the Ghana School of Law and is the author of "States' Laws on Race and Color" and coauthor of the "Constitution and Government of Ghana." Aside from these qualifications, Miss Murray notes that she was one of the earlier generation of freedom riders when the struggle for equality was a far more lonely one, and a leader of successful nonviolent sit-in demonstrations in Washington restaurants exactly 20 years ago. Thus Miss Murray freely admits to a certain lack of scholarly objectivity when she writes of the current civil rights crisis.

Nevertheless in this essay Miss Murray achieves a remarkable combination of personal involvement and legal objectivity. She examines four major questions: First, what is the central issue in the present conflict? Second, what has been the role of the law, and particularly of the courts, in resolving this issue? Third, what are the new factors which demand new solutions? Fourth, what is the role of the law in solving the present crisis?

Miss Murray's essay was written prior to President Kennedy's historic message on civil rights and consequently she was unable to consider these proposals in her analysis. While this paper represents only the views and opinions of the author, it is worthy of the attention of every Member of Congress.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that excerpts from this essay be printed in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE LAW AS IT AFFECTS DESEGREGATION: IMPLICATIONS OF THE SUPREME COURT DECISION

INTRODUCTION

During the past several weeks, American Negroes have confronted the Nation with what has been described as a "massive insistence" upon drastic changes in the social structure to achive rapid and total integration. They have abandoned their traditional role of patience; they have rejected tokenism and gradualism; they are saying, "One hundred years of fractional citizenship is enough. We want full citizenship now."

This mood pervades the entire Negro community as seen in the tremendous outpouring of hundreds to tens of thousands of Negroes into the streets of the Nation. Police violence, kicking, beating, the use of fierce dogs and fire hoses, even murder—none of these has stopped them. For the 7-day period ending June 2, an estimated more than 30 demonstrations took place in widely separated areas of the country. A week later, the New York Times reported that demonstrations had occurred in nearly 50 localities since May 1. This week has been marked by defiance of the Governor of Alabama in a confrontation with the Federal Government, a televised appeal to the Nation by President Kennedy and the fatal shooting in the back of an NAACP official in Mississippi. Clearly, this is our most serious domestic crisis since the Civil War.

Describing it as the "Second American Revolution," the Washington Star editorialized on June 2 that the real problem in this situation is—

"* * * how best to cope wisely with a rapidly developing revolution. The current outbreak of mass demonstrations by Negroes * * * is a manifestation of as genuine and justified revolution as any of the revolutions in history, history being largely an account of a sequence of revolutions."

Actually, we are experiencing the climax of a phase of the continuing social revolution in the United States which began with our Declaration of Independence and our war to throw off colonial rule. Periodically our country has been thrown into convulsions as various groups of the population have taken the initiative in reaffirming their fundamental rights and freedoms. These upsurges have been part of the growth and maturing of our democracy.

Now in the 1960's, Negroes are engaged in a desperate effort to end segregation and discrimination everywhere in the United States. All the evidence indicates that they will not be stopped short of their goal. President Kennedy correctly placed this struggle in its proper historical perspective, when he observed in his recent Vanderbilt University address, that it was in the best American tradition.

The issues involved in this confrontation are moral as well as legal; the alternatives have become total equality or total repression, and there is no turning back. Each of us is caught up in an atmosphere of impending conflict, of a mounting urgency to come to fundamental grips with our most longstanding and explosive domestic issue and one which rates high priority among the most crucial issues of our foreign policy.

At this turning point of our history, I find it difficult to maintain a balance between academic objectivity and deep personal emotional involvement. As one of en earlier generation of freedom riders with a prison sentence as a reminder of the days when the struggle was a lonely one, and as a student leader of successful nonviolent sit-in demonstrations in Washington restaurants exactly 20 years ago, I cannot pretend a scholarly detachment from these events.

In our time we are being compelled to return to our revolutionary roots. Potential violence has been inherent in this issue from the beginning of our history. I am glad that this long unsettled business of democracy is now coming to a head. I rejoice that Negroes in ever greater numbers are today standing where the American patriots stood in 1776; that they are now willing more than ever to risk their lives for personal liberty and human dignity. They are reenacting the American Revolution in 20th century form. I believe that if the American people as a whole could identify Negroes with our revolutionary traditions of liberty, we will have taken the first significant step toward eliminating the schism which has so divided and almost destroyed us as a nation in the past.

This revolutionary upheaval has not come about through formal decision of any single group, but through a consensus made up of individual commitment by thousands of people taking a stand, igniting and inspiring others to do the same. Many of the demonstrations have been planned; others are spontaneous. Out of this personal commitment to the struggle for liberty is emerging a new self-image, a new self-respect. And if I read the signs correctly, the Nation is gaining a new image of the Negro, for it is our tradition that when people have self-respect, nothing can keep them from asserting the inalienable rights of free men, women, and children.

I emphasize children here, for in reality, Negro children in the South, for the past 9 years, have led the crusade for human dignity. I need not remind you of the children who have braved hostile communities to exercise their right to attend nonsegregated schools. You are aware of the Birmingham children who recently, as if by prearranged signal, marched out of a school assembly and into the streets to demonstrate for their rights leaving an astonished faculty and an empty school building. You have doubtless read of the schoolchildren of Mississippi carrying signs directed to their adults which read: "We have gone to jail for you. Will you register and vote for us?"

In Washington, one of my friends is having difficulty with her teenaged son who remonstrates with her because she has not let him join some of the demonstrations in nearby Maryland. He feels ashamed because his cousin—a mere girl—has already demonstrated, been arrested and taken to prison. This fire and idealism among Negro schoolchildren today is so intense that their parents are left no alternative but to join the demonstrations themselves to maintain their honor and their children's respect.

By now, it must be clear to all of us that, for the second time in our Nation's history, we stand on the threshold of a major decision on human rights of the most fundamental character. In 1963 it has been forcefully brought home to us that our Nation cannot endure with fractional degrees of equality or citizenship. The right to human dignity is indivisible.

Against this background, let us address ourselves to the following questions: (1) What is the central issue in the present conflict? (2) What has been the role in the law, and particularly of the courts, in resolving this issue? (3) What are the new factors which demand new solutions? (4) What is the role of the law in solving the present crisis? In approaching these questions, we must continually bear in mind that the law operates in a moral climate and reflects that climate.

I. THE CENTRAL ISSUE IN THE RACIAL CRISIS

As a point of departure, let me tell a story which seems relevant. I have a friend who would be described as a white Anglo-Saxon Protestant and who lives in suburbia. One day her little girl came home from school weeping uncontrollably and her mother was unable to get her to tell what happened. So the mother went to school to investigate. She learned that her daughter's playmates had refused to let her join a ropeskipping game. She was a fat little girl and not a good ropeskipper, but what really broke her heart was that the other children would not even let her hold the rope and turn it for others to skip. When she could talk about it she told her mother, "Mommy, what hurt me so was that they wouldn't even let me be a steady-ender."

The exclusion from participation as an equal with one's fellows, in work and in play in any society, makes one an outcast. It robs the individual of a feeling of personal worth and of belonging. The permanent effects of such exclusion may be apathy, self-depreciation, violence and aggression, stunted growth, lack of ambition, or sometimes refuge in the exclusion itself as an excuse for poor performance.

In the language of my friend's little daughter, for three centuries the Negro has not even been allowed to be a "steady-ender" in American life. It is against the crushing weight of these three centuries, and against a background of a world revolution in human rights that Negroes now rebel in mass upheavals. Dr. Martin Luther King has explained this mood of impatience as a father who finds it difficult to wait for promises.

"When you suddenly find * * * your speech stammering as you seek to explain to your 6-year-old daughter why she can't go to the public amusement park that has just been advertised on television, and see tears welling up in her little eyes when she is told that Funtown is closed to colored children, and see the depressing clouds of inferiority begin to form in her little mental sky, and see her begin to distort her little personality by unconsciously developing a bitterness toward white people; when you have to concoct an answer for a 5-year-old son asking in agonizing pathos: 'Daddy, why do white people treat colored people so mean?' "

The central issue in this rebellion is human dignity—the inherent rights of free men and women. This issue is not merely the American dream: it is the foundation of our society. We cannot reaffirm too often the principle upon which our Nation stands or falls:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these rights are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed—That whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness."

These rights are entrenched in the U.S. Constitution. Therefore, they are not only inherent in our beings; they are also guaranteed by our fundamental law and placed beyond the reach of transient legislative majorities. No government can rightfully take them away or permit others to impair them.

II. THE ROLE OF THE LAW AND THE COURTS

In the American legal system, as you know, the Supreme Court has the function and the authority of ultimately interpreting and applying the constitutional principles underlying guaranteed rights to myriad fact situations, and of adjudicating between various rights if they are in conflict. Having declared what the supreme law is, the Court's interpretation is binding upon all the people. Hence, we say that our society is based upon the rule of law and not upon the rule of men.

From its inception, however, our fundamental law contained an irreconcilable contradiction, in that the same basic document which affirmed basic human rights also recognized the institution of slavery—the complete denial of these rights to some men. How was this intolerable contradiction in the law to be resolved?

In 1857, Chief Justice Taney of the Supreme Court attempted to resolve it in the Dred Scott case by determining that some human beings have inherent rights and others do not. He concluded that Negroes were not intended to be included in the Declaration of Independence or in the term "people" in the opening phrase of our Constitution—"We the People of the United States"; nor were any persons of African descent, whether slave or free, intended to be citizens of the United States; "that they had for more than a century before been regarded as beings of an inferior race, and altogether unfit to associate with the white race, either in social or political relations, and so far inferior that they had no rights which the white man was bound to respect." Thus, according to Taney, the framers of the Declaration of Independence "knew that it would not in any part of the civilized world, be supposed to embrace the Negro race, which, by common consent, had been excluded from civilized governments and the family of nations, and doomed to slavery."

This attempt by the Supreme Court to resolve the issue by exclusion did much to make the conflict irrepressible. When the supreme law of the land is consistent with human dignity, controversies as to which rights are paramount can be determined peacefully within the orderly legal processes of our constitutional system. History has shown again and again, that when the fundamental law is interpreted in such a way as to be inconsistent with human dignity, conflict is inevitable.

After a bitter Civil War of 4 years, the Nation reaffirmed and made more explicit inherent human rights in the form of the 13th, 14th, and 15th amendments to the Constitution of the United States. Congress was expressly given the power to enforce these amendments by appropriate legislation. The purpose of this constitutional change was to sweep away all political and legal barriers to the exercise of equal rights with all other citizens.

Since the institution of slavery had been supported by detailed legislation in the various slaveowning States, and since these formerly rebellious States attempted to reenslave Negroes through the enactment of the black codes after the war, the thrust of the 14th amendment was against State action. That amendment provides in part:

"No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

It was clear to the framers of the Reconstruction amendments that Federal protection was necessary for the full and free exercise of citizenship rights. In the 10 years following the Civil War, it also became clear that these rights had to be protected from violation by private persons as well as by State action. These rights also had to be protected uniformly throughout the United States, if citizenship was to be meaningful. Congress passed the Civil Rights Act of 1875 which declared in part:

"That all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States be entitled to the full and equal enjoyment of the accommodations, advantages, facilities, and privileges of inns, public conveyances on land or water, theaters and other places of public amusement; subject only to the conditions and limitations established by law, and applicable to citizens of every race and color, regardless of any previous condition of servitude."

The act made it a misdemeanor for any person to violate the law by denying to any citizen the full and equal enjoyment of public accommodations, and granted a civil remedy of damages up to $500 to persons aggrieved by such denial.

What was not sufficiently clear to Congress or to the Nation at the time of Reconstruction was that the institution of slavery over a period of two centuries had had a dehumanizing affect upon blacks and whites alike in the entire region where it had become entrenched and had affected the moral climate of the Nation as a whole. A national effort of rehabilitation and restoration of the dignity of impoverished whites and newly freed Negroes in the former slaveowning States ravaged by war was essential if the Nation was to recover from this dehumanization. This was not done. The Freedmen's Bureau, created at the end of the war to give relief to the needy Negroes and whites in the conquered South, was imperfectly conceived, poorly administered and short lived, lasting only 7 years. What was sorely needed was a 19th century version of UNRRA or Marshall plan for the South. The absence of such planning set in motion forces of reaction, and we are today reaping the whirlwind of those forces.

At the judicial level, there followed perhaps the most inglorious period in our history with reference to human rights. Judges of the Supreme Court were conditioned by the same attitudes which produced the Dred Scott case; the majority of the Court found it expedient narrowly to interpret the Reconstruction amendments, permitting the Nation to drift backward instead of marching forward. Bit by bit the Court whittled down the broad protection of these amendments. First, it limited the concept of "privileges and immunities" in the 14th amendment and the rights which flow out of Federal citizenship. In light of the current issue of desegregation, two of the Court's important decisions are relevant to our discussion.

In the famous civil rights cases of 1883, the Court, by an 8-to-1 decision, declared that the Civil Rights Act of 1875, prohibiting discrimination by private persons in places of public accommodation throughout the country, was unconstitutional and void on the ground that Congress had no power to enact legislation operative upon individuals in this field under either the 13th or 14th amendments. While it conceded that the language of the 13th amendment was broad enough to reach individuals, it rejected the argument that the 13th amendment was intended to abolish not only the technical legal relationship of master and slave but also all of the incidents of slavery and the badges of inferiority the institution had imposed upon Negroes, whether slave or free. The Court also held that the 14th amendment applied only to State action and not to individual invasion of private rights. Presumably, suggested the Court, these rights could be protected by resort to the laws of the various States.

Mr. Justice John M. Harlan, a former slaveowner from Kentucky who had bitterly opposed the abolition of slavery before the war but who was dedicated to the supremacy of the Constitution, wrote an eloquent and masterful dissent on both of these points and left a beacon light to guide future lawyers upholding human rights. In light of the President's speech on Tuesday night calling for another Federal statute on public accommodations, Mr. Justice Harlan's dissent warrants rereading today. Unquestionably, the decision in the civil rights cases opened the door to widespread discrimination by private persons against Negroes, leaving the protection of the most basic aspect of human dignity—the right not to be humiliated by unequal and exclusionary treatment—to the whim of the various States. In my opinion, the civil rights cases were wrongly decided and are an important factor in the current unrest. As late as 1959, the Supreme Court refused to reexamine a case brought under the 1875 act. Around the same time several lower Federal courts also denied the applicability of this act to restaurants on interstate highways. Having no remedy in the courts, as President Kennedy aptly pointed out in his nationwide address, Negroes took the issue into the streets. It is significant that the first mass sit-in cases arose in early 1960 following the latest refusal of the Supreme Court to declare an available remedy.

In 1896, the Supreme Court decided the case of Plessy v. Ferguson and upheld the constitutionality of a Louisiana statute which provided separate railway cars for Negroes and whites in circumstances (a) where regulating intrastate commerce and (b) where such accommodations were "separate but equal." Here the Court denied the view that a segregation statute implied inferiority of Negroes. Although it conceded that the object of the 14th amendment was to establish absolute legal equality, it held the amendment was not intended to abolish distinctions based upon color. Again Mr. Justice Harlan dissented vigorously. His reasoning against the background of contemporary events has been proven to be eminently sound. His words were prophetic. He wrote:

"In my opinion, the judgment this day rendered will, in time, prove to be quite as pernicious as the decision made by this tribunal in the Dred Scott case. * * * What can more certainly arouse race hate, what more certainly create and perpetuate a feeling of distrust between these races, than State enactments which in fact proceed on the ground that colored citizens are so inferior and degraded that they cannot be allowed to sit in public coaches occupied by white citizens? * * * The sure guarantee of the peace and security of each race is the clear, distinct, unconditional recognition by our Governments, National and State, of every right that inheres in civil freedom, and of the equality before the law of all citizens of the United States without regard to race. State enactments, regulating the enjoyment of civil rights, upon the basis of race, and cunningly devised to defeat legitimate results of the war, under the pretense of recognizing equality of rights, can have no other result than to render permanent peace impossible and to keep alive a conflict of races, the continuance of which must do harm to all concerned."

The Plessy decision opened the door to massive segregation laws in the Southern States and various degrees of permissive segregation in other areas. Legislative intervention in many Northern States following this decision took the form of State civil rights statutes forbidding discrimination in public accommodations. These laws, however, varied as to places covered and as to degree of enforcement.

Distinction and exclusion on grounds of race and color became fixed in our law. As late as 1927, the Supreme Court upheld a Mississippi court ruling that it could constitutionally segregate children "of the brown, yellow, and black races" from white children in the public schools, and denied a child of Chinese ancestry the right to enroll in white schools in that State.

Rigid enforcement of segregation laws in the South, desolutory enforcement of civil rights laws in the North and West, constituted the posture of the country with reference to racial segregation as it moved toward World War II. With the exception of a 1917 decision outlawing a Louisville ordinance which, in effect, created residential segregation, the Court showed no inclination to question legally enforced segregation.

Beginning in 1938 with an attack on the exclusion of Negroes from the State universities of the South, the Court, in a case-by-case approach began the task of realining the law with our fundamental constitutional principles. In 1946, it struck down segregation on interstate carriers, incidentally, declaring void as to interstate passengers, the Virginia statute under which I was arrested and imprisoned 6 years earlier. Bit by bit it overturned the barriers erected on the legal foundation of the Plessy case, but it was not wholly clear until the school desegregation cases of 1954 that the Court was deciding foursquare on the issue of inherent and constitutionally entrenched human rights and their incompatibility with legal segregation. Here the Court met the real issue in the following words:

"Does segregation of children in public schools solely on the basis of race even though the physical facilities and other 'tangible' factors may be equal, deprive the children of the minority group of equal educational opportunities? We believe that it does. * * * To separate them from others of similar age and qualifications solely because of their race generates a feeling of inferiority as to their status in the community that may affect their hearts and minds in a way unlikely ever to be undone."

With this decision, the Supreme Court sounded the death knell of all segregation where the exercise of state power is involved. Since 1954, that Court has handed down numerous decisions reiterating and applying the basic principle of that case, ordering desegregation of State or municipal public facilities, and more recently, reversing convictions of sit-in demonstrators and their leaders under trespass, and other statutes in cases where a local segregation ordinance was present, or local officials voiced a policy of segregation. The Court put over for further argument a case in which there is no segregation law or ordinance or no declared official policy of segregation, and yet sit-in demonstrators are arrested for trespass at the request of the owner of a place open to the public. Thus, by radical surgery in a series of operations, the "separate but equal" doctrine on grounds of race has been removed from our constitutional law. What remains to be decided or legislated is an affirmative remedy for privately enforced segregation or exclusion from public facilities.

III. THE NEW FACTORS WHICH DEMAND NEW SOLUTIONS

With the Supreme Court giving this reaffirmation of basic rights and slowly correcting the earlier deviations from our fundamental law, why have we suddenly found ourselves in a national crisis? This present explosion, of course, is not sudden. Warnings by Negro leadership have been sounded for years, but most of the Nation has been too preoccupied to listen. One important factor is the difference in outlook and tempo between Negroes and the rest of the Nation with respect to the central issue. As Dr. Ralph Bunche pointed out last week, no government ever does enough when people are denied their basic rights. The Nation has been looking at how far Negroes have come in the past two decades, while Negroes, on the other hand, are looking at how far they have to go. They see the slow pace of desegreation—four-tenths of 1 percent of Negro children attending desegregated schools in the 11 States of the old Confederacy 9 years after the Supreme Court decision. They look at their limited employment opportunities, their disproportionately high rate of unemployment, the de facto school segregation in the North which is just as damaging to the personalities of their children as the legally enforced segregation condemned by the Supreme Court in 1954. They find their way out of the ghetto to decent integrated housing blocked by various devices, one of which was used in the infamous Deerfield, Ill., case where local authorities in collusion with certain local residents condemned an integrated housing project in process of being built and took over the land for public parks. They experience the daily affronts and humanliations with reference to exclusion from public facilities. The very fact that important improvements have been made in recent years has whetted the appetite for total inclusion. It is axiomatic that the closer one gets to one's goal of human dignity, the more intolerable become the remaining indignities.

A second factor is the rise of a generation of Negroes born during or since World War II into a climate of opinion in which the Universal Declaration of Human Rights represents the common aspirations of peoples everywhere and into a world of revolutionary upsurge of colonial peoples against foreign rule with its implications of racial superiority. This generation has grown up in an atmosphere of incredible speed of events. Gradualism and patience form no part of its heritage, as those of you with children readily appreciate.

A third factor is that by accepting gradualism as the timetable for the solution of this problem, we have permitted the gains of a bloodless social revolution to be threatened by a violent counterrevolution. My good friend, Dr. Caroline F. Ware, social historian and a Ph. D. from Radcliffe, constantly reminds me that social revolutions are not violent; that violence comes into play after social change has occurred or is plainly in sight, and counterrevolutionary efforts are then made to turn the clock back.

What is new about the present revolt is the realization by many Negroes that there is an effective answer to violence and an effective alternative to sullen endurance. There is a new consciousness of strength pervading the whole of the Negro community, a total involvement including children and a mass reaction to the problem.

Dr. Martin Luther King and other leaders of his type have been able to harness seething revolt to organized, disciplined, nonviolent direct action. The legal implications of this action are that it is within the protection of freedom of expression guaranteed by the first amendment. The moral implications are, in my opinion, far more significant.

There is a growing national consensus that racial discrimination is essentially a moral problem. If so, it must be attacked at the moral as well as legal level. Nonviolent direct action is based upon the conviction that in social conflict, the power of the spirit is stronger and more enduring than the power of force in a physical contest. By discipline of the spirit, the nonviolent demonstrator determines that violence, if at all, will be on only one side of the controversy. Thus, the demonstrator exercises a certain amount of control over the conflict situation because he eliminates or reduces the immediate provocation to retaliate and transfers the struggle to the conscience of the opponent. He believes that the opponent's hatred, if given only itself to feed upon, must eventually run its course and that, in these circumstances, reconciliation is more possible after the conflict has been resolved. The Negroes have seen this method work with Ghandi in India and have adapted it to peculiarly American situations. Where this method has consciously been used in the demonstrations, despite indignities on the part of the police, violence has been minimized.

As Dr. King wrote in his book, "Stride Toward Freedom":

"We will match your capacity to inflict suffering with our capacity to endure suffering. We will meet your physical force with soul force. We will not hate you, but we cannot in all good conscience obey your unjust laws. Do to us what you will and we will still love you. Bomb our homes and threaten our children; send your hooded perpetrators of violence into our communities and drag us out on some wayside road, beating us and leaving us half dead, and we will still love you. But we will soon wear you down by our capacity to suffer. And in winning our freedom we will so appeal to your heart and conscience that we will win you in the process."

The wider significance of these nonviolent demonstrations by Negroes and their white supporters is that they have brought together two revolutionary ideas: the equality of the rights of man and the assertion of those rights through a spiritually and morally powerful nonviolent technique. They are outpacing the application of the law and making a creative contribution to rapid social change with a minimum of violence. Historians may well record this as one of the important social developments of the 20th century. Nonviolence has filled the vacuum between the declaration and the implementation of the fundemental law.

IV. THE ROLE OF THE LAW IN THE PRESENT CRISIS

At the beginning of our discussion, I said that we are a society built uopn the rule of law and not rule by the passions of men. What, then, is the role of the law in resolving the current conflict?

It cannot be too strongly emphasized here that the history of race relations in the United States has proven conclusively that the right to be free from discrimination because of race or color—and I might add sex—is so crucial to human dignity and the exercise of the rights of citizenship, that we have been tragically wrong to leave the protection of this right in so large degree to local regulation. Local laws and policies can supplement but not substitute for a clearly formulated and enforceable National policy binding upon all persons.

The public humiliations which do such violence to human dignity are dramatized by laws, customs, and attitudes of exclusion in places of public accommodation, and amusement. Congress rightly saw in 1875 that this issue was so important it must be resolved in a manner which operated uniformly throughout the United States. It recognized that there could be no piecemeal or fractional coverage in a matter which involves such explosive human emotions. And so it granted total coverage.

Negroes have lived too long with uncertainty to make the recognition of their rights dependent upon any other individual's degree of color-blindness, or whether he operates in interstate or local commerce. The quest for certainty is at the bottom of the present revolt. As Martin Luther King, replying from an Alabama prison to the statement of local white religious leaders that the Birmingham demonstrations were "unwise and untimely," put it:

"I guess it is easy for those who have never felt the sting of darts of segregation to say 'wait.' But when you take a cross country drive and find it necessary to sleep night after night in the uncomfortable corners of your automobile because no motel will accept you; when you are harried by day and haunted by night by the fact that you are a Negro, living constantly at tip-toe stance never quite knowing what to expect next, and plagued with inner fears and outer resentments; when you are forever fighting a degenerating sense of 'nobodiness'—then you will understand why we find it difficult to wait."

CIVIL RIGHTS PROGRESS IN AMERICA: A FURTHER INSTALLMENT

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, last week I announced that periodically I would call to the attention of the Senate the encouraging news of civil rights progress in the United States.

It is just as important to report the hopeful and optimistic news as it is to acknowledge the hard facts of civil discord and discrimination that still exist in all sections of the Nation. Much remains to be accomplished—to be sure—but we should not overly minimize the definite progress that has been achieved.

One of the clearest, firmest, and most impelling voices calling for such continued progress belongs to the Vice President of the United States, the Honorable LYNDON B. JOHNSON. At Gettysburg and again at the Governors' conference, the Vice President raised the moral imperative of prompt action by private persons and at all levels of government to guarantee equality and justice for all Americans.

The Washington Post recently published an editorial praising the Vice President for his courageous leadership in the cause of civil rights. This editorial commendation is thoroughly merited and I ask unanimous consent that the editorial from the July 27 edition of the Washington Post be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Also, the mayor of Atlanta, Ga., the Honorable Ivan Allen, Jr., delivered a most moving and courageous statement in behalf of racial justice in his testimony before the Commerce Committee.

Obviously the mayor of Atlanta comes before the Congress with excellent credentials to speak in behalf of the President's civil rights legislation. Atlanta has achieved a measure of desegregation of public accommodations, facilities, and schools that serves as evidence of what is possible when men of good will sit down together and seek mutually beneficial arrangements to banish segregation and discrimination from a community.

The mayor of Atlanta has told the Congress to finish the job started a century ago with the Emancipation Proclamation. I devoutly hope that Congress will heed the advice of this outstanding public servant and statesman.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an editorial praising Mayor Allen printed in yesterday's New York Times be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, July 27, 1963]

A POWERFUL ADVOCATE

Vice President LYNDON JOHNSON has been speaking out on civil rights issues with increasing frequency, force, and clarity. He is doing a great deal to shape public opinion and alter public outlook. Frequently he gets to the gist of the matter with a directness and vigor that pierces the fog of legal dispute into which we so frequently become mired. In his address at the Governors' Conference in Miami he made his point with a paragraph notable for its moral tone and simple eloquence:

"Whatever the legalisms or traditions, it is wrong that the tax-paying, arms-bearing, vote-casting Americans should be unable to find a bed for the night or meals for their children along the highways of our free and decent society. Whatever the reasons, it is wrong that Americans who fight alongside other Americans in war should not be able to work alongside the same Americans, wash up alongside them, eat alongside them, win promotions alongside them, or send their children to sit in schools alongside the children of other Americans."

The Presidency always has been known as a great platform from which to appeal to the mind and heart of America. The Vice Presidency is being made into a great platform by Vice President LYNDON JOHNSON.

[From the New York Times, July 28, 1963]

ATLANTA'S MAYOR SPEAKS

On rare occasions the oratorical fog on Capitol Hill is pierced by a voice resonant with courage and dignity. Such a voice was heard when Mayor Ivan Allen, Jr., of Atlanta, testified before the Senate Commerce Committee in support of President Kennedy's bill to prohibit racial discrimination in stores, restaurants, and other public accommodations.

On the basis of the very substantial accomplishments that his city of a half million, the largest in the Southeast, has made in desegregating publicly owned and privately owned facilities, he might have come as a champion of States rights and of the ability of localities to banish discrimination without Federal law. Certainly, he would have had much more warrant to espouse that view than the Barnetts, the Wallaces, and the other archsegregationists who raise the specter of Federal "usurpation" as a device for keeping southern Negroes in subjection.

But Mr. Allen was not in Washington to boast. He was there to warn that even in cities like Atlanta the progress that had been made might be wiped out if Congress turned its back on the Kennedy proposal and thus gave implied endorsement to the concept that private businesses were free to discriminate. He left behind this charge to finish the job started with the Emancipation Proclamation a century ago: "Now the elimination of segregation, which is slavery's stepchild, is a challenge to all of us to make every American free in fact as well as in theory—and again to establish our Nation as the true champion of the free world."

THE CRISIS IN COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, in this mail over the weekend I have received from Mr. Maurice R. Franks, president of the National Labor-Management Foundation and editor of Partners magazine a copy of the editorial which Mr. Franks is going to have in the next issue of the magazine.

Because this editorial is so timely in view of impending congressional consideration of legislation effecting the crisis in the railroad industry, I called Mr. Franks, requesting permission to have this editorial inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD prior to its publication in the forthcoming edition of Partners magazine. Mr. Franks granted his consent and I ask unanimous consent to have the editorial printed at this point in the RECORD for all my colleagues' information.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE CRISIS IN COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AND THE NEED FOR STATUTORY DEFINITION OF ITS FUNCTIONAL DOMAIN

(By Maurice R. Franks)

The 4-year-old railroad work rules dispute which today has culminated in the threat of a disastrous nationwide rail strike next Tuesday, points to the need for clarification by act of Congress just what constitutes the legitimate domain of collective bargaining and what in all common sense and economic justice lies outside its proper bounds.

Although collective bargaining is one of the proudest institutions of a free society like ours, the obviously required surveys have yet to be made and lines defining and delimiting the legitimate province have yet to be established. Instead, an unruly expansion by means of creeping encroachment has

Pub. Accomm. Md.

U. S. News & World Report 8/5/63

WHY RACE TROUBLES HIT ONE CITY, SPARE ANOTHER—A CASE STUDY

Cambridge, Md., erupted in a violent clash of the races. Nearby Salisbury remained quiet.

The two cities were much alike. Why one was struck, and not the other, is a local puzzle.

In late July, whites and Negroes reached a shaky truce, and Cambridge calmed down. But both cities were still uneasy, wondering where the demonstrators would hit next.

Reported from CAMBRIDGE and SALISBURY, Md.

Race trouble this summer has reached a new peak of violence in the small city of Cambridge on the Eastern Shore of Maryland.

After a truce between Negroes and whites, reached on July 23, Cambridge entered a "cooling off" period. The truce was precarious, with patrolling by National Guard troops, and brought about only under the strongest pressure from the White House.

Before the truce was arranged, the Governor of Maryland had found himself powerless to get a solution to the trouble. So had a committee of citizens. Negro leaders in Cambridge had refused to negotiate even with White House agents.

At one point, a Negro leader in Cambridge warned President Kennedy that he might have to make a personal appearance there to avert a "civil war."

The story in Salisbury, 32 miles east of Cambridge, is different. The Cambridge troubles had started more than a year earlier with the arrival of "Freedom Riders" from outside the community. Salisbury and most other communities of the Maryland Eastern Shore had escaped with no more than passing trouble in that earlier experience.

But did something more deep-seated account for the difference? That question was put to John W. T. Webb, chairman of Salisbury's biracial committee and a local lawyer. This committee was first set up in 1960.

Mr. Webb put it this way:

"We were very lucky in Salisbury. They have been very unlucky in Cambridge. But our battle is not yet won. It is still possible that a squad of hotheads could come into Salisbury and blow us sky-high in 24 hours.

"There has been traditionally," Mr. Webb continued, "a way of getting along between whites and Negroes in the South which involves mutual respect and tolerance between the whites and the Negroes, each for the other. Over the years, it has become instinctive. This is the reason why the South, properly led, has a much better chance of coming out of this developing revolution in less time and with fewer scars than does the North.

"The way we are doing it here—if we can hold this thing together—we will emerge with a change in the social order, and we'll do it without the scars that for years will remain in the places where race problems have gotten out of hand."

Early stirrings. Explaining his view that Salisbury had been lucky and Cambridge unlucky, Mr. Webb gave the following background:

In late 1961 and early 1962, "Freedom Riders" staged a number of "sit-in" demonstrations at restaurants in various Eastern Shore communities. At that time, Salisbury had all of its major restaurants and theaters desegregated. Plans for opening up the schools and more job opportunities for Negroes were in the discussion stage.

A group of the "Riders" stopped in one of Salisbury's desegregated cafés early TROOPS still patrol Cambridge, although there is a truce. Pictured is a check point in Negro section of city. Nearby Salisbury has avoided serious racial trouble—so far.

- 7/23/63

"WE WERE VERY LUCKY," says John W. T. Webb, a Salisbury civic leader. He is chairman of city's biracial committee.

in 1962. The Salisbury "Times" reported that some of them ordered food, but most just wandered about the café asking for water and disturbing others. The proprietor told them to leave.

Immediately after this incident, the Salisbury biracial committee got in touch with leaders of the outside Negro organizations. They asked for and received a pledge that there would be no more incidents in Salisbury unless community leaders first were given an opportunity to work out any complaints.

Said Mr. Webb: "It was primarily Negro members of our committee who were able to convince the leadership of the outside Negro organizations that we fully intended to integrate this community as rapidly as we could do so."

Cambridge at the same time had been trying to set up a biracial committee, but was having temporary trouble. Even so, there had been considerable desegregation of restaurants. In fact, three of the four restaurants along the highway just outside of town were desegregated.

The "Freedom Riders" kept returning to the segregated restaurant, and some riots ensued. With each succeeding incident, the lines between whites and Negroes hardened, communication broke down and the stage was set for the deep trouble of 1963.

Actually, the pace of integration in Cambridge has been comparable in many respects to that in other Eastern Shore communities.

For example, Cambridge had begun to open all schools to Negroes on a grade-by-grade schedule in the autumn of 1956, starting with the twelfth grade. This coming autumn, the schools would have been open to Negroes from the fifth through the twelfth grades. The truce agreement signed on July 23, however, provides that all grades will be opened to Negroes this autumn.

Only five Cambridge Negroes had applied to attend white schools during the years when grade after grade was being opened. All five were accepted, but after attending for a few days dropped out and returned to the Negro schools. James G. Busick, school superintendent, said neither the Negro students nor their parents had complained about their treatment in the white schools.

Salisbury's pace. In Salisbury, five of the seven elementary schools were integrated in the autumn of 1962. Of the 120 Negro pupils who would have been affected, 40 elected to stay in all-Negro schools and another 40 moved, leaving about 40 in integrated schools.

Of the two elementary schools not integrated, one is all-white and one is all-Negro. There will be integration in the all-white school this autumn.

Also to be integrated in the autumn are two white junior high schools that will have a total of 24 Negroes entering. Integration of high schools, according to Salisbury school officials, will take place when physical facilities have been worked out.

Three of the churches in Salisbury have been integrated for some time—the Roman Catholic, the Episcopal and the Lutheran. All major denominations more than a year ago agreed to accept Negroes' applications for membership.

Mr. Webb says his Episcopal church has half a dozen or so Negro members in a congregation of about 1,000. He detects no rush of Negroes to join white churches.

"A serious spill-over." Mr. Webb feels that Salisbury's progress is threatened by what has happened in other communities where Negroes have staged demonstrations.

"We are getting a serious spill-over from these highly publicized outbreaks of violence," said Mr. Webb. "It is affecting both the white and the Negro community here. You can sense a tremendous reaction among whites to the position the Negroes have taken in these

(continued on next page)

—USN&WR Photos

CHEERS for Mrs. Gloria Richardson, Cambridge Negro leader, shown being introduced at a mass meeting. At right, Negroes attending rally clap and sing.

[continued from preceding page]

RACE TROUBLES—A CASE STUDY

other places. It is making it more difficult for us to get whites here to accept the way we are doing things.

"By the same token, the young Negro in a poor job asks why he shouldn't wave a banner and march down the street."

Mr. Webb feels that politicians are making a serious mistake in trying to make capital out of the race issue. He said:

"Civil rights are too dangerous for the politician to deal with. He lives by vote-getting. When these pressure groups that represent votes go to work on him, he reacts.

"The decisions in this area have to be made without regard to personal popularity, but rather with regard to what is right and what has to be done.

"The White House, in my judgment, did not start until last month to do what should have been done at least a year ago. All the danger signals were there. We read them in Salisbury three years ago.

"The White House, and other political leaders, too, have been too reluctant to use personal prestige to enlist the genuine leadership needed in this crisis."

Committee make-up. Salisbury has put its racial problems in the hands of people who, for the most part, are little involved in politics. The biracial committee, formed in 1960, was named on that basis. Originally it was made up of 12 whites and five Negroes. In January, 1963, it was made permanent with a membership of 14 whites and six Negroes. Each member serves a four-year term, and the terms are staggered.

Negro leaders who were representative of the Negro community and who would speak out were sought for membership on the committee.

"The mistake so many communities make is in letting only conservative Negroes speak for their people," said Mr. Webb. "The conservative Negro may say only what he thinks the white man wants to hear. So the white community is often misled."

There is deep resentment, not only in Cambridge but in Salisbury as well, against much of the press coverage of race problems on Maryland's Eastern Shore.

Comparisons drawn between the two communities, said Mr. Webb, have generally been "unfair to Cambridge and unfair to Salisbury." He added:

"We have our share of hotheads and Cambridge has its share of responsible leaders. Events got away from them in Cambridge, and once that happened, nothing could head off the trouble. It could have happened to us. It can still happen to us. If the press keeps picturing Salisbury as a model in civil rights, which it isn't, we could wake up and find ourselves a prime target."

Mr. Webb objects strongly to press statements that no more than an urge to save its businesses lay behind Salisbury's efforts. Said he: "We are hardheaded, but it goes beyond that. If this had not been a genuine community effort, based on trust and confidence between white and Negro, the whole thing would have fallen to pieces long ago."

Negro leader's view. Mr. Webb's points were affirmed by the Rev. C. Henry Mack, a Negro member of Salisbury's biracial committee and minister of the St. James A.M.E. Zion Church. Commented Mr. Mack:

"Salisbury Negroes will assure you that this is no civil-rights utopia. I'm not satisfied with it. Our progress could be faster. If the community continues to work toward complete equality for Negroes, I won't try to disrupt things. But if progress should stop, I, for one, would welcome demonstrations by the national Negro organizations."

Behind Cambridge bitterness—. In Cambridge, leaders of the white business community readily admit that the press could not overlook the race riots there.

"What we bitterly resent is that Cambridge has been pictured to the world as a dying and stagnant community living in the past," said Herman Stevens, head of the industrial-development commission of the Chamber of Commerce. "We've worked like dogs since 1958 to bring industry into this community, and I think the record shows we have accomplished a great deal."

What the record shows in Cambridge's industrial development is this: a new industrial park adding industries at a rapid clip; ten new industries with a total of 750 jobs added since 1958; unemployment down from 14.4 per cent in 1958 to 9 per cent now; a million-dollar development under way on the Choptank River, to give Maryland its only port for ocean-going vessels in addition to Baltimore.

A tour through one of the new plants revealed a number of Negro employes, some of them in supervisory positions.

Asked how many Negroes his plant employed, the manager replied: "I don't know and I've told my personnel manager I would fire him if he knew. It's all wrong to strive for a certain percentage. We test aptitude and hire on that basis. I believe this, and I want my children to believe it: You take a person for what he is regardless of color."

This plant manager, who came to Cambridge from the Midwest, is critical of the community in one respect. "They have opened up job opportunity," he said. "Now they have to open up the property right. Today, there's just no place for the Negro to go in that direction."

A vote hurdle? A major obstacle remains in Cambridge to the truce signed on July 23. It is the final outcome of a city-charter amendment passed by the city council to desegregate all public accommodations, such as restaurants and lodging places.

The amendment goes into effect on August 20, unless petitions now circulating bring it to a referendum vote. Leaders of the white community who signed the truce are pledged to try to keep the amendment from coming to a vote. If they are unable to do so, trouble may again explode.

—USN&WR Photo

INTEGRATED PRINTING PLANT in Cambridge, one of several new industries that have come to the city in recent years. Negroes and whites share supervisory jobs.

STATEMENT IN SUPPORT OF S. 1732—PUBLIC ACCOMMODATIONS PROPOSAL

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the Commerce Committee has recently concluded a thorough and comprehensive schedule of hearings relating to President Kennedy's proposal to guarantee equal access to public accommodations to all Americans regardless of race, color or religion. The distinguished chairman of this committee [Mr. MAGNUSON] and the distinguished acting chairman [Mr. PASTORE] has given both proponents and opponents of this legislation full opportunity to develop their respective cases before the members of this committee. The entire membership is to be complimented for the constructive nature of these hearings.

I have submitted a written statement supporting prompt approval of S. 1732. I ask unanimous consent that this statement be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HUMPHREY

Mr. Chairman, I would like to compliment you and your committee for the diligent, fair, and comprehensive examination of S. 1732. All sides have been given full and fair opportunity to voice their opinions to the Congress. All positions have been set forth for your careful consideration.

The significance of your work and the importance of this portion of the civil rights bill cannot be overestimated. The eyes of the country and of the world have been centered on this committee during the weeks of these hearings. The bill that you report to the Senate will reflect, I am sure, the dedication of your labor.

A great deal of time has been expended in attempting to determine the efficacy and constitutionality of basing the public accommodations section of the administration's civil rights bill on the commerce clause (art. I, sec. 8) rather than on the 14th amendment to the Constitution.

As far as the efficacy of this particular bill is concerned, some of those who have testified before this committee have contended that prejudice and intolerance cannot be legislated against and that it makes little difference, therefore, whether this bill passes or not. They say that it will not be easy to erase the memories of centuries of custom and that attempting to impose a solution from outside will merely exacerbate the situation. I agree that there is no easy or entirely pleasant way in which to change the mores and customs of a nation. This difficulty should not deter us.

It was not easy to colonize this country; nor to establish our Constitution; nor to defend the freedom of our seamen; nor to abolish slavery; nor to make the world safe for democracy; nor to oppose Nazi racism and tyranny; nor to conduct a cold war. We have done those things, though, either through necessity or because we thought they were right.

There are those that contend that those battles entitle us to self-righteousness and repose. They contend that we have achieved perfect democracy and need fight no more difficult contests. Some want to know why we cannot leave this problem of inequality alone and stop filling the Negroes with dangerous ideas. It is my contention that God filled man with the desire to be free and that there is very little that we here in Congress can do to counteract it. Freedom and equality are the birthright of every American. We cannot give or withhold it from anyone, or any class, or any race. These ideas of equality and opportunity are heavy brews. The Founding Fathers drank deep and we can still intoxicate the world with their dreams. Abraham Lincoln let American Negroes taste of the cup 100 years ago; now it must go fully round.

There will be opposition to legislation requiring the sharing of this right of equal access. Basing this bill on the commerce clause will not make it more popular than any other means. I am convinced, though, that it will be effective and that such a decision can be logically grounded on precedent and experience. I wish that no action were necessary on this subject; I would prefer that every State would equitably solve its own racial problems; recent events make it painfully clear that that is not the case.

However, since there has been considerable debate among those sincerely interested in seeing a meaningful bill over whether we should rely on the commerce clause or the 14th amendment, I support the suggestion that the bill be based on both. There is ample precedent for this; the Tennessee Valley Authority, for example, was based on three constitutional powers. I believe that the Supreme Court would uphold the constitutionality of this public accommodations provision if we relied upon both the interstate commerce clause and the 14th amendment. My reasons for so thinking are based on Supreme Court decisions concerning the 14th amendment, the commerce clause, and our common law heritage.

I believe that many of those who contend that this bill is revolutionary would find, through reference to history, that this is not the case. The principle of free public access to business establishments is rooted deep in the Anglo-Saxon law. Throughout the 13th century, and for hundreds of years thereafter, the duty to serve all who come to public establishments was covered by criminal statute. Reference to legal precedent will reveal that even in the South it was common practice to serve all who might come. Unfortunately, after the civil rights cases of 1883, many laws were passed which denied this right to some. This was a departure from accepted practice and custom.

Interestingly enough, in those decisions of 1883 the Supreme Court specifically referred to those powers obtaining to Congress under the commerce clause:

"Of course, these remarks do not apply to those cases in which Congress is clothed with direct and plenary powers of legislation over the whole subject, accompanied with an express or implied denial of such power to the States, as in the regulation of commerce * * * among the several States * * *. In these cases Congress has power to pass laws for regulating the subjects specified in every detail, and the conduct and transactions of individuals in respect thereof."

More recently, the Court's findings in the case of Wickard v. Filburn, in which the farmer's action, though indirect and trivial, was held to be illegal, and NLRB v. Reliance Oil, where it was decided that the restrictions of the commerce clause applied even though the oil in which Reliance was dealing had come to rest within the State prior to its purchase by them, indicate clearly the opinion of the Court on the "reach of Congress" in relation to the regulation of interstate commerce.

The fact that the Supreme Court, in 1883, held some civil rights laws based on the 14th amendment unconstitutional should not deter us, in 1963, from also basing this legislation on that amendment. Recent decisions, like the restrictive covenant cases, Shelly v. Kraemer, and the Delaware restaurant case, Burton v. Wilmington Parking Authority, indicate that the present Supreme Court views the 14th amendment from a perspective considerably removed from the one which existed in 1883. These decisions, as well as the other epochmaking actions of the Court in the field of civil rights, lead me to conclude that the 1883 civil rights decisions may well be overruled in the same manner as Plessy v. Ferguson was overruled in 1954.

There is nothing unique or potentially threatening to our liberties in the letter or intent of this bill. It only requires that those who have practiced discrimination against customers, purely as a matter of racial prejudice, will be required to extend the right of access and service to all. To the vast majority of Americans there is no question about the reasonableness or rectitude of this requirement. As an example of national opinion on this issue, it should be noted that 31 States have already, voluntarily, enacted public accommodations laws. And despite the fact that some of these laws have been far more stringent than the measure we are here considering, there has been no evidence of the economic and constitutional disasters conjured up by opponents of this bill. In some of the 19 States not having equal accommodations statues, the business community is restrained by State law from opening its doors to all customers. Such laws, I should add, are clearly proscribed by the 14th amendment. I am sure that many businessmen in those States would welcome the opportunity to serve this large market which is presently barred to them, especially if they could cite law and uniform practice as their reasons for so doing.

Finally, in reply to the assertions and implications I find hardest to understand and countenance, I would like to comment on the remarks which have attempted to link this honest effort to give constitutional rights to Communist influence.

My contention has always been, and remains, that the most effective way which we can combat communism is to demonstrate positively the superiority of our free enterprise system. Segregation is obviously an impediment to us in this contest. The Communists are desirous of fomenting discord on this subject only so long as we do nothing about the situation. As we act to eliminate areas of discrimination and thus strengthen our democracy, we also progressively reduce the number of situations available to Communist propagandists in their campaigns of ridicule. Therefore, even if the weight of moral and philosophical rectitude were not on the side of this measure, I would still say that it is mere sophistry to contend that the exposure of this problem aids the Communists. The solution of the civil rights crisis will be a historic setback to the Communists throughout the world.

The very essence of this bill is anticommunistic and anticollectivistic. Its raison d'etre is the stimulation of private enterprise and the freer distribution of the products of a free society, produced by free businesses.

NATIONAL SERVICE CORPS ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1321) to provide for a National Service Corps to strengthen community service programs in the United States.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 23, line 16, beginning with the word "and" it is proposed to strike out all through the word "Act", in line 18 and insert in lieu thereof the following "and for the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1964, not to exceed $10,000,000."

TRANSMITTAL FORM - U.S. DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

FORM CD-82
(8-2-60)

LWD

DATE 8/14/63

Return to Research

TO: Mrs. Barbara Patterson

FROM: Andrew F. Brimmer
Deputy Assistant Secretary
FOR: for Economic Policy Review

Attached is a copy of the testimony by Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., on the Public Accommodations Bill before the Senate Commerce Committee. You may find it of interest.

Attachment

DO NOT USE FOR PERMANENT RECORD INFORMATION

USCOMM-DC

Pub. Accom.-Gen. - '63
(contains excellent table on amounts spent, by race, on travel)

STATEMENT OF ACTING SECRETARY OF COMMERCE FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT, JR.
ON S. 1732
BEFORE THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE
JULY 23, 1963

PRICE p. 18 and p. 13

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate this opportunity to appear before your Committee in support of S. 1732, the Public Accommodations Bill.

The main theme of my statement is the adverse effect of racial discrimination in public accommodations on interstate commerce, and the evidence we present leaves no doubt in our minds on this point. But let me say at the outset that we in the Department of Commerce support this legislation primarily because we believe that discriminatory practices are inconsistent with our democratic ideals and cannot continue to be tolerated in a democratic society. We believe, as the President has said, that we have a moral obligation--and not simply a strong business motive--to pursue this end.

In my personal view I think all of us must appreciate the changing mood of the American Negro community. We must recognize that their impatience and unrest spring from real and long-standing grievances. The denial of their rights to use public accommodations is only one of many accounts which require settlement. The corrosive experience of Negroes with discrimination over many years--in voting, employment, education, housing as well as public accommodations--has placed a cumulative burden on the typical Negro citizen far greater than that placed on interstate commerce. I think we have the moral responsibility to ease that burden immediately. I am certain that all of us in the Federal government from the President on down clearly see the necessity for pressing ahead with this task as rapidly as possible.

With particular respect to the legislation at hand, we believe it is fundamental that all citizens should have equal access to places of public accommodation, including hotels, motels, restaurants, theaters, retail stores, amusement and recreational facilities and other businesses offering to the general public goods and services which are a vital part of interstate commerce. Stated so simply, this sounds like a platitude. For the vast majority of people it is nothing more than that. But for virtually every Negro citizen--and for many other citizens, including Puerto Ricans, Chinese, Japanese, Indians, and persons of Mexican descent --the absence of this right is one of the most galling facts of life in the U.S. today. The simple fact is that for them equal access to public accommodation does not exist as a general and ordinary matter anywhere in the country. Even in the North, Midwest and Far West (where the denial of equal treatment is less obvious than in the South), all public accommodations are by no means fully available. But the really critical obstacles are in the South. Despite the numerous instances of desegregation reported in the last few months, the general rule in these states is one of discrimination and the virtually total exclusion of Negroes from a wide range of places of public accommodation. Moreover, while we applaud the apparent progress made by business and civic leaders in a number of forward-looking communities in the South, such as Atlanta,

Dallas, Miami, and Richmond, we believe the overall efforts so far are insufficient in relation to the tremendous magnitude and urgency of the task before us. No one is unaware of the fact that the question has become of explosive national concern in recent months and is crying for an answer.

We believe this legislation is indispensable in the solution of this problem.

We believe that it is required because the record clearly shows that state and local actions are insufficient to carry the burden of desegregation at a pace adequate to cope with the present rapidly moving situation.

We believe that it is required because voluntary action by businessmen (where businessmen have undertaken to desegregate their establishments) has proved too difficult and too sporadic to eliminate discrimination in the near future.

We believe that it does not constitute an unwarranted interference with property rights. Rather we accept without reservation the President's position that the duties of property holders using their property to earn a profit through serving the general public require that they respect human rights and refrain from arbitrary racial discrimination.

In short, it is my belief that S. 1732, the proposed public accommodations legislation which this Committee is now considering, is an essential element of our response to the demands of the situation.

So, the narrow question before this Committee in considering S. 1732 is whether it is right and proper to base this legislation on the constitutional authority of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, as well as on the Fourteenth Amendment.

I am not going to go into the legality of this use of the commerce power at any length. The Attorney General has testified fully on it, and he either has submitted to the Committee, or is about to submit, his definitive legal opinion on the subject.

I am convinced that this use of the commerce power is completely constitutional. We use the commerce power to prohibit interstate transportation of women for immoral purposes--and I might point out that is an instance of using the commerce power on a purely moral issue, if there ever was one. We use the commerce power to prohibit sales of narcotics. We use the commerce power to control minimum wages and to prohibit the use of child labor. We use it, as the Attorney General has pointed out, to control the service of oleomargarine in public facilities and to require the labeling of aspirin. We have even used it to control the amount of wheat a farmer may grow for his own consumption. If we can constitutionally use the Commerce clause for all these purposes, then I do not have any doubt that we can also use it to prescribe the rights of Negroes to have free access to public accommodations. This, as I think my statement will show, may affect the free flow of interstate commerce far more than some of the matters I have mentioned above.

The question is not whether we can lawfully invoke the commerce power; the question is whether we should. I believe we should. I think it is appropriate because I think the free flow of interstate commerce is importantly involved in the segregation issue. In an economy of increasing mobility and interdependence, businesses which offer public accommodations--such as hotels, motels, restaurants, retail stores, theaters, gasoline stations and similar enterprises--are increasingly and substantially catering to interstate travelers as well as to local citizens. Clearly therefore racial discrimination practiced by these firms affects interstate commerce. It imposes an unwarranted burden on interstate commerce in two ways.

In the first place, segregation imposes unnatural limitations in the conduct of business which are injurious to the free flow of commerce. It inhibits businessmen in making rational investment decisions; it compels wasteful and uneconomic duplication of resources; it may even spell the failure of numerous marginal businesses, because segregation limits their opportunity to draw fully upon their natural markets. This legislation will help to remove this burden.

In the second place, the current instability and unrest swirling about various places of public accommodation from time to time is directly injurious to interstate commerce. We live in a time of racial unrest, gentlemen, and this unrest is not going to dissipate without assistance. Voluntary efforts have been helpful, but they are not doing the job. I am satisfied that broadly applicable legislation such as this will solve the problem more neatly, cleanly, and quickly than half measures, unevenly undertaken. For that reason, I think that by and large our businessmen, North and South, will welcome it.

Let me indicate for you briefly the facts as to the significance of segregation for interstate commerce.

Evidence of Burdens on Interstate Commerce

When our staff began to examine the question of the adverse effects on interstate commerce of discrimination in public accommodations, it quickly became evident that detrimental effects not only exist but are in fact considerable. These include (1) obstacles to interstate travel; (2) distortions in the pattern of expenditures by Negroes because of limited access to places of public accommodations; (3) limitations on the ability of organizations to hold national and regional conventions in convenient places; (4) adverse effects in the entertainment field; (5) disruptions in trade resulting from demonstrations protesting discrimination in retail establishments, and (6) numerous other hurdles to the normal conduct of business (for example, difficulties in recruiting professional and skilled personnel and rejection of otherwise desirable plant locations).

We are prepared to supply evidence, obtained through informal inquiries by Commerce Department Field Offices and otherwise, to support each of these positions.

Burden of Discrimination in Public Accommodations on Interstate Travel

First, let us look at the damage done to interstate travel. There is a tremendous volume of such travel, running into billions of passenger miles annually. The Bureau of Public Roads in the

Table I

PERCENTAGE OF ALL PASSENGER CAR TRAVEL

BY OUT-OF-STATE PASSENGER CARS

BY HIGHWAY SYSTEM, 1957

HIGHWAY SYSTEM	RURAL	URBAN	TOTAL
Interstate	25.8	10.8	19.9
Other Federal-aid Primary	17.9	9.2	15.3
Federal-aid Secondary	6.9	5.8	6.7
All Federal-aid Systems	16.0	9.1	14.0
Other than Federal-aid (including toll roads)	8.1	4.6	5.7
All roads and Streets	14.2	6.3	10.7

From Highway Cost Allocation Study Data for 1957
Bureau of Public Roads 38-26

Department of Commerce estimates that in 1957 about one-seventh of all the passenger car traffic on the Federal-aid highway system consisted of out-of-state cars. These figures are shown in Table I.

To provide a rough measure of the amount of interstate highway travel along routes in the South, where the public accommodations problem is most acute, the Bureau was asked to estimate out-of-state traffic along certain selected routes: (1) Washington, D.C. to Florida; (2) Chicago to New Orleans, and (3) Washington, D.C. to New Orleans. Information collected during the summer months of 1962 shows the following:

Washington, D.C. to Florida

At a location in Virginia on U.S. 301, 80 per cent of the passenger cars had out of state registrations.

In North Carolina on U.S. 1 approximately 25 miles north of Raleigh, 43 per cent of all passenger cars were from other states.

(The preceding two locations are on the traveled route of the interstate system.)

In South Carolina on U.S. 17 and 321, about 10 miles north of the Georgia line near Savannah on the traveled route of interstate 95, 83 per cent of all passenger cars were registered in states other than South Carolina.

In Georgia on U.S. 1 and 301, 4 miles north of the Florida line and 50 miles north of Jacksonville, 36 per cent of all passenger cars were from other states.

In Florida on U.S. 1, the traveled route of interstate 95, 20 miles south of Daytona Beach, 49 per cent were out-of-state passenger cars.

Chicago to New Orleans

In Illinois on U.S. 51, the traveled route of interstate 57, 4 miles north of Cairo, 30 per cent of the passenger cars were from states other than Illinois.

In Kentucky on U.S. 51 about 2 miles north of the Tennessee line, 60 per cent were from other states.

In Tennessee on U.S. 51, 30 per cent were from other states.

In Mississippi on U.S. 51, the traveled route of interstate 55 about 5 miles north of the Louisiana state line, 52 per cent of the passenger cars were from other states.

In Louisiana on U.S. 51, the traveled route of interstate 55, 20 miles south of the Mississippi state line, 26 per cent of the passenger cars were from states other than Louisiana.

Washington, D.C. to New Orleans

In Virginia on U.S. 460, 4 miles northeast of Roanoke, 18 per cent of the passenger cars were from states other than Virginia.

In Tennessee on U.S. 11, interstate 81, 49 per cent were from other states.

In Alabama 1 mile east of the Mississippi state line, 71 per cent were from other states.

In Mississippi on U.S. 11, interstate 59, approximately 50 miles southwest of Meridian, 40 per cent of the passenger cars were registered in states other than Mississippi.

These statistics, although they simply describe a rough approximation along three typical routes in the South, show that the volume of interstate travel is considerable.

However, Negroes trying to make any one of these trips would have an extremely slender choice in attempting to find over-night accommodations in hotels and motels serving white travelers along the same routes. To illustrate the magnitude of the travel problem we have drawn on the expert knowledge of Mrs. Marion Jackson, of this city, a person who specializes in problems of Negro travel. In fact, she publishes a unique travel guide called "GO-Guide to Pleasant Motoring".

The very existence of this guide is a dramatic testimony to the difficulties for which we are seeking a remedy. The guide contains listings of hotels, motels and other traveling facilities, whose owners have stated in writing that their facilities are open to all desirable guests regardless of their race, religion or nationality. The guide lists hotels and motels owned by white as well as Negro businessmen. Of the white-owned hotels (60 per cent of those listed), there are practically none in the southern states.

We asked the publisher of GO to consider the following problem. Assume a middle class Negro family planned two trips by automobile through the South--(1) along Routes U.S. 1 and 301 from Washington, D.C. to Miami, Florida; (2) from Washington, D.C. via Columbia, South Carolina; Atlanta, Georgia; Tuskegee and Mobile, Alabama, to New Orleans, along routes U.S. 1, 301, 29, 31 and 90. Where along the way could such a middle-class Negro family expect to find reasonable sleeping accommodations?

The answer to this question is shown in Table II, and the results are disturbing. On the Miami trip, the average distance between accommodations is ~~145~~ 141 miles. On the New Orleans trip, it is ~~228~~ 174 miles, ~~and on one leg it is as high as 576 miles.~~ Moreover, the places available are typically small--averaging only 15 units.

These are extremely crude estimates. But they do illustrate the tremendous problem faced by Negro travelers along the highways in the South. In fact, even if we cut in half the average of ~~145~~ 141 miles on the Washington to Miami trip, or the ~~228~~ 174 miles on the New Orleans drive, we would still have considerable distances over which Negroes would typically have to drive before they could expect to find reasonable accommodations open to them on the same basis as white travelers. If they get tired 40 miles out from the last available stop, they have a bitter choice to make in deciding whether to go back or push on. Frequently the choice they make will be one which violates the National Safety Council's admonition that the non-professional driver should stop after 6 to 8 hours driving.

Table II

Illustrative Trip, Washington, D.C., to Miami, Florida and Washington, D.C., to New Orleans, Louisiana

Showing Location of Hotel-Motel Accommodations of "Reasonable" Quality Readily Available

To Negroes.

WASHINGTON, D.C., --MIAMI, FLORIDA	ROUTE	MILES
Washington - Petersburg, Va.	U.S. 1 and 301	135
Petersburg - Raleigh, N. C.	U.S. 1	150
Raleigh, N.C. - Columbia, S. C.	U.S. 1	185
Columbia - Savannah, Ga.	U.S. 1	116
Savannah - Jessup	U.S. 301	65
Jessup - Jacksonville, Fla.	17	100
Jacksonville - Ormand Beach	U.S. 1	142
Ormand Beach - Miami	U.S. 1	232
Total Mileage:	Washington/Miami	1,125
Average Miles Between Locations		141

WASHINGTON, D.C.,--NEW ORLEANS, LA.
Washington, D.C.---Columbia, S.C. (Including stops shown above)		470 ~~648~~
Columbia - Atlanta, Ga.	29	215
Atlanta - Tuskegee Institute, Ala.	29	134
Tuskegee Institute - Mobile, Ala.	29 and 31	250
Mobile - New Orleans, La.	90	148
Total Mileage:	Washington/New Orleans	1,217 ~~1,395~~
Average Miles Between Locations		174 ~~199~~

There is another anomalous aspect of the travel problems confronted by Negroes. Some well-to-do individuals, with enough money for a mid-winter vacation, find it far more pleasurable to go abroad than to risk the insults and rejections which they are likely to face in many of the Miami Beach hotels and luxury resorts. In fact, there is a steady stream of such travelers to the British West Indies.

Distortion of Negro Expenditure Patterns

The lack of equal access to public accommodations by Negroes not only limits their interstate travel, but distorts their consumption pattern and places an unnecessary burden on interstate commerce. The business community generally has begun to recognize that the Negros' rising disposable income represents a large and growing portion of the nation's buying power. However, this is far less true in the area of public accommodations.

In the amusement, restaurant, and hotel and motel industries, one can see a pattern of Negro spending that appears to be related more to the availability or non-availability of desegregated facilities than to any special kinds of taste or conspicuous consumption. I have asked my staff to prepare a tabulation of average Negro and white expenditures for "Admissions," "Food eaten away from home," and "Automobile operations" (a key to travel, and therefore spending for hotels and motels). The tabulation is based on a study published several years ago by the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania.

These data (summarized in Table III) show that Negroes in large northern cities spend more than southern Negroes of the same income class in all of these expenditure categories, even though white families in northern cities spend less than similar families in southern cities.

In the same income group, northern Negroes spend more than northern whites for "Admissions," but southern Negroes spend less than southern whites and Northern Negroes. Negroes in both the North and South spend less on "Food eaten away from home" than white people in the same income groups, but the difference is much greater in the South.

Table III

Average Family Expenditure for Admissions, Food Eaten Away from Home, and Automobile Operations, for Three Income Classes, Large Northern and Southern Cities by Race, 1950.

Income Class & Region	Admissions			Food Eaten Away from Home			Automobile Operation
	Negro	White	Negroes % of White	Negro	White	Negroes % of White	Negro	White	Negroes % of Whites
$2,000 - $3,000
Large Northern Cities	$31	$29	107	$148	$184	80	$ 52	$ 86	60
Large Southern Cities	23	36	64	113	194	58	52	95	55
North. Exp. as % of South.	135%	81%		131%	95%		100%	91%
$3,000 - $4,000
Large Northern Cities	$45	$37	122	$138	$170	81	$ 67	$158	42
Large Southern Cities	37	39	95	117	180	65	86	170	51
North. Exp. as % of South.	122%	95%		118%	94%		78%	93%
$4,000 - $5,000
Large Northern Cities	$57	$48	119	$182	$234	78	$148	$220	67
Large Southern Cities	39	45	87	166	257	65	136	225	60
North. Exp. as % of South.	146%	107%		110%	91%		109%	98%

Source: Study of Consumer Expenditure Income & Saving, tabulated by Bureau of Labor Statistics, U. S. Department of Labor, for Wharton School of Finance and Commerce, University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, 1956-57.

The table shows also that Negroes in both the North and South spend much less than whites of the same income class on "Automobile operations" (40 to 60 per cent). This statistic certainly suggests that Negroes are doing considerably less traveling by automobile than white people in the same income group. Since Negroes spent close to the same amount, on the average, for the purchase of automobiles as did whites of the same income level, I believe the absence of suitable facilities along our important North-South highway routes must be the discouraging factor.

Conventions

The burden on interstate commerce of racial discrimination in public accommodations is clearly illustrated in the way many organizations select the cities in which they will hold conventions. A most striking example of a large organization steering away from a city because of discrimination in hotel and restaurant accommodations is provided in the case of the American Legion. The Legion had originally scheduled its 1963 Convention (to be held in September) in New Orleans. However, they were informed that the availability of non-segregated facilities could not be insured in New Orleans. The Convention was then shifted to Miami, Florida, where they did receive an assurance of desegregated facilities. It is expected that attendance at the Legion Convention will be as high as 50,000 persons, and that Miami will gain additional business amounting to between 4.5 and 5 million dollars.

A similar story with respect to conventions is reported by Atlanta. Just a few weeks ago the Atlanta Convention Bureau stated that they had been overwhelmed with favorable response from the Convention trade to the desegregation of some hotels in the city. They had already booked several meetings both of a regional and national nature and they felt they could not have had these bookings had desegregation not occurred in hotels. Among the conventions are a hospital group, a YMCA group, a national technical organization, three different labor organizations, one of the health agencies of the Federal government and a Presidential Commission.

Another striking example of the effects of discrimination--and of civil rights demonstrations protesting such discrimination--on convention trade is provided by the experience of Birmingham. Prior to disturbances in that city in April and May of this year, inquiries received from various southeastern states indicated a positive interest in Birmingham as a convention site. According to reports received by the Commerce Department field office in Birmingham, this interest waned substantially following the April and May demonstrations. Convention business has been lost in several instances where inquiries specified that accommodations for a mixed racial membership were necessary. Hotels being obliged to advise that under municipal law such accommodations were not available have been unable to realize this potential business. Recent examples have included the National Music Teachers Association and possibly the Southern Baptist Convention of Nashville, Tennessee, who had been negotiating for convention facilities in 1965 for some 6,000 to 8,000 delegates.

Effects on Entertainment

The effects of discrimination in public accommodations show up also in the entertainment field. Where segregation is practiced in theaters and auditoriums, the entire community, both white and Negro, is denied access to a variety of cultural and entertainment activities. The Metropolitan Opera Company cancelled its annual season in Birmingham because municipal authorities failed to desegregate theater facilities. Although they had formerly had very successful seasons in Birmingham, there are no plans for resumption in the immediate future.

Actors' Equity adopted a rule about a year ago, written into every contract, that performers need not perform in theaters where discrimination is practiced either against performers or patrons. White and Negro performers have been enforcing this rule, and refusing to appear. Equity has been using this clause on a limited basis for many years. Many of you probably recall that the National Theater here in Washington was closed for several years, and during some of this time there was no live, professional theater in Washington--not until the old burlesque theater was remodeled and opened to Negro as well as white patrons.

Entertainers in the American Guild of Variety Artists have also been refusing to book where either the stage or the audience is segregated. The Guild's resolution is fairly recent, but many of the booking agencies have insisted upon this clause for a long time. Ray Charles, Harry Belafonte, and Sammy Davis are examples of prominent Negro entertainers who have been refusing to play to segregated audiences.

Effects on Environment of Business

These are not the only adverse effects upon interstate commerce of racial discrimination in public accommodations. There is difficulty in recruiting professional personnel and skilled labor. Increasingly these people, who are in short supply, are unwilling to live and work in an environment in which racial discrimination in public accommodations is dominant. The pattern of plant locations is also distorted, because many firms turn away from such areas as plant sites. Moreover, these decisions frequently have an adverse impact on local efforts to redevelop communities by attracting new firms.

Difficulties in Recruiting Professional and Skilled Manpower

With respect to personnel, there is evidence that business organizations have been hampered in obtaining the services of professional persons and skilled workers who are likely to encounter discrimination based on race, creed, color, or national origin in restaurants, retail stores, and places of amusement in the area where their services are needed. Moreover, demonstrations and other forms of protest against this type of discrimination create a general atmosphere which frightens away trained local people and persuades others not to migrate to some places where their services may be in great demand.

The experiences of the Alabama Medical Center in Birmingham are typical. The Center is the city's second biggest industry, ranking only behind Tennessee Coal and Iron, a subsidiary of U.S. Steel. The 15-block complex, which already represents a $100 million investment, has plans for an additional $30 million of construction in the next few years. Despite an outstanding reputation, Birmingham's adverse publicity over sit-in demonstrations and other forms of protests has posed problems for the Center in attracting additional top-flight scientists.

Again in Little Rock, although racial unrest was sparked by school desegregation, protests over segregated public accommodations further inflamed the environment. Under these conditions, recruitment of technical people became extremely difficult. According to the provost for medical affairs of the University of Arkansas, "The University Medical Center, being within the community of Little Rock, could not help but be affected by the distrubances. I think it would be only fair to say that because of this complicating social change, the Medical Center has had its faculty recruitment program brought to a virtual standstill. So many of the persons we approach and invite to join the faculty are diverted by the events that have been taking place in the community."

Several local witnesses at a civil rights hearing in New Orleans earlier this month testified that business and industry in the South was penalizing itself when it discriminated against Negroes by limiting their access to public accommodations, job opportunities, and inflicted other forms of racial restrictions. Because of these types of discrimination, the brighter and better-educated Negroes migrate to the North and never return. One consequence of this migration is highlighted in the experiences of the Boeing Company and Kaiser Aluminum. Both have national policies of equal opportunity in employment, and both testified they had found difficulty finding skilled Negro help in New Orleans.

Effects on Plant Location and Investment

With respect to plant location, a typical example of how a city can lose new industries because of the turmoil over segregated public accommodations is also found in Birmingham. A company had planned to locate there to make products out of steel. Birmingham was negotiating for the plant when the riot over Freedom Riders erupted in 1961. The company decided Birmingham was out of the question and eventually built its plant in Tennessee, although it has to ship its steel in from Birmingham.

Again, with respect to the disturbances in Birmingham, a top official of one of the city's leading banks declared, "We've been hurt and hurt bad. I bet I've spent $50 in telephone calls trying to convince a big Ohio company that it should locate a pilot plant in Alabama. But I'm afraid we've lost it to New England and lost it strictly because of the unrest down here. The pilot plant in its first stage was scheduled to cost about $3 million and if it had worked out, the company was thinking in terms of a further investment of $40 million to $50 million. Well, we asked for it, and now we're getting it."

In the two years before the crisis over schools and desegregation of public accommodations erupted into violence in Little Rock in September, 1957, industrial investments totaled $248 million in Arkansas. During the period, Little Rock alone gained 10 new plants, worth $3.4 million, which added 1,072 jobs in the city. In the two years after the turbulence which brought Federal troops to the city, not a single company employing more than 15 workers moved into the Little Rock area. Industrial investments in the state as a whole dropped to $190 million.

Adverse Effects on General Business Conditions

It is common knowledge that discrimination in public accommodations and demonstrations protesting such discrimination have had serious consequences for general business conditions in numerous cities in recent years. The following damaging examples are typical of the many which could be cited.

Retail sales in Birmingham were reported off 30 per cent or more during the protest riots in the spring of 1963. One local businessman said several retailers had told him their books had shown a net loss for the first time in a generation. Another businessman of 35 years' experience said there were more stores for rent in Birmingham last fall than there had been during the Depression. In April, one downtown block had eight of its 20 stores empty, with "For Rent" signs in the windows.

One newspaper account said that downtown stores privately report that business in April was off 40 to 50 per cent. They were hit first by a Negro boycott and then by a tense atmosphere that kept customers at home or in suburban shops. A story in the back pages of the Birmingham newspapers in May noted that a chain store was closing its downtown branch in two weeks because of a lack of business.

The Federal Reserve Bank in Atlanta reported that in the four-week period ended May 18, 1963, department store sales in Birmingham were down 15 per cent below the same period in 1962. Since January 1, 1963, the city's department store sales dropped five per cent from 1962. During the same four and one-half months, department store sales were up seven per cent in Atlanta, up 10 per cent in New Orleans and up 15 per cent in Jacksonville, Florida.

In Atlanta, after several months of intermittent demonstrations in 1960-61, and a boycott sparked by student groups to remove racial barriers in lunch counters and department store restaurants, merchants agreed that the Negro boycott of the downtown area was almost 100 per cent effective. Department store sales for a one-week period in February, 1961, were down 12 per cent from the previous year, the Federal Reserve Bank reported. Receipts of some variety stores showed a far greater drop. During the demonstrations, early in 1961, one store executive said, "The most important thing that can be done is to convince the power structure that this situation can ruin the downtown area. The effect is not going to be confined to the retail stores. It will hit the banks, the office supply concerns, the insurance firms, the real estate interests and all the rest."

In Savannah, Georgia, a citizens' negotiating committee announced the end of lunch counter discrimination in downtown stores in July, 1961. The action followed a 15-month boycott of the stores by Negroes, apparently because the Negro refusal to buy hurt merchants. The boycott cut retail sales as much as 50 per cent in some places.

In the fall of 1962, businessmen in Charlotte, North Carolina, hit by drives for desegregation of public accommodations, estimated their business was cut by 20 to 40 per cent.

Similar protests in Nashville, Tennessee, produced a boycott which was maintained for approximately seven weeks at what has been estimated at about 98 per cent efficiency, a figure downtown merchants generally agreed on. Negroes in Nashville spend an estimated $7 million annually downtown and their absence had varying results. In one department store, they represented 12 to 15 per cent of the business; in another department store, five per cent. The transit company found its revenues dwindling seriously; the two newspapers found advertising lineage figures falling.

In addition to the boycott supporters, other shoppers stayed away from the downtown Nashville area. While conditions remained unsettled as a result of sit-ins, they could either stay home or shop in suburban areas. This, too, hurt business in the central city, for these out-of-towners represent 20 per cent of the shopping totals.

Variety stores were hit particularly hard. With their lunch counters a sit-in target, even those who did venture downtown avoided the food counters, which sometimes account for as much as 50 per cent of the gross profit. Even businesses not involved in the sit-ins and which had reputations of good service to Negroes found business dropping.

State Budget Director E. J. Boling said violence in Tennessee associated with desegregation of public accommodations threatened the state's credit ratings: "We go up to New York to talk to investment bankers... they start off talking about such things as these dynamitings. Sometimes that's all they talk about...they only want to know about all the acts of violence." State Comptroller William Snodgrass concurred, and added that violence or the threat of violence can add a small fraction to interest rates--and this adds up to millions of dollars eventually.

Objections to Bill

Now let me deal with some of the objections I have heard to the bill before this Committee. As I have already said, it seems to me it is clearly within the power of Congress to base this legislation on the Commerce clause, as well as on the Fourteenth Amendment. And I do not think that requiring the owners of public accommodations to serve the public without discrimination is an unwarranted encroachment on private rights. The owners of these places are already subject to all kinds of controls, in order to advance the public safety, health, order and morality. No one doubts the propriety of requiring them to build fire escapes, to keep their kitchens clean, and to prevent disorderly or immoral conduct on their premises. Moreover, as the Attorney General has pointed out, many southern states compel the owners of public accommodations to spend their money to enforce segregation. Surely it is no more of an encroachment on private rights to compel them to end segregation than it is to compel them to perpetuate it.

I have also heard it said that using the commerce power does not meet the moral issue. I do not understand this point. Good sense dictates that the moral policy against discrimination be carried out by using all available constitutional authority. Other moral policies (against prostitution and gambling) have previously been translated into law based on the Commerce clause.

I do not think that basing this legislation on the Commerce clause detracts in any way from the dignity or importance of the constitutional rights involved. The dignity of those rights is best recognized by doing something about them. The justification for using the Commerce clause is that it will work. It is constitutionally sound, and there is no adverse legal precedent which must be overcome, as is the case with the Fourteenth Amendment. The argument that the Fourteenth Amendment approach alone must be used because it is a "higher" basis for the legislation seems to me something of a snare and delusion. It risks putting so-called principle ahead of performance. It risks ending up with nothing, and risks it needlessly.

I have also heard an objection to the Commerce clause approach on the ground that it will not cover all businesses impartially, but only those which affect interstate commerce, whereas the Fourteenth Amendment is not so limited. If I understand the Mrs. Murphy argument correctly, I think there are many people who do not want the bill to apply to the smallest businesses, where the relation between proprietor and customer is almost personal or social. It seems to me that limiting coverage of the Act to businesses where there is an appreciable effect upon interstate commerce is an appropriate way to meet this point.

The important point about coverage of the Act is that it be complete enough so that a substantial majority of the businesses in any area or region of the country are required to comply. It does not have to have 100% coverage, but it has to be comprehensive enough so that in all areas of the country, north and south, rural and urban, most public accommodations will be desegregated. If that is done, no hardship will be worked on individual businessmen, and the climate in this field of civil rights will quickly change.

In this connection, there have been numerous references to the possibility of defining coverage under the act in terms of dollar volume of sales. Some statistics prepared by my staff show that different types of business vary widely in the average volume of sales. Moreover, the same type of business may vary widely in average size from one area to another. I have with me several tables and charts (labeled Appendix I) showing the distribution of sales by selected types of businesses in ten major cities. I would like to offer these for the Committee's information.

What these statistics show is essentially as follows:

From Appendix I, Table 1: A $150,000 sales figure would afford adequate coverage only in the case of department stores in these cities. At least 56 per cent of the variety stores in these cities would be excluded; at least 76 per cent of the gasoline stations would be excluded; 83 per cent of the eating places; and 93 per cent of the drinking places.

If the figure were reduced to $100,000 annual sales volume, it would still be true in these cities that at least 49 per cent of the variety stores would be excluded; 69 per cent of the gasoline stations; 79 per cent of the eating places; and 91 per cent of the drinking places.

At $50,000, 22 per cent of the variety stores would still be excluded; 34 per cent of the gasoline stations; 64 per cent of the eating places; and 65 per cent of the drinking places.

Finally, using a $30,000 annual sales volume as a definition of coverage would mean that a minimum of 12 per cent of the variety stores would be excluded; 14 per cent of the gasoline stations; 34 per cent of the drinking places; and 46 per cent of the eating places.

The series of charts following the Tables in Appendix I presents a graphic description of the same information.

Bear in mind that these are figures for major cities, with the population shown in Appendix I, Table 2. In the southern states, more than half the population lives in rural areas as is shown in Appendix I, Table 3. And the figures cited are for those cities where coverage is greatest. In many cities the coverage is sharply less than in those referred to above.

Another measure of coverage limitations is that shown in Appendix I, Table 4, furnished by the American Restaurant Association. It shows that, on a countrywide basis, only 8 per cent of the restaurants gross over $100,000 annually, and only 22-1/2 per cent gross over $50,000 annually. In other words, three quarters of the restaurant establishments in the country would not be covered if a $50,000 standard were applicable to restaurants.

In summary, the use of a specified sales volume may have some disadvantages. It may result in unevenness of coverage as between types of businesses and as between urban and rural areas. It might also lead to inequities among competitors, and to attempts to capitalize upon established exemptions by advertising their existence.

This is a highly technical area as the above figures show. We have compiled them for the Committee's general guidance in considering this legislation and we will of course be glad to assist further if we can.

Conclusion

Mr. Chairman, this concludes my prepared statement. I urge you to report favorably on S. 1732, and I will be happy to try to answer any questions which Committee members may have.

Pub. Accomm. Sen

DAYTONA BEACH, FLORIDA, SATURDAY, AUGUST 17, 1963

Florida

Ancient City Teems With Unrest

Priest Compares Conditions With Birmingham

ST. AUGUSTINE (AP) — The Florida Advisory Committee on civil rights said last night St. Augustine, oldest city in the U.S., is "a segregated superbomb aimed at the heart of Florida's economy and political integrity—the fuse is short."

The group culminated daylong hearings on discrimination with four recommendations to the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights asking:

—That the Commission seek to halt the use of $350,000 federal funds for promoting the St. Augustine Quadricentennial in 1965.

—That it recommend the suspension of federal contracts for Fairchild Stratos Corp. of St. Augustine until it ends discriminatory practices and the intimidation of Negro workers.

—That remedial steps be taken against the International Machinists Union, AFL-CIO Local 1224, to end discrimination.

—That the U. S. withhold federal funds from the State of Florida until it releases two minor (Negro) children taken from their families and sent unjustly to a correctional institution for participating in segregation protests.

St. Augustine has been called a second Birmingham, and the committee said it was the most segregated city on Florida's East Coast.

Fr. Louis L. Mitchell, Daytona Beach, an Episcopal Church priest and executive director of the Florida Council on Human Relations, compared conditions in this ancient city with those in Birmingham where massive violence broke loose earlier this year.

Fr. Mitchell testified that he was in Birmingham through the worst of its racial troubles and has been in Florida several months—long enough to see the picture here.

"The White community in St. Augustine thinks the Negroes are out to cause trouble and the young demonstrators feel the Police Dept. is out to get them.

He predicted that unless some way is found to bring leaders of White and Negro communities together for talks, there will be more demonstrations, more hostility and more bitterness on both sides.

Fr. Mitchell said he has not been able to get Sheriff L. O. Davis or Chief of Police Virgil Stuart to initiate biracial talks.

Another witness was Dr. R. B. Hayling, Negro dentist and advisor to the NAACP Youth Council which has been doing most of the demonstrating here in efforts to win better job opportunities and the right to be served at lunch counters and restaurants.

Hayling told of racial activities and tensions in recent months including details of a shooting outside his home in which four Negroes were slightly wounded.

The White youths who did the shooting went free, Hayling said, but a Negro youth arrested for possession of a weapon which was not fired is serving a jail term.

Other witnesses included the mothers of two Negro juveniles declared delinquent because of participation in a drug store sit-in and sent to the State Industrial School at Marianna.

Another who appeared was a Negro minister who said his son was taken into custody for distributing handbills and put on probation pending good behaviour.

A White attorney, Frank Howatt, who has represented three Negroes in recent racial cases, testified he thinks the situation would improve if biracial talks are held. But at the committee's invitation, Howatt would not suggest the names of any White residents who might agree to serve on a biracial group.

City and county officials were invited to the sessions and the advisory committee chairman, George Lewis II, Tallahassee, asked several times if there were any present. None responded.

Virtually all of the overflow crowd in the 100 seat county courtroom were Negroes.

Dr. R. W. Puryear, president of Florida Memorial College, gave what observers termed his most outspoken remarks in favor of integration in the 13 years he has been president of the Negro school here.

"I've been called 'Uncle Tom' by my own people," Puryear said. "But now I want to say that nothing is more pleasing to me than to see men and women, boys and girls born in this town expressing a desire for freedom."

Puryear said Mississippi, where he came from, was a "pretty bad place but you could get people to sit down and talk."

The college president said he was embarrassed "to live in this town." He said recently Florida Memorial had an opportunity to get $20,000 from a foundation if it could raise matching funds.

"I wrote 556 letters in St. Augustine (to local people) and got three gifts from White people here," he said.

Puryear said he lost half the possible grant because he could not raise the money.

"Now," he said, "the Board of Trustees of the college has voted to move to another location."

He said the time for moving the college, with 350 students, has not been decided, nor the city.

Committee members heard reports that Fairchild Stratos Corp., which has government contracts for repairing air force planes, had advised its Negro employes not to take part in any racial demonstrations.

Three present or former Negro employes testified that they were called together in groups and informed by a company representative and a union representative that if they did demonstrate they would lose their jobs.

Two representatives of the firm — W. A. Baker, manager of industrial relations, and E. A. Bowe, supervisor of personnel, testified they knew of no such meetings.

Bowe and Baker said they would check further into the reported meetings.

Baker also was asked if he knew about signs formerly displayed designating rest rooms by race. Baker said he knew of none. Then a member of the committee asked how long he worked for the company here. Baker replied "one month and three days."

The packed room burst into spontaneous laughter.

8/23/63

of this treaty, have jeopardized the supreme interests of its country."

My misgivings arise out of the last sentence in article IV, which says that the withdrawing party "shall give notice of such withdrawal to all other parties to the treaty 3 months in advance." Secretary Rusk furnished one helpful clarification of this sentence in his testimony before this Committee last Monday when he said: "If the Soviet Union were to test in violation of the treaty, the fundamental obligation that is the consideration for our adherence would disappear. In that case the United States could, if it chose, consider itself released from its reciprocal obligation and could resume testing without delay." The Secretary's clarification eliminates one difficulty. But another serious difficulty remains. The situation in which the United States may find it necessary, in the interests of its own security, to resume testing first, is more difficult.

Perhaps I can best explain the reason for my concern by constructing a hypothesis which is not at all farfetched. Let us suppose that after the treaty goes into effect, the Soviets start producing AICBM's in substantial quantities, deploying them around their cities (as they are already reported to have done in the case of Leningrad), and training crews in their use. At first, American policymakers, relying upon the current estimate of our overwhelming strategic superiority, would probably deprecate Soviet efforts in the antimissile field. I would not be at all surprised if the Soviets themselves should play down the importance of the AICBM, or keep a discreet silence, until after they have made some real headway. But after 2 or 3 years, American defense experts might begin to exhibit a certain amount of concern over the possibility that the Soviets were substantially reducing the American margin of superiority. I am ready to concede that my scenario may leave something to be desired. It does not, for example, take into account other arms control agreements which may be concluded subsequently to this treaty, and which might affect the size of nuclear stockpiles or the number of missiles or the total deliverable megatonnage to be retained by each side. To be sure, in the new international climate which may be ushered in by the treaty, no one can predict with certainty what the relative military positions of the Soviets and ourselves might be 3 years from now. But that is not my point. I simply wish to suggest that there is a conceivable set of circumstances in which our Executive branch may become sufficiently worried as to conclude that the United States, in prudence, must speed up its own antimissile program by conducting tests in one of the three environments. Under this hypothesis, the Soviets have not been testing in violation of the treaty terms. They have placed the supreme interests of our country in jeopardy by exploiting fully the findings obtained from pretreaty tests. Perhaps those who drafted the treaty had some such contingency in mind when they formulated the phrase, "extraordinary events related to the subject matter of this treaty." If the United States should determine that Soviet weapons development, based presumably on the results of pretreaty tests, posed risks to the security of our Nation, I submit that this would constitute an extraordinary event related to the subject matter of the treaty, and that it would, under the wording of article IV, justify an act of withdrawal by the United States, regardless of the fact that the Soviets had not violated the treaty. But once the United States has made an authoritative determination that the supreme national interest has been placed in jeopardy, a question arises as to why 3 months should elapse before tests would be resumed. It seems to me that where national security interests are at stake, the time lapse between the decision and the testing should be limited solely by the state of our technological preparations. If, as we have been assured, the Government expects to sustain a readiness for immediate resumption, then it should resume testing as quickly as possible.

We must recognize frankly that a mandatory delay of 3 months contains a built-in political disadvantage for a democratic society such as the United States. During this period we would probably experience an acrimonious debate between those whose primary concern was preventing an exacerbation of international tensions as a result of U.S. test resumption and those whose primary concern was preserving an adequate security posture for the United States. This would be especially true in those situations—more probable than improbable—in which there would be conflicting reports about whether a violation by the Soviets had actually occurred, or whether other Soviet weapons developments posed a threat to American security. There would be endless arguments over the kind of evidence possessed by Western intelligence sources, the seriousness of the violation or other technological development, and its significance for the international strategic balance. Under these ambiguous circumstances, extremist groups all over the world would have ample opportunity to organize a massive protest against the scheduled resumption of testing by the United States, and the opponents of resumption would issue warnings that we must not outrage world public opinion by canceling the agreement. If we do ratify the test ban treaty, we should not penalize ourselves by inviting controversy after the appropriate authorities have already decided that the supreme interest of the United States has been placed in jeopardy. There should be vigorous and free debate before that determination is made; but once made, this country should not be inhibited from moving as swiftly as possible to remedy whatever deficiencies may appear in its defenses. There is little doubt in my mind that if the Soviets should ever decide to resume testing, and to bear the opprobrium of withdrawing from the treaty publicly, they will do what they did in the late summer of 1961—make the announcement on one day and test the next.

Another serious implication of the treaty is the precedent which it sets for future arms control or disarmament agreements with the Soviet Union. This agreement is quite different from the one which our diplomats tried so hard to obtain at Geneva. In the Geneva talks, the central isue was international inspection, and on this issue the Soviets and the United States were not able to reach any final agreement. Hence there is no way of knowing whether the Soviets today are any closer to accepting the principle of international inspection in practice than they were 17 years ago, when they turned down the Baruch plan. Not long ago, it was argued that the chief utility of the projected test ban consisted in the fact that it would establish an invaluable precedent for future disarmament agreements, for it would involve the acceptance by Soviet leaders of international inspectors on their soil. Presumably, in adhering to a test ban, the Soviets would be setting aside their traditional phobia of international inspectors as "espionage agents." They would be abandoning their traditional insistence upon the preservation of an excessive national sovereign exclusivism. They would be accepting, even though in modest form, the principle which the United States has insisted upon for 17 years as the basis of any arms agreement, viz, international control and inspection. American analysts have always argued that it would be much safer for the United States to conclude armaments agreements with the Soviets if the latter could be induced gradually to give up their neurotic secrecy complex and to begin opening up their closed society. We were anxious, therefore, to use the test ban agreement to establish a certain kind of precedent. But now, we have signed a test ban agreement which may establish exactly the opposite kind of precedent. Ignoring the question as to whether the absence of an inspection feature in the treaty poses any direct security problems to the United States, we should ask what it signifies for future arms agreements. We cannot fully blame the Soviets: We ourselves proposed a nationally inspected ban on atmospheric tests in April 1959, and a nationally inspected three-environment ban just 1 year ago. But even if the Soviets had accepted either of those proposals, the Senate would have been obliged to examine the significance of a shift from the principle of international inspection to the principle of national policing. We should try to understand what such a shift may portend for the "next steps." I have no way of knowing what those administration officials who have been shaping our national arms control policy within the last 2 years may now be contemplating as logical "next steps," or what proposals may have been exchanged in the post-Cuban correspondence between President Kennedy and Premier Khrushchev, or what possibilities may have been explored by East and West in the recent Moscow talks. But you will recall that President John F. Kennedy last November 3, after Khrushchev's pledge to remove Soviet missiles from Cuba, announced that the United States would insist on international ground inspection in Cuba. However, as you know, when we were confronted by Premier Castro's refusal to allow international inspection of the wtihdrawal of Soviet missiles, the United States dropped its demand. Now we have departed from international inspection in the test ban treaty, except for a ritual mention of the principle in the preamble. Who is to say whether the "next step" might involve nuclear disengagement in Central Europe wtihout effective international inspection and control. It would be a serious lapse from a previously held, and strongly held position, if the United States were to lose interest, for all practical purposes, in international inspection and control as an essential condition of disarmament.

Pub. Accomm. Sen.

COMMUNIST CONNECTIONS AND INFLUENCES IN THE CURRENT NEGRO DEMONSTRATIONS

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, on August 2 and 7 I placed in the RECORD a series of articles showing Communist connections and influences in the current Negro demonstrations, riots, and agitational efforts. On August 13, I placed in the RECORD police reports and other articles dealing with immorality and Communist deception and duplicity in using Negro movements and demonstrations. Today I wish to present to the Senate other tactics used by the Communists to incite and exploit racial tensions—treachery and terrorism.

The activities of Carl Braden and his wife, Anne Braden, fit the master plan of communism to use the Negroes to bring about strife and bloodshed in the United States. On February 17, 1959, the Honorable DALE ALFORD, of Arkansas, summarized on page 2319 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the Bradens' activities with these comments:

Traveling about the South today, distributing the doctrine of totalitarian government, is a husband-wife team by name of Carl and Anne Braden. Carl Braden is free to roam the Nation, these days, because of a ruling by the U.S. Supreme Court that Federal statutes against sedition have preempted State sedition laws. Braden is now a field secretary for the Southern Conference Educational Fund, which was formed after the SCHW was revealed as a Communist front. As a Communist boss in Louisville, Ky. Carl Braden was indicted on charges of sedition in Jefferson Circuit Court, State of Kentucky. He was convicted in December 1954, subsequently sentenced to 15 years' imprisonment and fined $5,000. Evidence at the trial, with the prosecution conducted by State's Attorney Scott Hamilton, showed that Braden purchased a home in a suburban Louisville community occupied exclusively by white families and then, transferred ownership to a Negro named Wade. It was further shown at the trial that the home was dynamited on June 27, 1954, and the grand jury determined, after visiting the scene of the crime, that the dynamiting was "an inside job" perpetrated to create an incident. The prosecution maintained that Braden was the "common denominator" of the explosion. Shortly after this home purchasing and bombing incident, Carl Braden received a letter from a comrade who signed his name as "Al," otherwise unidentified in the trial record. The letter stated that the latest project of the Bradens—the Wade home acquisition—constituted a "breach in the wall" of what Comrade Al referred to as "the real estate trust." Al told Carl and Anne their project "left us breathless."

These comments of Mr. ALFORD are as valid today as in 1959, as the Bradens have appeared in the Negro demonstrations in Danville, Va., as late as last month.

At this point, Mr. President, to show sworn testimony of Carl Braden's Communist Party membership, I shall now read testimony taken in the Jefferson Circuit Court at Louisville, Ky. and used in evidence at his sedition trial in 1954.

Question. I hand you what purports to be a transcript of some testimony taken in the Jefferson Circuit Court, the Criminal Branch of the Second Division, of Kentucky, at Louisville, of December 11, 1954, in a case entitled Commonwealth of Kentucky v. Carl Braden, and ask you if that is one of the documents you received?

Answer. It is.

Question. Does that transcript contain any sworn testimony concerning Carl Braden and affiliation with the Communist Party of the United States?

Answer. It does.

Question. Who is the witness who testifies in that regard in that case?

Answer. The witness is known as Alberta Ahern.

Question. Turn to page 2276 of that transcript of testimony and read what that witness swore under oath in regard to Mr. Braden.

Question. Will you please state your name to the court?

Answer. Mrs. Alberta Ahern.

Question. And where do you live, Mrs. Ahern?

Answer. 2311 Payne Street.

Question. And what is your occupation?

Answer. Seamstress.

Question. Mrs. Ahern, I will ask you if you have been employed in an undercover capacity for the Federal Bureau of Investigation?

Answer. I have.

Question. I will ask you, please whether or not the defendant, Carl Braden, got you into the Communist Party?

Then there was an objection, and—

The COURT. No, that is leading. Objection sustained.

Very well, Your Honor.

Question. Now, you are a member of the Communist Party?

Answer. That's right.

Question. I will ask you if, of your own knowledge, the defendant, Carl Braden, is a member of the Communist Party?

Answer. Mr. Braden is a member of the Communist Party.

Question. Now, Mrs. Ahern, I will ask you whether or not you were a member of the same group or the same cell of the Communist Party in Louisville, Ky., with the defendant, Carl Braden?

Answer. I was.

Question. I will ask you, please, whether or not on July 9 of this year, 1954, you attended a meeting of the Communist Party here in Louisville? If you did, where was that meeting held?

Answer. I attended a Communist Party meeting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Braden, 4403 Virginia Avenue, Louisville, Ky.

Question. By Mr. Hawes. Turn, Mr. Strickland, to page 2280 of that transcript of testimony and read what this witness swore under oath further in regard to Mr. Braden. I will ask you if on June 3, 1954, you attended as a member of the Communist Party a called meeting of your cell or group? Did you attended a meeting on June 3, 1954?

Answer. I did.

Question. Where was that meeting held?

Answer. It was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Braden.

Question. And who were present, please?

Answer. Mr. I. O. Ford, Mr. Carl Braden, and myself.

Now I wish to present to the Senate a résumé of the grand jury investigation on the facts concerning the explosion which occurred at 12:30 a.m., June 27, 1954, at the home of Andrew Wade IV, at Rone Court, near Louisville, Ky. This record is one of the best and most clear-cut examples of crimes committed by Communists interested in causing racial strife between Negroes and whites. It reveals the activities of highly trained saboteurs, trained to expertly detonate explosives by use of a battery, portable-type radio. This was the act of a professional by the name of Vernon Baun, who in the record shows as having served in Spain during the Spanish civil war. He was cited for contempt when he refused to answer whether he had been, or was a Communist.

I ask unanimous consent to have this grand jury report printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RÉSUMÉ OF GRAND JURY INVESTIGATION

(The following is an outline of the facts concerning the grand jury investigation into the explosion which occurred at 12:30 a.m., June 27, 1954, at the home of Andrew Wade IV, at Rone Court, near Louisville, Ky.)

During the late winter or early spring (approximately the first part of March, 1954), Andrew Wade IV and his wife, entered into an agreement with Carl Braden and his wife, Anne, to purchase a house in what might be referred to as a predominantly white residential neighborhood of Louisville, or vicinity. The Wades are young colored people, approximately 30 years of age and the parents of two children, one being about 2 years old, and the other 2 months old. The Bradens are white people, probably in their early forties. Both Braden and his wife formerly were employed by the Courier-Journal and the Louisville Times, but several years ago Mrs. Braden gave up her employment and Braden severed his relationship with the paper for a period of time, but subsequently was reemployed.

Apparently the Bradens and Wades endeavored to buy one or more houses, but for some reason were unable to complete the transactions. Finally, however, during the month of May 1954, the Bradens represented to a real estate dealer, Mr. Hudson, who was the representative of a Mr. Rone, and also to Mr. Rone that they, the Bradens, desired to purchase a house which recently had been constructed by Mr. Rone. They stated that they desired to move into the house and went so far as to discuss with the real estate agent the possibility of listing their home on Virginia Avenue, in Louisville, with him for sale or rental, knowing all the while that they intended to convey the house to the Wades immediately. The house was, in fact, conveyed to the Wades a short time after it was transferred to the Bradens and, before moving into the house, and before any acts or threats of violence whatsoever had occurred, the Bradens and the Wades, or someone interested in them, sought a police escort to accompany them while they moved. Because there had been neither threats nor violence and, in fact, apparently no one but the Wades and Bradens knew that the Wades intended to move into the house at that time, police protection was denied them. They thereupon moved into the residence, and the investigation has disclosed that at least 18 firearms, made up of high powered rifles, shotguns, and pistols, were taken into the house for the alleged purpose of defending it.

Shortly after the Wades moved into the residence, a cross was burned in an adjoining field, and the identity of three young white men was established as being the persons who burned it. Thereafter a rock was thrown through a window of the Wade house, and rifle shots were fired into the front door. The identity of the persons responsible for the shooting has not been established, although some people seem to believe that this was done to create trouble, rather than as an effort to frighten the Wades into moving from the neighborhood. The three young men involved in the cross burning readily admitted that they did this, and stated that it was somewhat of a prank and done on the spur of the moment. One or two of the three involved in this incident live in the immediate neighborhood.

Immediately after the first act of violence occurred, the Jefferson County Police furnished police protection all around the clock, keeping a man at the scene at all times. In addition, the occupants of the house likewise had persons, both white and colored, to stay on the premises to guard the residence. A committee, made up of both white and colored people, was formed for the alleged purpose of stimulating interest in the protection of the Wades and their right to live wherever they desired. It developed that many of these persons had a reputation of being Communist sympathizers or active Communists.

This committee sought to obtain the support of the NAACP, and we have been informed that this organization would not participate in the movement.

One of the persons who was active in the group was one Vernon Bown, whose true name is Vernon Baun. He also has used the name of Vernon Brown. He has resided in Kentucky only approximately a year and a half, and from the investigation, has lived for comparatively short times in other parts of the United States, among them, New Orleans, Pittsburgh, and New York. This man was in the merchant marine during the war, and also served in Spain during the civil war in that country. Bown, a white man, volunteered to act as a guard at the Wade residence. He gave up his living quarters and moved into the house. Either shortly before, or shortly after moving into the Wade home, Bown purchased and took there, a battery, portable-type radio. After the explosion, which occurred at exactly 12:30 a.m., this radio was found beneath the house and the speaker was missing. We have been informed that dynamite can be discharged by using a radio such as this, and the electronic authorities say that the fact that the speaker is missing is significant, that apparently being a possible source of current to set off the explosive.

Bown refused to testify before the grand jury in response to whether or not he is, or had been, a Communist, whether or not he ever had been beneath the house, and whether or not he ever had taken a radio underneath the house. His refusal to answer was based on the fifth amendment, and section 11 of the Kentucky Constitution, on the ground that his answers might be self-incriminating. Bown was indicted for contempt of court when he refused to answer certain other questions after the Court had instructed him to answer.

Our investigation disclosed that Bown had not known the Wades before moving into the premises. He had been, and after the explosion again was living with one I. O. Ford, who moved to Louisville from Paducah within the past year or two. When the officers went to his residence to execute the bench warrant for his arrest, they saw certain communistic literature in the living room, and upon making a further search, found what might be referred to as a huge quantity of communistic literature, letters, and records, which indicated that both Bown and Ford were Communists.

Among the papers found was a letter, a photostatic copy of which, marked "Exhibit I" is attached hereto, from a person in California to Ford, calling his attention to the fact that the residence of a colored family in or about Los Angeles had been damaged by explosives, and further pointing out that it had caused a great deal of trouble in that community.

Exhibit II is a photostatic copy of an undated letter, which, by reference to certain facts contained therein, is believed to have been written on July 5, 1954. In this letter Ford is congratulated for the work he is doing in Louisville. We believe this pertains to the explosion at the Wade residence on June 27, 1954.

Exhibits III and IV consist of a newspaper clipping of an explosion which occurred at a grocery owned by a colored man in eastern Kentucky, and a typewritten letter, signed "G," and mailed from Lexington, Ky., to Braden, in Louisville. Written in longhand beside the clipping is a notation concerning the disturbance this caused and, in parentheses, it is stated that the writer of the letter was 20 miles away when the explosion occurred.

In addition to Brown, the Bradens, and Ford, at least two other persons whom we believe to be Communists, were active on the Wade committee. They both came to Louisville from Indianapolis some time ago after the loyalty of either one or both was questioned in that city. Both Miss Gilbert and Miss Spiker were called before the grand jury and at first refused to be sworn and were sent to jail for contempt of court. After spending approximately 3 hours in jail, Louise Gilbert sent word to the court by her attorney, Grover Sales, of Louisville, that she would be sworn and thereupon purged herself of the contempt charge. After being sworn, she refused to testify concerning her Communist connections on the ground that it might incriminate her. Miss Spiker spent a day and night in jail and finally sent word to the court that she, too, would be sworn and, after being sworn, she, too, refused to answer such questions on the ground that the answers might incriminate her.

Due to certain references in letters concerning Ford, particularly praising him for work that he has done on the picket line, and considering the fact that he moved to Louisville from Paducah comparatively recently, we are wondering if he might not have had some connection with all of the labor trouble that has existed at the atomic energy project at Paducah.

The grand jury and the officials conducting the investigation were dismayed at certain statements made by a radio and television commentator on the stations connected with the Louisville Times and Courier-Journal. Copies of two scripts are attached hereto, marked for identification, exhibit V and exhibit VI.

We also were dismayed at the editorial policy of these two papers, both of which are owned by the same individual, and are the only newspapers of general circulation is this community. Two editorials, marked exhibit VII and exhibit VIII, regarding the Wade case are attached hereto. Also attached, and identified as exhibit IX, is another editorial which pertains to a bill introduced by the attorney general at the last session of the legislature for the control of subversive organizations in this State. We do not charge anyone connected with the Courier-Journal and Louisville Times as knowingly encouraging or condoning the activities of Communists and Communist sympathizers but, as stated, all concerned were dismayed at the stand taken by these papers and their satellite radio and television stations.

The executive committee of the Louisville Bar Association adopted a resolution commending the grand jury for its work and, in substance, criticized the editorial position above referred to.

At the outset of the investigation, it was made clear to all concerned that there were at least two possible motives for the commission of this crime, one being that the white residents of the neighborhood were endeavoring to cause these Negroes to move, and the other that it was committed by persons interested in causing racial strife in and about Louisville. This community has not, in many, many years, had any trouble to speak of between the white and Negro people living here.

It also has been significant that the conflicts between the statements of various witnesses only occurred between those who might be suspected of causing the trouble for the purpose of effecting racial difficulties and was noticeably absent among the other witnesses.

The grand jury called before it 53 individual witnesses, and some of these were recalled. The grand jury called, among other witnesses, those who were interested in the Wades' behalf, and every name which was submitted by the Wades, even though these people could give no reason as to why they should have been called as witnesses. In many of these instances, the Wades alleged that various individuals they demanded the grand jury call, had been seen riding past their house with "an evil look." Actually, when these witnesses testified, they knew nothing whatsoever concerning the matter, and were not even residents of the neighborhood. The only people asked concerning Communist connections were those whom we had reason to believe were so connected, or were Communist sympathizers, and they, without exception had prepared statements ready to hand to newspaper reporters and, on each occasion, wanted to make speeches in open court. The law in Kentucky provides that grand jury proceedings shall be held in secret, and the only publicity given in this matter was brought on those who were publicized by their own actions.

Among the facts which caused the grand jury to investigate the possibility of Communist involvement are the following: The house was under guard as above stated; the radio with the missing speaker was found underneath the house; there was no outside fuse; the explosion was located under the house near a wall which was on the opposite side of the only means of entrance. These items, together with Bown's refusal to state whether or not he had been under the house—and we might say that it can be established that he had been—and his failure to state whether or not he ever had taken a radio under the house, would seem to cause a reasonable person to believe beyond a reasonable doubt that Bown set off the explosion. It also is significant that the occupants of the house were on the outside porch, on the opposite side from where the explosion occurred; and had taken their 2-year-old child to stay with its grandparents that night. The reason given for this was so the child could go to Sunday school the next morning.

Based upon the evidence developed from this investigation, the grand jury indicted Vernon Brown for blowing up the house and also for advocating and teaching sedition and criminal syndicalism. The grand jury also indicted Larue Spiker, Louise Gilbert, I. O. Ford, Carl Braden, and Anne Braden for advocating sedition.

Large quantities of Communist material were found at the residence of the Bradens and the residences of Ford and Bown. Some was found at the home of Larue Spiker and Louise Gilbert.

The following are only a few samples of the material found:

1. "Exhibit of Bacteriological War Crimes Committed by the Government of the United States of America." This was printed in Peiping, China, by the Chinese People's Committee for World Peace.
2. "How To Be a Good Communist."
3. "Thirteen Communists Speak to the Court."
4. "Constitution of the U.S.S.R."
5. Soviet Literature, a monthly magazine printed in Moscow.

There were other articles of the same nature, too numerous to mention.

Exhibit X, attached, is a photostatic copy of a letter apparently written by a man in Lexington, Ky., to I. O. Ford relating to the situation in the coal fields in the Eastern United States. It will be noted that in this letter the writer admits that they are Communists, Marxists, etc., and points out that the miners are fertile subjects for exploitation by the Communists.

Exhibit VI, also attached, is a photostat of a letter dated October 1, 1954, signed "KL," and written on two sides of the page, and photostated in that way, addressed to I. O. Ford. The envelope was postmarked "Los Angeles, Calif." and the letter expresses concern about the communistic material being found in Ford's home and refers to Ford having been on the picket line and also performing other duties.

It is the opinion of the grand jury and the officials that this presents a very serious situation and, in conformity with the recommendations of the Jefferson County Grand Jury of September 1954, a copy of this statement, the attached exhibits, and the grand jury report is being forwarded to those who are interested in such matters. We believe that this matter should be pursued by the Federal authorities, since it does relate to national security, and apparently concerns persons in other parts of the country.

Respectfully submitted.

A. SCOTT HAMILTON,
Commonwealth's Attorney,
30th Judicial District of Kentucky.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, Carl Braden, except for action by the U.S. Supreme Court, would today be in jail where he belongs instead of being field secretary for the Southern Conference Educational Fund, associated with Rev. Martin Luther King, and causing racial strife and agitation throughout the South. The Kentucky telephone directory lists the Southern Conference Education Fund, Inc., at 4403 Virginia Avenue, Louisville, Ky., telephone number SPring 4-3331. The same directory lists the same address and same telephone number for Carl Braden.

The present activities of Carl and Ann Braden are clearly outlined in the following news articles and columns: "Commies Recruiting Members in Hinds?" Jackson Daily News, September 1, 1962; "Southern Conference Educational Fund, led by Shuttlesworth, called Red Trent," the Danville Register, July 11, 1963; "White Women Exhorters Are Known Left Wingers," the Danville Register, July 17, 1963; "Moses Admits He is Carl Braden's Friend," Jackson Clarion Ledger; two columns by Jack Lotto, "U.S. Commies Seek Freedom for Duddies" which appeared in the Houston Chronical and "Dixie Drive by Pro-Reds," Los Angeles Herald Examiner.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, to have these news items printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Jackson (Miss.) Daily News, Sept. 1, 1962]

COMMIES RECRUITING MEMBERS IN HINDS? APPLICATION FORM AT WORKSHOP CITED

(By James M. Ward)

REGISTRATION BLANK: ADULT EDUCATION WORKSHOPS CONDUCTED BY THE MISSISSIPPI ADULT EDUCATION COMMITTEE

Name----------
Age----------
Street address----------
City----------
State----------
Telephone----------

I. If you are a student:

1. What school are you attending?--------
---

2. What is your classification?

Freshman ---- sophomore ---- junior ---- senior----

* * * * *

16. Do your political views differ basically from those of your parents? Yes ----. No ----.

Do they approve of your working in programs for the greater equality of the races? Yes ----. No ----.

Do they or have they participated in such programs themselves? Yes ----. No ----.

17. Do you think that the Negro has a better life in Mississippi —— or in Africa ——?

18. If you had the opportunity to move to Africa, would you be willing to do so? Yes ----. No ----.

19. Do you think that a transition to the Communist system of government would better or worsen the lot of the Negro in Mississippi? Better ----. Worsen ----.

20. Do you think that the need to improve the lot of the poor white is greater than ----, equal to ----, or less than ---- the need to improve the lot of the poor Negro in the South?

SEMINAR REGISTRATION FORM

The Jackson Daily News has intercepted an inflammatory registration form to be completed by Negroes attending "workshops" and "seminars" that are conducted under the sponsorship of Carl Braden, an identified Communist who recently visited Mississippi to drum up support for voter registration and integration activity. The Braden meetings are being held at Mount Beulah Christian College near Edwards, Tougaloo Christian College, and other points throughout the State. Special attention is called to question No. 19.

At a "voter registration" workshop held at Mount Beulah Christian Institute near Edwards under the sponsorship of Carl Braden, an identified Communist and field secretary of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, an inflammatory registration blank was passed out for prospective participants.

A source qualified in such activity said the questionnaire has all the earmarks of a snare for Communist Party membership.

Soliciting various personal background data on candidates for the workshop, the registration blank also asks for information on the participant's desire to engage in voter registration work and agitation for integration in schools, churches, and private facilities.

The explosive portions come near the end of the long form with such questions as:

"Do your political views differ basically from those of your parents. Do they approve of your working in programs for the greater equality of the races?

"Do you think that the Negro has a better life in Mississippi—or in Africa—?

"If you had the opportunity to move to Africa, would you be willing to do so?

"Do you think that a transition to the Communist system of government would better or worsen the lot of the Negro in Mississippi?"

WHAT IT MEANS

An authority on subversion said the latter question was highly interesting. After giving a group of Negroes a heated lecture on how they are being mistreated they would tend to answer they favored a transition to the Communist system. If they did answer in that manner, they were then considered ripe prospects for recruitment into the party. If they signed "yes" and later changed their mind, their original answer could be used as blackmail to make them conform to party discipline and the victim could be used as a dupe.

The questionnaire was used at Mount Beulah in connection with an adult education workshop conducted by the Mississippi Adult Education Committee.

A confidential report by Carl Braden published in full in yesterday's Jackson Daily News revealed Braden instrumental in setting up the workshop and Braden reported that he and Bob Moses, 27-year-old Negro native of New York who has been active in integration attempts in Mississippi within the past 2 years, recruited participants, signing up some 50 to 75 people.

Moses was arrested in Indianola yesterday on a charge of passing out handbills without a permit. Police said he went to jail and made no effort to post the $50 cash bond necessary to be released.

Braden has revealed that he will return to Mississippi in the near future to set up a special workshop at Mount Beulah to plan means of getting the maximum amount of national publicity on "violence and police brutality" in Mississippi.

In connection with his plan, Braden said: "The continued (police) beatings have caused the leadership people in the State to see the great need for a constant stream of reports going out across the country."

Braden's deep interest in voter registration, integration of schools, churches, and private places is not new. Upon release from a Federal prison last February he has resumed a busy schedule of agitation in the South.

Much of the planning for his current crusade was made at a conference on "The Deep South: Ways and Means to Integration" at Birmingham last April 13-14.

The conference was sponsored by the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, Student Non-Violent Co-Ordinating Committee and the Southern Conference Education Fund, Inc.

Participants on the program included Bishop Edgar A. Love, president, Southern Conference Education Fund, Baltimore; Aubrey W. Williams, president emeritus, who made a financial reward to the Reverend F. L. Shuttlesworth, president, Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights and agitation leader in Alabama; Miles Horton, director of the Highlander Center at Monteagle, Tenn., an institution that was closed by the State of Tennessee upon exposure of its pro-Communist training work.

Braden's chief role at the Birmingham rally was to explain his plan for "getting better and fuller coverage in the news media."

Listed on the printed program was the Reverend Murray Cox, Gulfport minister and chairman of the Mississippi Advisory Committee to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights. Reverend Cox, like Braden, has an intensive dislike for the House Committee on Un-American Activities. He recently was a cosigner of an ad in the New York Times urging abolition of the committee.

Reverend Cox did not attend the meeting due to "a conflict" but he said he gave his name to be used as a participant.

Highlander Folk School, shut down by Tennessee as a public nuisance, is out of business and its property is being auctioned.

With Braden's intensive interest in Mount Beulah near Edwards and Tougaloo College, is the successor to Highlander Folk School to be established at one or both institutions?

[From the Danville (Va.) Register, July 11, 1963]

SOUTHERN CONFERENCE EDUCATIONAL FUND, LED BY SHUTTLESWORTH, CALLED RED FRONT

The man who substituted for Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., as the speaker at a rally here last week to protest segregation has been identified as head of a big pro-Communist front, according to a Cincinnati newspaper.

In an article published Sunday, June 9, in the Cincinnati Enquirer, the Reverend Fred L. Shuttlesworth was identified as the new president of the Southern Conference Educational Fund.

According to the article, both the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee and the House Committee on Un-American Activities have described the SCEF as an organization set up to promote communism throughout the South.

This has been confirmed, according to City Manager T. E. Temple, who received a copy of the article.

The same news item notes that new additions to the board of the Southern Conference Educational Fund include the Reverend James A. Zellner, Methodist minister in Panama City, Fla., and father of Bob Zellner, a young white man who has been active in the demonstration movement here. Young Zellner is among 13 who have been indicted for inciting racial violence as a result of the demonstrations.

The article also points out that the field secretary for the SCEF is Carl Braden, of Louisville, Ky., who was among the speakers at a rally here March 26 when King was the featured speaker.

King reportedly is expected here today. He was to be the speaker at a rally July 3 but was replaced by Shuttlesworth after canceling out the previous night.

Shuttlesworth vowed at the time he would return here "and march" but local leaders say he will not be among the group accompanying King here today.

According to the Cincinnati newspaper, Shuttlesworth is pastor of a church in the Ohio city. However, he has become better known as a leader in the Birmingham, Ala., integration movement. He was identified here as national secretary of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, which King heads, and president of the Alabama Christian Movement.

Asked for comment by the Enquirer, Shuttlesworth said: "To a segregationist, integration means communism. I can think of nothing more un-American than the House Committee on Un-American Activities."

Following is the text of the Cincinnati Enquirer article (written by Jack Lotto):

"One of the top leaders of the integration movement in the South has been named head of a big pro-Communist front.

"He is the Reverend Fred L. Shuttlesworth (965 Dana Avenue), pastor of the Revelation Baptist Church, 1556 John Street.

"The post he was elected to is president of the 'Southern Conference Educational Fund,' with headquarters in New Orleans, and active in 17 Southern States.

"Both the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee and the House Committee on Un-American Activities have described the SCEF as an organization set up to 'promote communism' throughout the South.

"This group has a long history of activity in the South. It originally was known as the 'Southern Conference for Human Welfare.' One of its founders was a veteran Communist, the late Louis E. Burnham.

"When the SCHW was cited as a Communist front in 1947 by the House committee, it ostensibly went out of business.

"It quickly reopened at the same New Orleans address, under the new name and with the same telephone number.

"According to the Senate subcommittee, the Southern Conference Educational Fund was 'operating with substantially the same leadership and purposes' of its predecessor.

"Said the House report on the SCHW:

"'It seeks to attract southern liberals on the basis of its seeming interest in the problems of the South. Its professed interest in southern welfare is simply an expedient for larger aims serving the Soviet Union and its subservient Communist Party in the United States.'

"The field secretary for the SCEF, and editor of its publications, 'The Southern Patriot,' is Carl Braden of Louisville, Ky. Braden, identified in sworn testimony as a member of the Communist Party, recently finished serving a 1-year prison term for contempt of Congress.

"New additions to the board of the Southern Conference Educational Fund included the Reverend James A. Zellner, Methodist minister in Panama City, Fla. He is the father of Bob Zellner, the 'freedom-walker' active in the 'Student Non-Violence Committee' and now serving a jail term in Alabama.

"Another board member is Mrs. Diane Bevel of Cleveland, Miss., active in Nashville student demonstrations, and currently working in Alabama and Mississippi.

"She is jailed in Gadsden, Ala., for taking part with Zellner in a prointegration march, following in the steps of William Moore, the postman shot and killed during a one-man protest march.

"Communists and pro-Communists are moving into the South to provoke friction between whites and Negroes. On the scene is James E. Jackson, a member of the four-man secretariat of the U.S. Communist party.

"Jackson, who is propaganda boss in the United States for the Reds, is also the party's secretary for southern and Negro affairs—a polite term for chief racial troublemaker.

"This Moscow-trained Negro has been in the forefront of Communist organizational and agitational work in the South for years.

"In 1959, he went to Russia as representative of the U.S. Communist party at the 21st World Congress of Communist Parties. There, he hailed the Soviet Union and denounced the United States."

Following is the statement given the Enquirer by Shuttlesworth:

"I do not intend to become involved in verbal gymnastics with those, who for years, have prided themselves and made themselves famous for slandering the character of others without proof and for making a mockery of the democratic process which says a man is innocent until proven guilty.

"I have the highest regard for this organization (SCEF), for the work it has done since I have been a member of the board, and I have seen nothing on the part of any persons, with whom I have been associated, to give any substantiation to these charges.

"Generally, the House committees are governed by southerners who will label any organization subversive or communistic that seeks to further the American aims of integration, justice, and fairplay.

"To a segregationist, integration means communism. I can think of nothing more un-American than the House Committee on Un-American Activities."

[The Danville (Va.) Register, July 17, 1963]

WHITE WOMEN EXHORTERS ARE KNOWN LEFTWINGERS

Anne Braden addressed Danville Negroes last night at St. Pauls AME Church. Two weeks ago, Dorothy Day spoke to them at High Street Baptist Church.

Both women have numerous leftwing connections.

Mrs. Braden, for instance, is the wife of Carl Braden, a man who has been identified as a Communist and who has served a prison sentence for contempt of Congress.

A woman who did undercover work for the FBI testified in court both Mrs. Braden and her husband were members of a Communist cell.

Mrs. Braden, a 1943 graduate of Stratford College was described by her husband as editor of the Southern Patriot when the latter accompanied Martin Luther King to Danville in March.

The Southern Patriot is published in Atlanta. It formerly was an organ of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, an organization which went out of existence after the House Un-American Activities Committee described it as a Communist front.

Carl Braden was associated with the Southern Conference for Human Welfare. Now he is field secretary of the Southern Conference Education Fund, which has been described in Congress "as an organization set up to 'promote communism' throughout the State." When the SCEF was founded, it had the same address and telephone number formerly used by the Southern Conference for Human Welfare.

The Washington Star of December 12, 1954, carried an Associated Press dispatch telling about Carl Braden's trial. It read in part as follows:

"LOUISVILLE, KY., December 11.—Newspaperman Carl Braden was branded a Communist today by a surprise rebuttal witness testifying at his sedition trial.

"Mrs. Alberta Ahearn, 44, a Louisville seamstress, said she had been doing undercover work for the FBI in a Communist cell of which both Braden and his wife, Anne, were members.

"Braden testified earlier in the week he was not a Communist and had never been one."

"Dorothy Day, editor of the "Catholic Worker," is a woman who frequently lends her name to leftwing causes.

For instance, she was one of the signers of a petition for executive clemency for Carl Braden and Frank Wilkinson when the cases of the latter two were before the Supreme Court on appeal in February 1961. Wilkinson is head of the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee and has been identified as a Communist.

Miss Day is sponsor of an organization known as Friends of Elizabeth Gurley Flynn and was present at a reception for the Flynn woman on March 29 at the Belmont Plaza Hotel in New York City. Elizabeth Gurley Flynn is chairman of the Communist Party of the United States.

According to the Communist Party organ Daily Worker on May 12, 1963, Miss Day praised "the Alderson Story," a biography of Elizabeth G. Flynn.

The Brooklyn Tablet on October 20, 1962, carried an article in which it was stated Miss Day had made a trip to Cuba and attacked American policy toward Cuba.

In the June 18, 1963, issue of the weekly magazine National Review, a book review of Garry Wills described her in this manner:

"Dorothy Day goes among the poor to prove things about poverty and anarchy that the poor would be the last to believe in—as she went to Cuba last year to help the Cubans by pointing out to them how Castro resembles Christ."

Priscilla L. Buckley, managing editor of National Review, yesterday called Miss Day politically very naive and a far-left passivist who, in her peace-promotion efforts, will do such things as refuse to take shelter during civil defense test alerts.

She described the Catholic Worker, which Miss Day edits and publishes as a tiny little mimeographed sheet that is totally lay and is neither sponsored nor connected with the Catholic Church. The Catholic Worker, she said follows fairly closely to the Communist line on peace.

Shortly after the execution of the Red spies Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, the Catholic Worker carried an article written by Miss Day entitled "Meditation on the Death of the Rosenbergs."

This article said, in part: "They were children of that race in which Mary and Jesus and Joseph, the Holy Family, belonged. In their humanity, they more closely resembled Jesus than we do who are not Jews. Let us have no part with the vindictive state and let us pray for Ethel and Julius Rosenberg."

[From the Jackson (Miss.) Clarion Ledger]

MOSES ADMITS HE IS CARL BRADEN'S FRIEND

GREENVILLE.—Voter registration worker Robert Moses of New York testified Thursday he was a friend of Carl Braden and had seen him recently at a workshop sponsored by the Southern Conference Education Fund.

Moses' testimony came during a hearing before Federal District Judge Claude Clayton on a Justice Department suit seeking release of 45 Negroes arrested during a march at Itta Bena last month.

A. H. Bell, attorney for the Leflore County Board of Supervisors, questioned Moses about his connections with Braden and the SCEF, which a House Un-American Activities Subcommittee cited as a Communist-front group. Braden refused to answer questions about whether he was a Communist.

Moses testified he was not a Communist.

Asked about Braden, a Louisville, Ky., man, the 28-year-old Moses said, "I consider him a friend." He also said he had seen Braden recently at a SCEF workshop at Atlanta.

The hearing was expected to continue several days.

Defending the county were Bell and Assistant State Attorney General Guy Rogers. Representing the Justice Department were special Assistant Attorney General John Doar and Attorney John Martin.

Moses, a New York City Negro, said he was in Mississippi "Because I'm interested in helping my people in Harlem. If Mississippi Negroes can defeat with their votes the men in Congress who block and defeat worthwhile legislation, then all Negroes will benefit."

He also said he came "to help alleviate injustice" and said he felt Mississippi voting laws were unjust.

Moses, a field secretary for the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, was questioned about food distributed to needy Negroes by SNCC in Leflore County this spring.

Asked if SNCC required recipients to seek registration as voters, Moses said:

"We required that a minimum requirement because there was a shortage of food and we didn't have enough to go around. But there were cases of great individual need when we gave the food without requiring that * * *."

Asked if SNCC workers had credit cards for use in telephoning the Justice Department, Moses said they did not and:

"We usually pay for the calls ourselves. When there is a matter that the Justice Department is particularly interested in, we sometimes call collect."

He said "SNCC workers were paid expenses, room and board, and $10 a week when we have the money."

Also testifying were workers Willie Baxter, 19-year-old Itta Bena woman, and Willie H. Magee, 22, also from Itta Bena. They were among the 27 Leflore County prisoners called to testify.

The woman said a tear gas bomb was thrown into an Itta Bena church June 18 while a voter meeting was in progress.

Magee testified the group decided after that to go looking for police protection. He said at one point they found an officer 2 blocks from the church, so returned to continue the meeting.

But, he said, "the church was full of gas and we came out again. The officer we saw, I don't know who he was, was gone, so we decided to go looking for protection, walking two by two."

He said another group of Negroes began throwing bottles and bricks at them and the arrests followed. Officers testified the original group did the throwing.

Magee said he had never been intimidated by Leflore officials because of his activities and the offcials had not interfered with his meetings.

Asked if the group had been refused police protection, he said, "I don't know."

[From the Houston (Tex.) Chronicle, 1962]

U.S. COMMIES SEEK FREEDOM FOR BUDDIES

(By Jack Lotto)

Pro-Communists and their supporters are doing their Christmas shopping early this year.

They have asked President Kennedy to play Santa Claus and free two identified Communists jailed for contempt of Congress.

Red sympathizers and/or dupes are working also to get the general public behind their petitions for Executive clemency.

In effect, the groups trying to open prison doors for Frank Wilkinson of Los Angeles and Carl Braden of Louisville, Ky., want the President to slap the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Freeing the defiant pair could be interpreted as a sign of Presidential disapproval of the committee.

Wilkinson is the coordinator of the intensive nationwide pro-Red effort to destroy or utterly discredit the important House group.

He and Braden, active in the South, were jailed for 1 year for refusing to answer any committee questions, including whether they were party members.

The U.S. Supreme Court upheld their convictions. They began serving their terms May 1.

At least four groups are distributing signature petitions for clemency. They are the New York Council to Abolish the House Un-American Activities, the Los Angeles Citizens Committee to Preserve American Freedoms, the Chicago Committee to Defend the Bill of Rights and the Southern Educational Fund, headquartered in New Orleans.

A few days ago, two delegations turned over petitions collected so far to President Kennedy's special counsel.

One delegation was headed by Prof. Otto Nathan of New York. Nathan, executor of the late Albert Einstein estate, has refused to affirm or deny Communist Party membership in congressional appearances.

Braden is field secretary of the Southern Conference Education Fund, cited officially as a national Communist front by the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee.

Identified under oath as a Red, Braden also was active in the drive to abolish the House committee.

The biggest Red front leading the operation to kill the House subversion-probing committee is the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee.

ECLC Chairman Harvey O'Connor, of Little Compton, R.I., is soon starting a coast-to-coast tour to drum up public support for his pals and collect funds.

[From the Los Angeles (Calif.) Herald-Examiner]

DIXIE DRIVE BY PRO-REDS

(EDITOR'S NOTE.—To help its readers keep on guard against propaganda, the Herald-Examiner brings you this authoritative weekly roundup.)

(By Jack Lotto)

One of the top leaders of the integration movement in the South has been named head of a pro-Communist front.

He is the Reverend Fred L. Shuttlesworth, of Birmingham, Ala.

The post he was elected to is president of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, headquartered in New Orleans, and active in 17 Southern States.

LONG HISTORY

Both the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee and the House Committee on Un-American Activities have described the SCEF as an organization set up to promote communism throughout the South.

This group has a long history of activity in the South. It originally was known as the Southern Conference for Human Welfare. One of its founders was a veteran Communist, the late Louis E. Burnham.

When the SCHW was cited as a Communist front in 1947 by the House committee, it ostensibly went out of business.

It quickly reopened at the same New Orleans address, under the new name and with the same telephone number.

According to the Senate subcommittee, the Southern Conference Education Fund was "operating with substantially the same leadership and purposes" of its predecessor.

Said the House report on the SCHW—"(It) seeks to attract Southern liberals on the basis of its seeming interest in the problems of the South. Its professed interest in Southern welfare is simply an expedient for larger aims serving the Soviet Union and its subservient Communist Party in the United States."

The field secretary for the SCEF, and editor of its publication, The Southern Patriot, is Carl Braden, of Louisville, Ky. Braden, identified in sworn testimony as a member of the Communist Party, recently finished serving a 1-year prison term for contempt of Congress.

OTHERS

New additions to the board of the Southern Conference Educational Fund included the Rev. James A. Zellner, Methodist minister in Panama City, Fla. He is the father of "Freedom Walker" Bob Zellner, active in the "student nonviolence committee," and now serving a jail term in Alabama.

Another board member is Mrs. Diane Bevel, of Cleveland, Miss., active in Nashville student demonstrations, and currently working in Alabama and Mississippi.

She was jailed in Gadsen, Ala., for taking part with Zellner in a prointegration march, following in the steps of postman William Moore, who was shot and killed during a one-man protest march.

Communists and pro-Communists are moving into the South to provoke friction between whites and Negroes. On the scene is James E. Jackson, a member of the four-man ruling secretariat of the U.S. Communist Party.

MOSCOW-TRAINED

Jackson, who is propaganda boss in the United States for the Reds, is also the party's secretary for Southern and Negro affairs.

This Moscow-trained Negro has been in the forefront of Communist organizational and agitational work in the South for many years.

In 1959, he went to Russia as the representative of the U.S. Communist Party at the 21st World Congress of Communist Parties. There, he hailed the Soviet Union and denounced the United States.

[From The Worker, Dec. 3, 1960]

RALLY TO ABOLISH THE HOUSE UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES COMMITTEE—TO URGE CHRISTMAS CLEMENCY FOR FRANK WILKINSON AND CARL BRADEN—TO PAY TRIBUTE TO FIRST AMENDMENT DEFENDANTS WHO HAVE FOR YEARS FOUGHT IN THE COURTS AGAINST HUAC AND SIMILAR COMMITTEES

Speakers: Prof. Fowler Harper, Yale Law School, civil liberties; James Higgins, assistant editor, York, Pa., Gazette & Daily Advocate; Ring Lardner, Jr., Academy Award Winner screenwriter; Ernst Mazey, Detroit Trade Union Official; Pete Seeger, folklorist and singer, first amendment defendant; Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth, Birmingham, Ala., integration leader; Gore Vidal, playwrite, author, "The Best Man"; Mrs. Frank Wilkinson, wife of HUAC abolition leader.

Place: Wednesday, December 6, 8 p.m. sharp, Manhattan Center, 34th Street and 8th Avenue. Contribution 99 cents.

Auspices: New York Council to Abolish HUAC, 150 W 34th Street, New York, Staten Island. Dr. Otto Nathan, chairman; Dr. Alexander Meiklejohn, honorary chairman; Rev. Lee H. Ball, treasurer and Youth To Abolish HUAC; Mrs. Sandra Rosenblum, chairman. Telephone PE 6-3228.

Contribute to New York Council To Abolish HUAC, 150 West 34th Street, New York 1, N.Y.

I enclose $____ for ____ tickets at 99 cents each December 6 rally.

Name _____

Address _____

Make checks payable to Rev. Lee H. Ball, treasurer.

Mr. THURMOND. Having placed in the RECORD certain information on Mr. Braden and his connections with the Negro demonstration movements, I call to the attention of my colleagues another example of a direct connection of a supposed former Communist with the proposed August 28 march on Washington as exposed in the Plain Dealer of Cleveland, Ohio, on August 16, 1963. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that this article entitled "Two Freedom March Buses Booked by Admitted Red: Reinthaler Acts Here for CORE" be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TWO FREEDOM MARCH BUSES BOOKED BY ADMITTED RED—REINTHALER ACTS HERE FOR CORE

(By William C. Barnard)

Eric J. Reinthaler, who has admitted Communist Party affiliations, has been identified by Cleveland police as the reservation agent for one of the Cleveland groups sending freedom march buses to a mass Negro demonstration in Washington on August 28.

Reinthaler, 39, a longtime participant in civil rights movements here, has a long record of affiliations with the Communist Party and its front organizations, police said yesterday.

In a 1958 trial Reinthaler admitted he had been a Communist up until 1954.

Members of the Cleveland department's special investigation unit said Reinthaler identified himself as the contract agent for the Cleveland chapter of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), a militant Negro civil rights organization, in the chartering of two Greyhound buses for the trip.

CORE has announced it will send 78 persons to Washington to participate in the freedom march. The 2 CORE buses are part of a cavalcade of 8 chartered buses and a private plane that will be taking more than 350 Clevelanders to the Nation's Capital for the Negro civil rights demonstration.

Civil rights leaders have said that more than 100,000 persons from scores of cities will participate in the protest.

The Cleveland delegation is being organized by a newly formed civil rights group, the United Freedom Movement (UFM). A spokesman for UFM last night denied knowledge of Reinthaler's role with CORE and said UFM's arrangements were not connected with CORE.

Following Plain Dealer efforts to reach Reinthaler and other CORE officers, a call was received from Bruce Warshal, who identified himself as vice president of Cleveland's CORE chapter. He made this statement:

"CORE has certain admission requirements which Reinthaler has met. We ask two questions of prospective members: (1) Do you believe in civil rights and equality between the races? (2) Do you believe unequivocally in nonviolence?

"Every member is asked this and we do not ask what his other affiliations are or have been."

Lt. Martin P. Cooney and Sgt. John J. Ungvary of the special investigation unit of the police department said Reinthaler made arrangements for the buses through a travel agent. At that time he left a $50 deposit.

Last Saturday Reinthaler and an official of CORE sent a telegram to the agent confirming the arrangements, the officers said. In the telegram Reinthaler listed himself as the contract agent for CORE and gave his home phone number, they said.

In 1958 Reinthaler and six other persons were convicted on charges of conspiracy to violate the Taft-Hartley law in U.S. district court here.

The seven were found guilty of conspiracy to file false non-Communist affidavits with the National Labor Relations Board. U.S. District Judge Paul C. Weick, now an appellate judge, sentenced Reinthaler to 18 months in the Federal prison at Milan, Mich., and fined him $2,500. Reinthaler served the term after losing higher court appeals.

Reinthaler was identified in the trial as an officer of a Cleveland local of the United Electrical Workers which was expelled in 1948 from the Congress of Industrial Organizations, now merged into the AFL–CIO. The Taft-Hartley law requires union officers to submit affidavits stating whether they ever were Communist Party members.

In the trial, Reinthaler admitted being a member of the Communist Party at various periods from 1938 to 1954. He said he was a member of the Communist Party in Cleveland, Steubenville and Youngstown and had been a Communist organizer in the Steubenville area.

The Reverend Charles W. Rawlings, director of the Office of Religion and Race of the Cleveland Presbytery, who is assisting in the UFM protest cavalcade, said: "We cannot stop fighting for racial justice because these causes have been exploited by organizations such as the Communist Party for their self-interest."

Clarence H. Holmes, president of the Cleveland branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and leader of UFM, said he was surprised that CORE was sending its own buses. He said all arrangements for the civil rights movement in Cleveland were to be coordinated by the UFM.

The Plain Dealer was unable to reach Reinthaler last night for comment.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in my remarks additional articles from the Plain Dealer as follow:

"Reinthaler Joined Communists Twice; Was Only 14 First Time," on August 16, 1963.

"UFM Brass Denies Link to Reinthaler," on August 16, 1963.

"CORE Weighs No Policy Change," on August 17, 1963.

Also, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at the conclusion of these articles an excerpt from hearings by the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee on legislation to limit the appellate jurisdiction of the U.S. Supreme Court and dated February 26, 1958.

There being no objection, the articles and excerpt were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UFM BRASS DENIES LINK TO REINTHALER

Leaders of the United Freedom Movement, which is sending 363 Clevelanders to Washington for the August 28 March for Freedom demonstration, yesterday denied any ties with Eric J. Reinthaler who has arranged for two buses to take part.

"Our six buses are completely separate from the two being sent by the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE)," explained Mrs. Carriebell Cook, general chairman for the UFM Washington project.

Mrs. Cook was called by the Plain Dealer following disclosure by Cleveland police that Reinthaler, who has admitted Communist ties in the past, figured in the CORE bus arrangements.

"The first I knew that CORE was sending buses was when I read it in the newspapers," said Mrs. Cook, who is employed at city hall as director of manpower retraining for the city.

"I never even heard of Eric J. Reinthaler," she said. "We are screening out all who would violate the spirit of this march. The purpose is peaceful throughout. Only responsible citizens sincerely interested in civil rights will ride on our buses."

When asked whether he knew of Reinthaler's Communist background, Arthur Evans, Jr., chairman of the arrangements for CORE's Freedom March activity, said: "I don't think it's my responsibility to tell you that."

Later Evans said: "I know him as a member of the local chapter of CORE. What other organizations he had belonged to was no concern of mine."

Mrs. Cook has been busy taking reservations from individuals for the UFM buses at the Cleveland office of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, 9293 Cedar Avenue SE. She said reservations for the CORE buses would not be accepted there.

Both CORE and NAACP are part of the United Freedom Movement, a federation of more than 30 organizations active in the civil rights field. It was formed several months ago under leadership of the NAACP to gain Negro rights in housing, education, and employment.

Nationally, CORE and the NAACP have been feuding. The NAACP's traditional approach to obtain Negro rights has been through the courts. The Supreme Court decision of 1954 ruling out segregated schools crowned these efforts by the NAACP. CORE on the other hand, uses direct action such as sitins.

The maverick CORE buses, two in number, are priced at $12.50 per seat. The UFM buses will leave Cleveland at 7 p.m. August 27 from the Karamu House parking lot 2355 East 89th Street. The CORE buses leave at midnight from the Church of the Covenant (Presbyterian), 11205 Euclid Avenue.

[From the Cleveland Plain Dealer, Aug. 16, 1963]

REINTHALER JOINED COMMUNISTS TWICE; WAS ONLY 14 FIRST TIME

Eric J. Reinthaler, who is listed as a bus contract agent for the Cleveland branch of the Congress Of Racial Equality, began his Communist affiliation at a young age.

At his Federal conspiracy trial here in 1958, Reinthaler testified he joined the Young Communist League in Youngstown in 1938 when he was 14 years old and attending Youngstown Chaney High School.

At the time he was working in the steel mills in Youngstown, he said, the Communist Party was active in the Little Steel Strike. He said he stayed in the party league until 1941.

In 1943 Reinthaler went into the Army and served in France and Germany as a machine gunner. He was wounded December 12, 1944, and was hospitalized, he related. He was discharged from the Army in 1946.

Reinthaler said he received the Purple Heart, the Good Conduct Metal and European campaign ribbons for his military service.

Reinthaler said he joined the Communist Party in 1946 when he went to work for Republic Steel Corp. in Youngstown.

He told the court he remained in the Communist Party until 1954.

From 1948 until 1950, he related, he had been an organizer in the Ohio Valley Section of the Communist Party with headquarters in Steubenville.

In 1949 the Daily Worker, the Communist party organ in the United States, reported Reinthaler was among protestors in New York on behalf of top Communist leaders on trial in the first of a series of Communist conspiracy trials.

Labor records show that Reinthaler had been a steward, an executive board member, the legislative secretary and an editorial writer for Local 735 of the United Electrical Workers Union.

Reinthaler, whose last known address was 1568 Ansel Road NE., was born in Salem, Oreg., on January 7, 1924. He moved to Youngstown in 1936 and to Steubenville in 1948.

He came to Cleveland in 1950 for treatment at Brecksville Veterans' Administration Hospital.

Reinthaler had attended Bethany College in Bethany, W. Va., and later studied at Western Reserve University. He was dismissed at WRU in 1953 for bad grades.

In 1952 he represented himself to city officials as a member of the Progressive Party when he was protesting the arrest of a friend.

In 1953 the Cleveland Council on World Affairs expelled Reinthaler after his Communist affiliations were disclosed. The Plain Dealer at that time ran news stories revealing that Reinthaler had worked his way up to membership on a policymaking group of the council.

Reinthaler served 18 months in a Federal prison for his conviction in the conspiracy trial. Six others, including Fred and Marie Reed Haug, once influential labor leaders here, were convicted of a conspiracy to violate the Taft-Hartley law by filing false non-Communist affidavits with the National Labor Relations Board.

CORE WEIGHS NO POLICY CHANGE

(By William C. Barnard)

No change in the membership policy of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) is contemplated, a spokesman for the organization said yesterday following disclosure Eric J. Reinthaler is an active member.

Reinthaler, 38, of 1568 Ansel Road NE., was convicted in 1958 of a Communist conspiracy to violate the Taft-Hartley law by filing false non-Communist affidavits with the National Labor Relations Board.

Reinthaler was identified by police as the reservation agent for two buses chartered by CORE to take interested Clevelanders to Washington on August 28 to participate in the Washington freedom march.

Bruce S. Warshal, vice president of the Cleveland chapter of CORE, said his group had nothing to hide and confirmed that Reinthaler is on the CORE bus committee.

"His past is known and he freely admits it. Eric has met all the requirements of our organization and is a sincere member," Warshal said.

Warshal said he knew Reinthaler was not a Communist at present because of his actions. He said Reinthaler was a dedicated worker for civil rights. "We cannot ask any more of him as a member," Warshal said.

The only requirements for membership in CORE, Warshal said, are that the applicant believe in civil rights and in nonviolent action. He said Reinthaler subscribed to these policies.

Warshal criticized the Plain Dealer for publishing the story.

"It was gutter-type journalism by a third-rate newspaper," he said.

"The story was a smear on the entire civil rights movement," Warshal protested.

He would not comment, however, on whether Reinthaler's membership in CORE was detrimental to the civil rights movement.

In the 1958 conspiracy trial, Reinthaler admitted being a member of the Communist Party at various times from 1938 to 1954. He served 14 months of an 18-month sentence. Police said his participation in Communist activities was extensive.

Anton Krchmarek, who identifies himself as spokesman for the Communist Party of Ohio, issued a statement to the Plain Dealer yesterday. Commenting on the Reinthaler case, he said:

"The position of the Communists * * * is no secret. Why then did the Cleveland Police Department at this time choose to publicize actions of individuals in supporting the historic freedom march to Washington? Clearly, it can be only for one purpose—an effort to disrupt the freedom march by use of the old Red-baiting tactics.

"In doing so the Cleveland Police Department is lending itself as a cat's paw to the racists, the Birchites, and reactionaries who are seeking to block human progress."

EXCERPTS FROM SENATE INTERNAL SECURITY SUBCOMMITTEE HEARINGS ON LIMITATION OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION OF THE SUPREME COURT

FEBRUARY 26, 1958

Mr. FORBES. On January 6, 1958, 8 persons were brought to trial in Federal court in Cleveland, Ohio, on "charges of conspiracy to file false non-Communist union officer affidavits (form 1081) with the National Labor Relations Board" under a provision of the Taft-Hartley law. According to a Department of Justice release dated January 23, 1957, the indictment alleged these individuals "were aware that statements and representations * * * made in the affidavits" denying membership in the "Communist Party, were false." The indictment accused the defendants of conspiring "to fake resignations from the Communist Party and conceal the plot by using aliases, secret codes, and other deceptions." (See the Evening Star, Washington, D.C., Jan. 24, 1957, p. A-30.)

(The additional incidents referred to follow:)

"Two of the defendants, Marie Reed Haug and her husband, Fred Haug, are also charged with having signed false non-Communist affidavits in a previous indictment. The other six defendants who allegedly conspired with the Haugs to willfully violate the Taft-Hartley law provision were Edward Joseph Chaka, Hyman Lumer, Sam Reed, Andrew Remes, Eric Jerome Reinthaler, and James S. West. This case was the first of its kind in which prosecution was instituted by the Department of Justice. The indictment charged a direct relationship between alleged subversives in the labor field and national leaders of the Communist Party, U.S.A. Listed in the indictment as coconspirators but not as defendants were the following eight known Communist officials: Joe Brandt, Martin Chancey, Gus Hall, Frank Hashmall, Anthony Krchmarek, Steve Nelson, Sidney Stein, and John Williamson. Since their January 1957 indictments, the defendants have been supported by two newly created defense organizations in the Midwest. According to recent letterheads, Mrs. Betty Chaka is secretary of the Committee for Taft-Hartley Defendants, room 202, 2014 East 105th Street, Cleveland 6, Ohio, and Rev. Harold H. Hester and Harry J. Canter are affiliated with the Provisional Committee To Aid Victims of Taft-Hartley, room 402, 189 West Madison Street, Chicago 2, Ill." (See National Guardian, Dec. 23, 1957, p. 3.)

"As chairman of the Provisional Committee To Aid Victims of Taft-Hartley, Canter is a veteran of the Communist movement in the United States. In 1930, he was a Communist candidate for Governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. During that period, he served 1 year in a Massachusetts jail for carrying a banner 'in Boston's Sacco and Vanzetti demonstration, denouncing the Governor Fuller as the murderer of these two workers * * * '. Canter was listed as an instructor at the Communist Abraham Lincoln School in Chicago, Ill., during its 1943 fall session." (See Special Committee on Un-American Activities, appendix IX, 1944, p. 292. Special Committee To Investigate Communist Activities in the United States, Investigation of Communist Propaganda, pt. 5, vol. 4, 1930, p. 757; and HUAC, Guide to Subversive Organizations and Publications, 1957, p. 5.)

"In 1956, Canter was secretary of the James Keller Defense Commission, of room 325, 431 South Dearborn Street, Chicago 5, Ill. This organization was apparently a defense front for James A. Keller, who had been 'ordered deported in 1953 on charges of past membership in the Communist Party.' A 1955 indictment against Keller was dismissed last year when the Supreme Court ruled in the case of United States of America v. George I. Witovich that 'an alien awaiting deportation was not compelled to answer questions about Communist activities.' According to the June 23, 1957 issue of the Worker, Sunday edition of the recently defunct Communist Daily Worker, Canter wrote a congratulatory letter to this paper's editor." (See Daily Worker, May 17, 1957, p. 3, and Firing Line, July 1, 1957, pp. 6 and 7.)

"The Provisional Committee To Aid Victims of Taft-Hartley is currently using the office facilities of the Chicago Joint Defense Committee To Defeat the Smith Act. Formerly known as the Claude Lightfoot Defense Committee, the Chicago Joint Defense Committee's October 1957 letterhead reflects their following officers: Leon Katzen, chairman; John T. Bernard, vice chairman; Geraldine Lightfoot, projects director; and Richard Criley, publicity and research. Katzen, Bernard, and Criley were identified as members of the Communist Party before the House Committee on Un-American Activities in 1952. Both Katzen and Criley have been listed as Communist leaders. Like Canter, Geraldine Lightfoot and Katzen are former instructors of the aforementioned Abraham Lincoln School." (See HUAC, annual report, 1952, pp. 29 and 31, and HUAC. Testimony of Walter S. Steele Regarding Communists Activities in the United States, 1947, p. 52.)

Mr. THURMOND. These articles report that an active participant in the march on Washington is Eric J. Reinthaler, who twice joined the Communist Party and who was convicted and was sentenced to serve 18 months beginning in 1958 for conspiring to "fake resignations from the Communist Party and concealed the plot by using aliases, secret codes and other deceptions" in violation of the Taft-Hartley Act. The Plain Dealer articles report that Mr. Reinthaler was convicted in 1958 of "a Communist conspiracy to violate the Taft-Hartley law by filing false non-communist affidavits with the National Labor Relations Board." They also show that leaders of the CORE chapter in Cleveland have confirmed that Mr. Reinthaler is a member in good standing and that the only requirements for membership in CORE, according to Mr. Bruce S. Warshal, vice president of the Cleveland chapter, is that the applicant believe in civil rights and nonviolent action.

Mr. President, it is incomprehensible that any organization in this country would have such a lax policy for accepting membership and particularly in permitting leadership such as has evidently been given to Mr. Reinthaler with his authority to arrange for transportation of CORE members to Washington for the march on the Nation's Capitol. This appears to be in line, however, with the stand that Mr. A. Philip Randolph, chairman of the march on Washington committee, has taken with regard to his vice chairman, Mr. Bayard Rustin, whose unsavory record as a former member of the Young Communist League and who has been convicted as a sex pervert and for refusing to serve in the Armed Forces of this country, was laid bare on the Senate floor by me on August 13. Mr. Randolph and other spokesmen for his committee continue to insist that Mr. Rustin will be Mr. March on Washington despite his ludicrous record. Evidently, Mr. President, many ministers, rabbis, priests, and others will march under his command on August 28 because even with the revelation of this information none of these religious leaders indorsing the march has backed off.

Mr. President, as further evidence of the tie-in between communism and the Negro demonstrations, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in my remarks an article from the September 1963 issue of the Christian Herald entitled "Road to Riot: George S. Schuyler Presents One Negro Viewpoint." The author of this article, Mr. President, is the associate editor of the Negro newspaper, the Pittsburgh Courier.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ROAD TO RIOT—GEORGE S. SCHUYLER PRESENTS ONE NEGRO VIEWPOINT

Considering the recklessness of the agitators currently leading Negroes, it need surprise no one if we see in America a bloody massacre similar to that which disgraced South Africa at Sharpeville in 1960, when police fired into a crowd, killing 89 demonstrators.

That the Negro demonstrations in America are spontaneous and unrehearsed is a major imposture of the times. Far from being a grassroots flareup of indignant innocents panting for drastic reforms, they are a part of a carefully concocted program generaled by experts in mobism.

It would be a grave error to overlook the real grievances of the Negro, as it would also be to ignore the great advances made in his status since World War II. When the present generation was born, prominent Negroes had already perfected the techniques of exploiting discontent, and there was plenty to be discontented about.

Save in a few northern and eastern communities, racial discrimination, segregation, and exclusion were rife, lynching was still going on although declining, all transportation into and out of the South was rigidly segregated, there were separate racial schools everywhere in the South and in many parts of the North and West, and of course there were no general hotels and restaurants that would serve Negroes, nor any filling stations whose facilities they could use.

Department stores were reluctant, or refused, to permit Negroes to try on garments: the service was studiedly rude so that bourgeois colored women either sent their maids to shop for them or waited until they could go to New York or Chicago. Theaters and movie houses relegated Negroes to balconies or galleries, if they admitted them at all, and the Nation's Capital was the worst offender. Everywhere Negroes were bulldozed or beaten by the police.

Civil service, even outside the South, was largely a white preserve. Housing was an acute problem whenever the Negro wished to move from his racial district, even more so than it is today. The columns of Negro newspapers have been filled for years with accounts of colored homes bombed, burned, or defaced, because their owners had the effrontery to move into a white district. Even if a Negro wished to operate a business, he could do so only in his own neighborhood, rarely downtown because of the virtual impossibility of getting a lease.

Publicly owned recreational facilities such as swimming pools, golf courses, tennis courts, and zoos were barred to Negroes or a special time set aside for them.

At the same time Negro illiteracy was being wiped out rapidly, tens of thousands of Negro students were matriculating in colleges and universities the country over, great athletes were bringing honor to the United States in Olympic games and to the alma maters at home, black boxers were dominating the field, a million young Negroes in uniform had been segregated and discriminated against at home and abroad.

It would have tried the patience of Job, and the Negro is not made of the stuff that will take treatment like this lying down. He was and always has been—contrary to some unlettered opinion—ready to fight. The question was how, where, and when.

During the same period, through the efforts of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the National Urban League, the large church denominations, and labor unions, the lot of the Negro was being gradually improved. Through the years the NAACP had won a score or more cases before the U.S. Supreme Court which broke the color bar in tax-supported colleges, killed the white primary, ended the Jim Crow car and bus in interstate travel, compelled the equalization of school moneys and teachers' salaries, forced open tax-supported recreational facilities, outlawed residential covenants excluding Negroes. Finally, with the Supreme Court decision of 1954–55 desegregating schools, it did not seem far to the promised land of full equality.

The Army, Navy, Air Force and Coast Guard had been integrated by President Truman. Washington's racial barriers had been cast down by President Eisenhower. A score of States had fair employment practices laws, and because of this, significant advances had been made in jobs and in union membership.

The rigid Jim Crow barrier in organized religion was slowly being lifted in token fashion. Some big corporations were at last seeking out Negro graduates even before graduation. In a half hundred cities the Urban League was getting an increasing share of Community Chest funds for Negroes and making significant openings in employment. In the theater, on the concert stage, in art and literature, the postwar period was the golden age for Negroes.

Quite likely the rapidity of these successive reforms stimulated rising expectations and increased the appetite for more. There was a growing impatience with moderate advances and gradualistic approaches. The erstwhile nostrum of politics nowhere brought the advertised utopia, although it did bring some Negroes political preferment and minor reforms. Negroes became keenly aware, more so than ever, of the vast gulf separating them from their white neighbors in wages, job opportunities and social restrictions. A cause of vast bitterness was the persistent circumvention of court rulings on desegregation of public schools, and the dead end confronting the ambitious young Negro throughout the South who sought anything better than menial work in his community.

Where at first the Negro demands were far from extreme and the agitation was locally generated and controlled, it was not long before the direction of the campaign against Jim Crowism was seized by professionals from afar, versed in mass pressure techniques and in creating hysteria. From mild demands which local authorities might have granted, there were soon strident shouts for immediate revolutionary changes which officials could not meet because the majority of whites would not tolerate them. The evidence from Albany, Ga., Jackson, Miss., Birmingham, Ala., indicates that it was outside agitators, the trained men from Nashville, Atlanta, New Orleans and New York, who kept the fires burning.

The NAACP was caught flatfooted by the well-trained corpsmen of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) and the Students Non-Violent Co-ordinating Committee, many of them schooled in special techniques at secret sessions subsidized by certain white individuals sharing the philosophy of mass pressure. The NAACP is now stressing immediacy as strongly as the less responsible groups. Like them it has refused to let up pressure anywhere along the line, although it is being hurt by the bite of other groups into the civil rights dollar while it has to pay the fines and go the bail of youngsters arrested for sitting-in, swimming in, kneeling-in and other challenges to local law and order.

Now the Negro cries for revolutionary changes are rising more loudly. Demands are being made that leaders know cannot be fulfilled, but they have a tiger by the tail and dare not let go for fear of being labeled "Uncle Tom" and deserted by the more hysterical. There are many who seem to welcome the strife that must inevitably come when the patience of law enforcement officers runs out. They daily warn that demonstrations will continue unless all their demands are met. They say literally or in effect that "the white man is scared." They have seen him run out of Asia and Africa; have noted that Washington rushed to recognize Castro, laid out the red carpet for Lumumba and Adoula, supported Nasser and Nkrumah; and they figure whites will surrender here without a real struggle, if they keep on challenging them. They perhaps rightly observe that the West has gone soft due to unprecedented luxury and high wages. They fail to distinguish the difference between globally oriented Washington politicians, international-minded big-city officials, and persons in the hinterland; or the undisciplined neurotic and vainglorious white youth in congested urban centers.

Examination of the cast of characters reveals that it consists of a hierarchy of professional agitators schooled in sit-in tactics that were imported by American labor unions in 1937, after a successful trial by the French Confederation of Labor the year before. These sit-in strikes were revelatory and effective, and were not lost upon Negroes seeking solutions to the color bar and its attendant evils. There was also ample though not encouraging precedent in the Coxey's Army march of 1894 and the pathetic Bonus Marchers of 1932, as well as the jobless demonstrations engineered by the Communists of that period.

One of the most respected leaders today is A. Philip Randolph, president of the International Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, a longtime advocate of mass pressure and founder of the march on Washington movement. It was this threat to march a band of 10,000 Negroes into Washington that pressured President F. D. Roosevelt into issuing his Fair Employment Practices Executive Order 8802, 3 days after the Nazis attacked their erstwhile Moscow allies. Ever since then, Randolph has been in the forefront of Negro leadership. Today's marches on city halls and executive mansions, culminating in the proposed march of 100,000 Negroes on the Nation's capital to speed passage of a sweeping civil rights law, is an indication of the effectiveness of these ideas now re-echoed by younger men. Other Negro leaders who now wholeheartedly support this program in the name of non-violent civil disobedience, had sat on their hands in 1941—when it was first proposed by Randolph—content to confer and draw up resolutions.

A year later the Congress of Racial Equality was founded by James Farmer, a pacifist, which brought to perfection the tactic of sit-ins in public places excluding Negroes from service. For years CORE restricted its activities largely to nonsouthern areas, enlisting an interracial corps of intrepid individuals willing to brave clubbings and arrests to break down the color bar. CORE took the lead in testing supposedly integrated buses and trains in Dixie, and later waiting rooms and lunch counters in bus and railroad stations.

There were other organizations set up in the period after World War I which concentrated on Negro agitation. One of the earliest was the African Blood Brotherhood headed by a "voluntary" Negro, Cyril Briggs in the twenties in Harlem; the American Negro Labor Congress of 1925, headed by Lovett Fort-Whiteman, who soon took off for the Soviet promised land and remained. This was followed by the League of Struggle for Negro Rights of 1930. Others included the Communist-dominated Federal writers' and theater projects; the very profitable Scottsboro case which the astute colored Communist leader, Benjamin J. Davis, Jr., snatched from the NAACP, thus keeping the Reds' larder filled for years; the International Labor Defense, an arm of the Third International, which was able to penetrate Negro churches and organizations by parading a succession of Scottsboro "mothers" all over the country, taking up collections and delivering incendiary speeches. Other directly Red-inspired or at least pink-tinted organizations were the Sharecroppers Union; the Negro Labor Councils; the Negro Labor Victory Committee; and the Civil Rights Congress.

They all had their part in training adherents and agitators.

Most influential of the efforts to mold Negro opinion favorable to a Soviet America was the National Negro Congress. Ostensibly formed by Howard University professors, the plan for it actually originated in the New York County Committee of the Communist Party and was carried to Howard by Manning Johnson and another Communist. According to Johnson, who was a member, John P. Davis, secretary of the congress, was later elected to the National Committee of the Communist Party. The president from 1936 to 1940 was A. Philip Randolph. He resigned, saying, "I quit the congress because it is not truly a Negro congress." Out of some 1,200 or more delegates, over 300 were white, and obviously of Communist persuasion.

The first Negro president of Howard University, Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, now a member of the Washington, D.C., Board of Education, was publicly identified with Communist doctrines by Judge James A. Cobb, of the Municipal Court of the District of Columbia, testifying before the House Committee Against Un-American Activities.

Another witness, the very respected Dr. Kelly Miller, for 45 years a faculty member, testified about a conference held at Howard on May 18, 19, and 20, 1935, presided over by President Johnson. Miller said that he was astonished to hear the fiery speeches by Dr. W. E. B. DuBois, Professors Emmet Dorsey and Abram Harris, James Ford (quadrennial vice presidential candidate of the Communist Party), and Eric Waldron, correspondent of the Communist Daily Worker and surprised that President Johnson sat through it all without comment and apparently with approval. (HUAC, vol. 3, p. 2148, Oct.-Nov. 1938.)

Lawrence A. Oxley, an official of the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the U.S. Department of Labor, attended every session of this conference and found it "distinctly communistic in character. * * * There seemed to be but three ways out for the Negro. (1) The answer of the Socialist Party; (2) the answer of the Communist Party; (3) the answer of the American Labor Party."

"During the course of the last session, May 20," said Mr. Oxley, "I heard Mr. Ford and Mr. Dorsey advocate the overthrow of the American Government, if necessary, to secure the objectives of the program sponsored by the conference" (p. 2149 HUAC, vol. 3, November 1938).

It is illuminating to read what was outlined at the secret Communist Party convention in Bridgeman, Mich., on August 22, 1922, attended by subversives and unkindly raided by the Michigan constabulary who carted off two barrels of documentary proof. The blueprint for Negroes reads: "In order that the Negro may be reached with education and propaganda and that he may be organized for activity, the following methods are recommended:

"1. Nuclei shall be established in all existing Negro organizations, such as fraternal, religious, and labor organizations, cooperatives, tenant farmers' leagues, etc.

"2. Colored organizers and speakers shall be sent among Negroes to inform them and win their confidence.

"3. Newspapers and publications shall be established or, when this is not feasible, news service shall be established by friendly cooperation with colored newspapers of liberal tenets.

"4. Friendship of liberal-minded Negro ministers shall be sought as these men are at the present time the leaders of the Negro masses and many of them are earnest but lack scientific knowledge.

"5. Conferences on the economic conditions shall be held from time to time with these ministers, educators and other liberal elements, and through their influence the party shall aim to secure a more favorable hearing before the Negro masses.

"6. By means of its membership the party shall penetrate the existing forums, literary societies, lyceums, schools, colleges, teachers' institutes, etc., of the colored people, and establish forums of its own for the enlightenment of the Negro population.

"Where other forms of activity are impossible or impracticable, as in certain southern districts, cooperatives may be formed."

This prescient program of 40 years ago has been followed to the letter. Thousands of Negro students, professors and preachers are prepared to lead and support extremist strategy. With opportunities for leadership sparse, Negro intellectuals were easily beguiled with honorary positions in front organizations, chairmanship at dinners and meetings, and grosser forms of interracial persuasion at which the Communist conspiracy is adept. Many did not even know where their guidance was coming from and indignantly denied any Red membership or connection—as if that made any difference so long as they served the Communist purpurpose. A fancier of old Communist-front letterheads and the columns of Red newspapers will find enough names of prominent Negro leaders to fill a book; many of these people are the intellectual authors of the present disturbances.

When Jacques Duclos, the French Communist leader, with one stroke of the pen, in 1946 snatched the Communist Party U.S.A. away from 20th century Americanism, which it had opportunistically adopted while American arms were making the world safe for the Soviet Union, the party fell upon evil days. Security agencies were smiting the comrades hip and thigh. The revival of Self-Determination-for-the-Black-Belt, the outsing of nine Red unions from the CIO, the Peekskill riot, the presentation to the United Nations by the NAACP's Dr. DuBois and Walter White of a charge of American genocide against Negroes, even the triumphant Communist Peace Conference at New York's Waldorf-Astoria (endorsed by the first Negro president of Fisk University, Dr. Charles S. Johnson) could not rescue the above-ground party from the doldrums. It was then that a new Red policy on Negroes was adopted. It meant abandonment of front organizations and concentration on boring from within existing Negro groups.

In July 1931, when Robert Minor, a veteran Communist boss, quoted approvingly an editorial "No Menacing Red" in the powerful Negro weekly, Afro-American, it was almost alone among the 150 colored weeklies in its position. Twenty years later this was a popular view in editorial offices, and one big newspaper had as many as four fellow-traveling columnists.

The Afro editorial said in part: "The Reds are going our way. Like ourselves they represent a feared and hated cause. They are the first white group since Emancipation to advocate race, social equality and intermarriage for those who wish it. In fact there is more real Christianity among white Communists than in the white YMCA the white Christian Endeavor Societies or the white so-called Christian churches. The Reds are no menace to Negroes. In fact, it is comforting to find groups of such people as Communists in this color-mad world."

Interestingly this newspaper had no comment when in the midfifties the Communists set up a Jim Crow school in Harlem because of racial tension and discrimination at its Jefferson School in Greenwich Village.

The People's Voice, a Negro weekly of large Harlem circulation founded by Congressman ADAM CLAYTON POWELL, was soon dubbed the "Uptown Daily Worker" because of its news and editorial content and fiery volumns by Paul Robeson and Lena Horne, which left no doubt of its ideological kinship with the Afro-American. On the Pacific coast, the widely circulated California Eagle was equally a mouthpiece for Red ideas.

These are among the influences that shaped the thinking of the current crop of agitators.

Irresponsible demagoguery on both sides will lead some day, somewhere, to a bloody conflict which could spread as rapidly and as far as the demonstrations have, and the outcome of which will have to be martial law and eventual dictatorship. As Bernard Shaw has observed: "Bravery is sometimes a form of stupidity," and some may cynically agree with the Communists that "You can't make an omelet without breaking eggs," but the risk is an American Sharpeville. While this may satisfy those who favor Red revolution, it is scarcely guaranteed to advance the cause of the Negro. Even Gandhi discovered that nonviolence frequently leads to violence because few leaders can control hysterical followers, and bedeviled police armed with shotguns and rifles may not always withstand showers of rocks and bottles with calm and fortitude.

It is a most alarming development when leaders of a people shout, "No compromise." "No moderation." Since the Negro wishes to remain in America, embittered violences on both sides will not bring any real integration or guarantee our national security nor insure our survival as a democracy which has brought the greatest freedom and highest living standards in all history to its citizens, black and white.

Mr. THURMOND. I expect to have additional information to present to the Senate on the question of whether there are Communist connections and influences in the Negro demonstrations and agitational efforts. I have stated, and I state here again today that I am certain that many persons involved in these demonstrations are sincerely seeking to serve some end other than advancing the cause of communism. I am convinced, however, that there are also some who are sincerely carrying out the orders and aims of the Communist Party U.S.A. So I renew here today my request that this entire matter be looked into without further delay by the Congress.

In concluding my statement, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD my weekly newsletter for August 19, 1963.

There being no objection, the newsletter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHO IS WORKING FOR THE KREMLIN

(By U.S. Senator STROM THURMOND)

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS of August 2, 7, and 13, and the Senate Commerce Committee hearings on S. 1732, are filled with information from public sources which prove that there is Communist influence in and penetration of the current Negro demonstrations and agitational efforts in this country. Unfortunately, all requests for investigations of these demonstrations, which have caused violence and bloodshed across this country, have fallen on deaf ears and closed minds. The only antidote suggested to solve all this—as if anything could, including complete surrender by the Congress to all demands of the rioters—is passage of the President's power-laden and unconstitutional civil rights program.

FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover has emphasized to the Congress and also to the public in his books, "Masters of Deceit" and "A Study of Communism" that a primary objective of the Communists in this country is to foment and exploit racial strife and disorders. Indeed, the key propaganda terms used by the Communist Party U.S.A. are the words "equality" and "peace."

Testimony by a former Communist before the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee in 1957 corroborates Mr. Hoover's point about the Red goal in the United States of America. Frank S. Meyer told the subcommittee: "The major drive * * * to penetrate the movement of the Negro people * * * has nothing to do with any interest in the aims and desires of the Negro people, but is a realization by the Communist Party that that movement can be used as the most important and strongest cutting edge against the constitutional structure of the United States, by trying to develop a removal of division of power guarantees in the Senate, and secondarily, by the fact that they believe * * * that at this time in a prosperous country this is the only place in which serious trouble can possibly be stirred up, in which there are serious possibilities of developing what they call mass struggles of building up extraconstitutional and extralegal actions, and so on."

Here is a quote from Mr. Hoover's book, "Masters of Deceit": "The party's sole interest, as most American Negroes know, is to hoodwink the Negro, exploit him, and use him as a tool to build a Communist America."

Later he told the House Appropriations Committee on March 3, 1961: "The sit-in demonstrations in the South were a made-to-order issue which the party fully exploited to further its ends."

The evidence in the hearings and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows that the man most generally credited with inciting and organizing the riots, Dr. Martin Luther King, has had top assistants with questionable backgrounds. One of these, Bayard Rustin, has admitted being a former member of the Young Communist League and having served jail sentences for sex perversion, lewdness, and refusing to serve in our Armed Forces. He has also been arrested on numerous occasions. Now he is Mr. March on Washington, serving as vice chairman of the August 28 march on Washington. How can ministers, rabbis, and priests march to Lincoln Memorial on August 28 under such leadership?

Dr. King has been a lecturer at the Highlander Folk School with admitted Communists and pro-Communist characters. This school has been closed by the State of Tennessee and cited as subversive by the attorney general of Georgia. There is much more public evidence in the RECORD and even more to be obtained by a penetrating investigation into the current riots.

There is no question but that many persons participating in these disturbances are sincerely seeking to obtain some end other than advancing the cause of communism. However, there are also some who are sincerely carrying out the orders and aims of the Communist Party, U.S.A. A recent article by the National Editorial Association say Gus Hall, head of the CPUSA, has issued secret orders for Reds to infiltrate the demonstrations, especially the march on Washington.

Columnist Holmes Alexander has made the point that "if it's true, as seems evident, that the Communists are trying to exploit the civil rights issue, the best way to spoil their game is to expose them." The Washington Evening Star has also stated that "all concerned—both white and colored—have a right to know just who is working for the Kremlin in this matter."

With these comments, I concur completely, as do many others who are likewise not satisfied with the efforts to sweep this vital question under the rug with passage of more unconstitutional civil rights legislation and addition of more dictatorial police powers for the Attorney General.

Mr. THURMOND. Also, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at the conclusion of these remarks a news dispatch which was printed in the Los Angeles Times of Los Angeles, Calif., on August 14, 1963. This article, which is entitled "Senator Raps March Organizer as Ex-Red: Target of THURMOND Attack Admits Being Former Communist, Jailed Draft Evader" written by Mr. Andrew J. Glass, of the New York Herald Tribune staff, contains a report of my remarks on the Senate floor on August 13 about Mr. Bayard Rustin. It also has an interview with Mr. Rustin on the charges I made, and it is interesting to note that he affirms the principal charges I made, refusing to comment on one which is a matter of public record, and denies only one point I made.

Mr. Rustin specifically denies that he ever traveled to the Soviet Union as was reported in my speech, but he does admit that he was one of the organizers of the 1958 pacifist march to which he referred "and would have been proud to have joined them in Red Square." I wish to point out to the Senate that my point about Mr. Rustin having visited the Soviet Union in conjunction with this parade came from an Associated Press news dispatch from New York which quoted Mr. Rustin to this effect. However, regardless of the accuracy of the AP report on this point, I think Mr. Rustin's reply to this charge makes a distinction without too much of a difference.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATOR RAPS MARCH ORGANIZER AS EX-RED—TARGET OF THURMOND ATTACK ADMITS BEING FORMER COMMUNIST, JAILED DRAFT EVADER

(By Andrew J. Glass)

WASHINGTON.—Senator STROM THURMOND, Democrat, of South Carolina, charged Tuesday that the chief organizer of the August 28 civil rights march on Washington is a former Communist who spent 28 months in jail during World War II for refusing to register for the draft.

The South Carolina Democrat inserted what he said was the police record of Bayard Rustin, the 53-year-old deputy director of the march, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The file, he said, includes a 1953 conviction for sex perversion and a subsequent arrest for vagrancy and lewdness.

CITES DISSATISFACTION

"Many people across the country," the southerner told the Senate, "are not satisfied with the Attorney General's efforts to whitewash the question of Communist influence or involvement in these Negro demonstrations which have been turning into race riots in various cities in this country."

(Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy informed the Senate Commerce Committee last month that the Justice Department had "no evidence" that the Negro equality drive was inspired by Moscow.)

Rustin, who runs the march headquarters from the community center of Harlem's Friendship Baptist Church, confirmed both his wartime prison term and his former Communist membership.

CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTOR

"As a Quaker and a pacifist," he told the Herald Tribune News Service, "I was opposed to all participation. I notified the draft board 2 years before I was arrested that I could not support the military effort in any way."

While a student at City College of New York in 1936, Rustin said, "I joined the Young Communist League because at that time, I thought they were deeply concerned with social justice." He said he "broke completely" with the YCL in June 1941, after the Nazi attack on Russia. At the time, the league accepted racial segregation in the Armed Forces and "their true intentions became crystal clear."

RUSSIAN TRIP DENIED

"In 1958," Senator THURMOND further alleged, "(Rustin) saw fit to travel to the Soviet Union and meet with the butchers of the Hungarian freedom fighters to participate in a Communist propaganda show called 'Non-Violent Action Committee Against Nuclear Weapons.'"

Rustin termed this "an absolute lie." He said he had never been to the Soviet Union, although he was one of the organizers of the 1958 pacifist march and "would have been proud to have joined them in Red Square."

Rustin declined to comment on the morals charges which allegedly were lodged against him in Pasadena, Calif., and involved two other men.

A spokesman for the march said all comments on the affair must come from A. Philip Randolph, director of the rally. Randolph was at an AFL-CIO summit meeting at Unity House, Pa., and could not be reached.

RUSTIN BACKGROUND

The spokesman, however, recalled that the ministers backing the march had spoken of "redemption." He also noted that the conviction was 10 years old.

"They can not get Randolph, they can not get King, they can not get Wilkins—so they go after Rustin," the spokesman said.

Rustin was secretary to Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference from 1956 to 1960. Wilkins is executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored Peaple.

Arrested more than 25 times in the South for his role in the civil rights fight, Rustin said he once spent 30 days on a North Carolina chain gang. Along with Randolph, he came here last week to brief 60 legislators on the coming mass demonstration.

Asked recently whether he wanted Rustin to resign, Randolph replied: "Why Heavens, no. He is Mr. March himself."

Mr. THURMOND. I think it would also be appropriate at this point, Mr. President, to include in the RECORD an editorial from the Columbia Record on August 20, 1963, entitled "Red Influence on Capital March." I ask unanimous consent to have this editorial placed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RED INFLUENCE ON CAPITOL MARCH

Administration spokesmen looked up and declared innocently that they saw no Communist cloud hanging over the August 28 March on Washington. They couldn't see it for the rubescent smog.

Senator THURMOND took the Senate floor to call attention to the pink haze in the atmosphere. He cited public documents for proof.

The vice chairman of the committee in charge of the Nation's biggest civil rights demonstration is Bayard Rustin, who has a long record of Communist and leftwing associations, although he declined to join the Communist Party.

He was incarcerated 28 months in Federal prisons during World War II for failure to abide by the selective service law. More than a conscientious objector, he refused to do patriotic Government work or to stand a physical examination.

Rustin admits that he was a member of the Young Communist League and attended a Communist Party convention, as an observer. He participated in a Communist propaganda show in Moscow. He is a friend of Communist Dictator Nkrumah, of Ghana. He has been actively associated with organizations that have been officially designated as Communist fronts.

One of his boasts is that he has been jailed more than 20 times for civil rights activities. He has police records in California, New York, and North Carolina. He pleaded guilty to a charge of sex perversion and has been convicted for vagrancy and lewdness.

This unsavory record was called to the attention of A. Philip Randolph, of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, chairman of the march on Washington committee. Asked if he wanted Rustin to resign, he replied, "Heavens, no. He's Mr. March himself."

Granting that it is true that Rustin is "Mr. March on Washington," even the most ardent and colorblind integrationists should be able to see the red aura of influence that is pervading the Washington protest scene. If their eyes and ears do not inform them, at least their nostrils should.

ANTIBALLISTIC MISSILE DEFENSE

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, the Senate now has before it for consideration one of the most crucial and vital issues of our time. I refer to the nuclear test ban treaty before the Senate on the question of ratification.

On any issue before the Congress, but particularly on this vital issue affecting the military security of our Nation, it is absolutely necessary that the testimony presented to the Congress be candid, forthright, and unequivocal. Some of the testimony on the test ban treaty, in my opinion, fails to meet the standard which should be enforced. Unfortunately, since the subject is both technical and subject to security restrictions, it is most difficult for the Senate to enforce the forthrightness which it could otherwise require. As a result, there is an ever-present danger that both the Senate and the public may be misled by some of the testimony, particularly the public testimony, and the generalizations contained therein.

Official witnesses from the executive branch, as is to be expected, have sought to make the strongest possible case for ratification of the treaty. We can and do expect the officials of the administration to make the strongest arguments in support of their conclusions that the treaty is in the best interest of the United States. The facts upon which those conclusions are based, however, should not be subject to bias in presentation. It is against the facts themselves, upon which the Senate must weigh the conclusions of the executive branch and, thereby, the merits or demerits of the treaty.

I am particularly disturbed by the testimony of the Secretary of Defense on August 13 before the Committee on Foreign Relations. Let me say at this point that while I disagree completely with many of his conclusions, it is not with his statement of conclusions that I take issue now; rather it is with the manner in which the facts were presented. The presentation of factual matters was unbalanced to the extent that it was misleading. The testimony of the Secretary of Defense was lengthy, and I will make no attempt to point out all of the instances of unbalance. I will illustrate by point with one particular aspect of his testimony—that pertaining to the antiballistic-missile field—in some detail; and then briefly call attention to several other rather glaring instances.

Historically, the U.S. position in support of a prohibition of nuclear testing has been based, whether publicly acknowledged or not, on the premise that a cessation of nuclear testing would have a strong tendency to preserve an existing U.S. superiority in nuclear power. This is a worthy motive, but one which is based on a fundamental premise that the United States does, in fact, have such a superiority to protect. Probably the most fundamental question to be answered by the Senate on the issue of ratification of the proposed treaty, therefore, is whether the United States does now have a superiority in nuclear power.

In approaching the estimate of whether the United States or the Soviet Union has a superiority, the question initially resolves itself into two related, but distant aspects—technology and arsenal, or knowledge and weapons. And in each field of nuclear power, strategic and tactical, offensive and defensive, this distinction exists. It is possible that the two elements—technological superiority and arsenal superiority—do not coincide. One side may have the greater quantity and quality of weapons in a particular field, while the other may have a superiority in technology, although lapse of time will usually insure that at some point the superiority of knowledge and weapons will coincide. Productive capacity, or the lack of it, on one side, could prevent the coincidence of the two, of course.

When the question of superiority, or "who's ahead," in a particular field comes up, therefore, it must necessarily relate, unless specifically limited, to both the questions of technology and weaponry. The field of antiballistic missiles is no exception. Superiority in the field of ABM's involves really two questions, knowledge and weapons.

The Secretary of Defense testified on the subject of antiballistic missiles, and in order that there may be no question of quoting him out of context, I ask unanimous consent that the portion of the Secretary's prepared statement dealing with antiballistic missiles, and the closely related subject of penetrability of U.S. ballistic missiles, be printed in full in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request by the Senator from South Carolina? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. THURMOND. The Secretary, after describing in general terms the nature of the problems in any antiballistic missile system, stated: "The last of these two items, resistance to blackout effect and warhead technology depend on nuclear testing." The Secretary then pointed out that the United States has the capability, without further testing, to weaponize ABM warheads. He did not specifically mention the Soviet capability in this regard.

On the question of resistance to blackout effect, the Secretary stated:

> As for the blackout problem—and these observations, incidentally, apply to communications blackout as well as to ABM radar blackout—Soviet and United States experience appears to be comparable although obtained in different ways.
>
> Each side has had about the same number of high altitude tests, and over yield ranges and altitude ranges which are comparable though not identical. By theoretical analysis of presently available data, we believe we can adequately predict effects over the range of yields and altitudes in which we are most interested. We will be able to design around the remaining uncertainties.

Mr. President, it is in the field of resistance to blackout effect that the most serious problem of technology arises. This falls generally into the field of weapons effects. On this question, the Secretary of Defense stated:

> As for the blackout problem—and these observations, incidentally, apply to communications blackout as well as to ABM radar blackout—Soviet and United States experience appears to be comparable although obtained in different ways.

That, Mr. President, is a most deceptive statement.

Testimony in classified session has spelled out the particular tests in detail which have been conducted by both sides. This testimony cannot be discussed in public. Two statements which have been released to the public belie the Secretary's assertion, however.

The statement of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, delivered by General Taylor, included this statement on weapons effects:

> It is indicated that the U.S.S.R. is ahead of the United States in the high-yield (tens of megatons) technology, in weapons effects knowledge derived from high-yield nuclear explosions.

Thus, the Joint Chiefs of Staff assert categorically and without equivocation that the Soviets are ahead in weapons effects technology in the high yields.

Dr. Edward Teller put it even more emphatically, and I quote from his publicly released statement:

> There is one field of particularly great importance where we have reason to believe that the Russians have acquired a decisive lead. This is the investigation of the effects of nuclear weapons.

The Secretary's most carefully worded statement that "each side has had about

The Economist

AUGUST 31, 1963

America's Underdeveloped Tenth 725
What Price the Grand Design ? 726
Is a Boomlet Round the Corner ? 728
India's Shake-Up 729

COMMENTARY 731
The West ; Building Workers ; Britain and South Africa ; Arab World ; Decimal Coinage ; Trades Union Congress ; Vietnam ; Obituary.

THE WORLD
INTERNATIONAL REPORT
The Squeeze on German Farming 734
India ; Spain ; Saudi Arabia ; Russia and Jugoslavia ; African Railways ; Malaysia ; Spies for Prosperity ; France ; Norway.

AMERICAN SURVEY
Taxes through Mr Mills 743
March for Restraint ; Strike Shunted Aside ; Aid to the Wall ; Package Deal ; Clubs for the Country ; Braceros, Stay Home ; Cigarettes Sent Down ; Shorter Notes.

BRITAIN
Shadows without Substance 749
Poor Little Rich Town ; Cost of Living . . . and Wages ; New Guy's House ; Alice in the Banks.

BOOKS
Grand Design ? 753

LETTERS 721

BUSINESS
Hire Purchase Faces Ford 757
Paint's Troubles Under the Skin 759

BRITAIN 761
Nationalised Industries ; Bank Advances ; Motors ; Overseas Trade ; Dennys ; Insurance ; Our Incomes ; Science ; Trading Stamps ; Tankers ; Shorter Notes.

INVESTMENT 766
Investment Statistics ; British Relay ; Merrill Lynch Going Public ? ; Unigate ; Bowater Paper ; Engineering Reports ; Triplex Holdings ; H. J. Heinz ; Doxford and Sunderland ; British Match.

INTERNATIONAL 770
Ireland's New Plan ; German Capital Market ; Shipping ; Denmark ; Rubber ; German Public Enterprise ; The Costa del Sol Sees Shadows Ahead ; Japan ; German Cars ; Air Law ; Air Traffic Rights.

Money and Exchanges 784
Stock Prices and Yields 786

Annual Postal Subscription by ordinary mail UK £6 ; overseas £6 10s. ; by air see page 723.
VOLUME CCVIII - NUMBER 6262

© The Economist Newspaper Limited 1963

America's Underdeveloped Tenth

THIS summer's racial outburst in the United States comes one hundred years after the Emanicipation Proclamation and thirty years after the New Deal: it revives the battles of both and the answer to it can only be a synthesis of both. Emancipation brought full citizenship to Negroes in theory but not in practice ; the New Deal laid a floor under poverty but left many Americans sitting on that floor—and most of those who are still sitting there today are Negroes. Wednesday's march on Washington was for "Jobs and Freedom"—and jobs were put first. This year revolt has spread all over the country because it has become a demand for the economic opportunities that are denied to the Negro everywhere, not just for the civil rights that are formally available to him—even in the South if he dares to use them.

More and more Negroes are daring to use them even there, as has been shown lately by the numbers who have exercised their right of assembling to petition for the redress of grievances. These demonstrations have shown, too, that America's Negroes are no longer prepared to give way before their white fellow citizens, that the subservient mentality of slavery has at last been thrown off, not only by the Negro leaders—the Ralph Bunches, the Robert Weavers, the Martin Luther Kings, the James Baldwins—but by most of the rank and file as well. This should have become obvious years ago, when the first Negro children walked calmly through the jeering ranks of white adults to their desegregated schools. It certainly became obvious this year as battalions of Negroes of all ages faced fire hoses and flocked willingly to gaol—and on Wednesday when 200,000 of them paraded (see page 744) with impressive respectability and more impressive restraint. But the economic and cultural legacies of slavery have to be thrown off. The twenty million Negroes are no longer a submerged tenth of the American nation but they are still an underdeveloped tenth. They are, overwhelmingly, on the seamy side of affluence and, as long as they lag behind the rest of the country in this way, no real integration is possible.

What is needed, it has been suggested, is a domestic Point Four scheme, a crash programme to make up to the Negro for a century of neglect, to give him the opportunities that came automatically to other immigrants (and which they were better prepared to take). Negroes, it is claimed, need special assistance to bring their way of living up to the general level of American society, to get them out of the slum of cultural backwardness that inhibits all but a few of the exceptionally gifted from trying to escape. Only in this way, it is said, can the average Negro child become one whom white parents are happy to have their children go to school with ; undeniably, as things are, a heavy influx of Negro pupils lowers standards of behaviour as well as of education ; this is no slur on the Negroes but on those other Americans who have not given them the aid for their development that America offers to poor peoples everywhere else. Only in this way can the average Negro family become one that those other Americans will greet as neighbours.

Crash programme or not, such a scheme for Negro development cannot work out its benefit for at least a generation. Meanwhile, what would satisfy the Negroes, or at least enough of them to lessen the ever-present and growing danger of race violence, would be more and better work. The percentages of long-term and teenage unemployment, high as these are for the American labour force as a whole (over 10 per cent in June), are far higher among the Negroes in these groups. In both cases the only real remedy lies in acquiring more education and more skill. But until now jobs have not been offered to Negroes even if they have had the necessary training—and so few of them have bothered to obtain it. Those who have still find that they earn less than whites ; this includes even college graduates.

Many of this summer's demonstrations—boycotts of businesses and picketing of building sites, for example—have been directed against this kind of discrimination by employers and by trade unions ; and so, for much longer, have the efforts of both the Administration and the national labour organisation. Things have got better. It is at any rate becoming worth while for Negroes to take advantage of the various schemes for making them—and all the jobless—more employable which the President has been urging Congress to pass.

Some, if not all, of these measures will probably get through by the end of the year. So, probably, will some, if not all, of the President's proposals for giving the federal authorities more power to bring lawsuits on behalf of Negroes who have been denied their right to vote, to send their children to white schools, to eat in a hotel or to use a lavatory. But, inevitably, the impact of all this will be frustratingly slow also—too slow, it is feared, for the Negroes who have not yet had time to stomach the restraint that goes with power, who are disillusioned, and have reason to be, with the gradual approach. Yet this is the only sure way of making progress without disrupting the country, in the opinion both of the Administration and of the Negroes' own traditional leaders. This week's march on Washington, begun as an attempt to bring pressure on Congressmen, became an attempt to take pressure off them by enabling those who have been demonstrating all summer to let off their remaining steam in one final blast.

The more sophisticated of the younger Negroes are unlikely to be content with this. What their older, more responsible leaders, who are Americans first and Negroes second, fear is that, under the influence of such groups as the Black Muslims and the men who are now proposing a Negro political party, the United States will be split on racial lines even more glaringly than it is already. The whites are helping to make this a real danger ; many who accept the aspirations of the Negroes, or who think they do, have been shocked by the recent Negro assertiveness. This year's demonstrations have brought Northerners bang up against the real facts of racial segregation for the first time ; many find themselves openly sympathising with what in the past they called southern prejudice. And the civil rights legislation in Congress brings yet another encroachment by the federal government on the powers of the states and on the independence of private property. America's race problem reaches into the recesses of all its other problems.

All this has suddenly made the Negro question the most serious political issue in the country and one that must have an important, though as yet incalculable, effect on next year's election. The racial crisis, even though it is the mirror image of the same problems in other and different countries, is also one more reason why the attention of Americans is returning to their own problems and away from those of the world. What really would do most good would be sweep away the pockets of economic depression, the inadequate schools and worse housing that blight American affluence. A joint effort to do this would benefit whites and Negroes alike. Presidents have been asking for such an effort ever since the war with little success. Just possibly, this year's flare-up of the American conscience may burn such a programme through Congress. If it does, it will mean a fresh drain on America's money and on its trained experts. Full employment could help powerfully but, unless disarmament frees resources, there will be that much less left for the underdeveloped abroad ; development, which is the only right form of charity for free men, will begin at home, even though it cannot end there.

What Price the Grand Design ?

General de Gaulle's Europe is not the only possible one

BEING the product of a team of anonymous journalists, The Economist does not, at least deliberately, make a habit of arguing with itself in public. But this week it proposes to make an exception to the rule for a review of two books on America and Europe, appearing on page 753, which comes from a valued outside contributor. The review's importance is that it throws cold water on Mr Kennedy's grand design for a partnership between America and Europe which The Economist has believed, and continues to believe, to be the right goal for the West.

That there should now be signs of a revulsion from the orthodoxies of the period when Britain was actively seeking to enter the European common market is natural after the failure of that endeavour. Many people who doubted the wisdom of " going into Europe," and the real prospects of the Atlantic purpose it was supposed to serve, but who were silenced by the roar of the flowing tide, are now emerging from cave and grotto to point out that the tide was bound to ebb and that rocks, rockier even than the person of General de Gaulle, would have stopped it sweeping inland in any case.

Thus, the reviewer objects that, on the American side, support for European unity has no roots in the " tradition of American foreign policy " and that for many Americans it has been a covert form of neo-isolationism, " a means of safely liquidating a series of European commitments into which the United States has been drawn over the past twenty years " ; and, on the European side, that there never has been a potential counterweight to America, because the rump of the continent west of the Elbe is too vulnerable to nuclear attack. Even if a partnership could be set on its feet, probably " a true co-ordination of policy would give way to spheres of influence." In short, the Americans were always wrong to encourage the Frankenstein of European union ; Gaullism is inevitable ; partnership has always been a pious fraud.

At a time when we still reel from General de Gaulle's bodyblows, the thesis is alluring. But its underlying assumptions about the nature of modern national power seem old-fashioned, just as the general himself does even to Europeans to whom his independence from America has its appeal. For

Pub. Accomm.
Kentucky

Hotel-Motel Desegregation in Kentucky

by

Frank D. Bean, Jr.

A Report Prepared for the Commission on Human Rights, with the Assistance of the Social Research Service,
University of Kentucky

Commission on Human Rights
Commonwealth of Kentucky
Frankfort, Kentucky
August 1963

Pub. Accomm. Gen.

Joint Memorandum

THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE
INSTITUTE OF HUMAN RELATIONS
165 EAST 56 STREET • NEW YORK 22, N. Y.

THE ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE
OF B'NAI B'RITH
515 MADISON AVENUE • NEW YORK 22, N. Y.

SUBJECT: Governors' Executive Orders Against Discrimination

FROM: Paul Hartman and Theodore Leskes

DIGEST: Governors of five states have issued executive orders to insure equal opportunities regardless of race or color.

One result of the growing sensitivity in this country to the need to eliminate racial discrimination has been the recent issuance of Executive Orders by State Governors. Their objective is to assure the fullest possible cooperation of the executive branch of the state government in the efforts to achieve the goal of equal opportunity for members of racial minorities in those areas in which the executive arm of the state exercises some control. Five such executive orders are summarized below.

It should be pointed out that the scope of the authority of a Governor to issue an executive order depends on the constitution and the statutes of that particular state. Hence, an executive order issued by one Governor cannot be used as a model in another state without examination of that state's constitution and laws.

Some provisions in these executive orders may be subject to contest as exceeding the Governor's authority; in such case, it will be for the courts to determine their validity.

INDIANA

Executive Order No. 4-63 issued on June 10, 1963 by Governor Matthew E. Welsh

In the preamble the Executive Order refers to the Civil Rights Act of 1961 as amended in 1963 which declares the equal access to and use of public accommodations a civil right. The preamble further points out that the executive branch of the government is charged with an obligation to assure that those laws are fairly administered.

Part I of the body of the Order contains a direction to all executive departments and agencies whose functions relate to providing, supervising or licensing persons or organizations doing business as places of public accommodation, to take all action necessary and appropriate to prevent racial or religious discrimination

(a) in public parks, state forests, museums, libraries, meeting rooms, health services and other public facilities owned or operated by the state government;

(b) in all places of public accommodation licensed by or subject to the supervision of any department of the state government.

Part II of the Order requires all executive departments and agencies involved to use their good offices and to take such other appropriate action "permitted by law" to promote the abandonment of discriminatory practices by all permittees or licensees. Each department and agency must submit to the state's Civil Rights Commission within 60 days a report outlining all programs it administers which are affected by the Order.

Part III of the Order directs the chief administrative officer of each executive department or agency administering such programs to proceed "with all deliberate speed" toward full compliance with the state laws against discrimination and the Executive Order. This responsibility is declared to be non-delegable.

MINNESOTA

Executive Order issued on June 10, 1963 by Governor Karl F. Rolvaag

The Order starts with the statement that the public policy of Minnesota prohibits discrimination because of race, creed, color or national origin. It declares that every government contract may be cancelled or terminated by the state when there is racial or religious discrimination in the hiring of labor by the contractor, subcontractor, material supplier or vendor performing work pursuant to a contract for the State of Minnesota or any of its subdivisions.

The Order provides that when there is a complaint of discrimination in connection with a government contract, the Commissioner of Administration shall investigate and, if necessary, conduct a hearing to determine whether or not discrimination exists.

In case a second act of discrimination is established, the Commissioner, in addition to suspending, cancelling or terminating a contract, may declare all money due or to become due, pursuant to such contract, forfeited to the State of Minnesota.

KENTUCY

Executive Order No. 63-485 issued on June 26, 1963 by Governor Bert Combs.

The preamble states that the denial of equal opportunity of access to places of public accommodation because of race, color, creed or national origin is unfair, unjust and inconsistent with the public policy of the Commonwealth of Kentucky. It further states that the executive branch of the state government, in enforcing the anti-discrimination laws of Kentucky and the United States, is charged with the obligation to assure that those laws are fairly administered and that their benefits are made available to all citizens without discrimination.

The Order requires all executive departments and agencies whose functions relate to the supervising or licensing of persons or organizations doing business or practicing a profession to take "all lawful action necessary and appropriate" to prevent racial or religious discrimination. These departments and agencies are also required to take all "appropriate action permitted by law, including the revision of rules and regulations," to promote the abandonment of discriminatory practices by all permittees or licensees under their jurisdiction. Each executive department and agency affected by the Order is directed to submit a report to the Governor within sixty days on its current program related to the Order. The Order concludes with a requirement that the chief administrative officer of each executive department or agency administering programs affected by the Order proceed "with all deliberate speed" toward a program of full compliance with the Order's purposes and intent. This responsibility is declared to be non-delegable.

NOTE: Subsequent to the issuance of this Order, Governor Combs issued a statement clarifying various points of the Order. He stated that under the Order first consideration should be given to the area covered by the recently adopted ordinance of the City of Louisville. This ordinance prohibits discrimination in places of public accommodation which are defined as places of business "offering or holding out to the general public services or facilities for the peace, comfort, health, welfare and safety of the general public, including places providing food, shelter, recreation, entertainment or amusement." (See Joint Memorandum No. 389, issued July 23, 1963) Gov. Combs further stated that his Order would be "construed to authorize only those steps which have been directed or clearly implied by decisions of the Federal Courts or Kentucky Court of Appeals."

ILLINOIS

Executive Order Establishing a Code of Fair Practices issued on July 10, 1963 by Governor Otto Kerner

The preamble opens by referring to the Emancipation Proclamation issued by Abraham Lincoln 100 years ago. It notes that President Lincoln's home state, Illinois, has been a leader in implementing his principles assuring the full rights of citizenship to all its residents. The preamble then declares that today new challenges are confronting us, and that we must guarantee dignity and equality of opportunity to all if the land of Lincoln is to be true to its heritage.

The body of the Code starts with the declaration that all persons are entitled to equal and fair treatment by the state without regard to race, color, creed, or national origin. It states that any official or employee of the State of Illinois who denies to any person the full and equal enjoyment of the facilities or privileges of his office on racial or religious grounds commits an offense and subjects himself to the penalties of the law.

The next section of the Code deals with fair employment practices. All departments and agencies of the state are required to promote the principles and practices of merit employment. It is pointed out that racial discrimination in state employment is a violation of the State Fair Employment Practices Act.

The section dealing with state licensing requires all state agencies to grant licenses and other privileges without discrimination. It further provides that those state agencies with the power to license or regulate activities whose services are available to the public must "take all appropriate action within their legal power to assure that such services are extended by the licensees on a non-discriminatory basis."

Further sections of the Code deal with public works, state financial assistance, training and apprenticeship programs and the state employment service. In all these fields the Code required non-discrimination and the granting of equal opportunities. One section of the Code states that the state will withhold approval for professional training from schools and other institutions which refuse admittance to applicants because of race, color or creed.

The Code also directs executive agencies to cooperate fully with requests and recommendations of the Illinois Commission on Human Relations and the Fair Employment Practices Commission to achieve the purposes of the Code, and to report to the Governor by January 15 of each year the steps taken to implement the Code.

CALIFORNIA

Executive Order Promulgating Governor's Code of Fair Employment Practices, issued on July 24, 1963 by Governor Edmund G. Brown

The preamble states that the nation and state were founded on the principle that all men are created free and endowed with equal rights to secure the blessings of democracy without discrimination. It further states that all the laws, court edicts, and official pronouncements against discrimination are not enough. "If discrimination and segregation have been legally forbidden," it continues "a more subtle, but equally restrictive, de facto discrimination exists and grows." The preamble declares that "justice demands that we not only banish all forms of discrimination but that we act affirmatively to assure those who contribute fully to our society a chance to share fully in its rewards."

Article I of the Code of Fair Practices declares non-discrimination to be the policy of the State of California in all of its activities. State employees are required not only to enforce that policy rigorously but also "to take affirmative action to assure equality of opportunity in the internal affairs of state government and in its relations with the general public." The balance of the Code seeks to implement this policy in various areas: Employment policies of state agencies (Article II), state services and facilities (Article III), state contracts and subcontracts (Article IV), and state employment services (Article V). Article VI directs all state agencies to cooperate fully with the Fair Emp oyment Practice Commission. The Commission is directed to emphasize programs of affirmative action in the field of human rights in addition to discharging its enforcement duties under the FEP Act. Article VII prohibits discrimination in educational, counseling, and vocational guidance programs and all apprenticeship and on-the-job training programs of state agencies, or in which state agencies participate. Article VIII deals with private educational institutions licensed or chartered by the state, including professional, business, and vocational training schools. Such institutions are required to show compliance with the state policy of non-discrimination as a condition of continued participation in any state program or eligibility to receive state assistance.

Article IX deals with state licensing and regulatory agencies. It provides that no person, corporation or business firm which is licensed or regulated by the state may discriminate against or segregate any person on racial or religious grounds, but must operate on a non-discriminatory basis. The article also provides that "any licensee or charter holder who fails to comply with this policy shall be subject to such disciplinary action as is consistent with the legal authority and the rules and regulations of the appropriate licensing or regulatory agency."

Article X, dealing with housing accommodations, contains similar provisions with respect to persons, corporations or firms licensed or chartered by the state to engage in the business of selling, leasing, vending, financing, building or developing housing accommodations. It provides that any real estate broker or salesman, corporate owner, lending institution, home builder, or realtor who fails to comply with the policy of non-discrimination is subject to such disciplinary action as is consistent with the legal authority and rules and regulations of the appropriate licensing or regulatory agency.

Article XI, headed "Public Schools," requires the State Board of Education to assist local districts "in eliminating racial imbalance and de facto segregation in California's public schools."

Article XII prohibits discrimination in the operation of state-administered programs involving the distribution of funds to qualified recipients for benefits authorized by law. Article XIII provides that the state through the Attorney General's office will encourage local law enforcement agencies to develop special training programs in the field of human relations and to establish formal procedures for the investigation of citizens' complaints of alleged abuses of authority by individual peace officers. Article XIV requires each state agency to report annually to the Governor all programs undertaken during the year to carry out the Code of Fair Practices. The final article requires posting of the Code in conspicuous locations in all state facilities.

PH/TL:ig
No. 398
9/5/63

10/16/63

1. The Treasury itself estimates that if present silver stocks were used only for coinage, they would last for slightly more than 15 years. Actually this estimate is already unrealistic because sales are now being made for other uses, both to other governmental agencies and to private industry.

2. If Treasury silver is used not only for coinage but also to make up the deficit between U.S. demands—which keep increasing—and U.S. production—which is declining—the supply would only last for about 10 to 11 years.

3. In order to hold the price at $1.29, the U.S. Treasury must be prepared to sell silver at that price to all comers, foreign as well as domestic. It has already embarked on that program, having sold $2.8 million worth recently. The Treasury then faces the theoretical task of supplying silver to meet the world deficit which, in 1963, was 167 million ounces and which, over the past 10 years, has been increasing at the rate of 15 million ounces per year. If the Treasury stood alone in filling this gap, all its silver would be gone by 1969, or in 5 to 6 years.

4. But there is still one further assumption to face, which is not as fantastic as it may sound. If speculators, as well as silver processors, realize how little time the Treasury really has, they may begin to hoard silver against the inevitable day when the $1.29 price must be breached.

If and when this process begins, it could bring the end of the Treasury's stock as close as 2 to 3 years. And this, I submit could mean that if we do not begin soon to plan for a new subsidiary coinage containing a greatly reduced silver content, we may face serious trouble.

By this time everyone who produces or processes silver must realize that the price must break through the present ceiling. The Treasury can hold it for awhile at $1.29 as it did earlier at $0.905—but only by sacrificing still more of the silver it will need for coinage.

In making these various time-pattern projections, I have assumed that all other holders of silver stocks, including other nations, will hang on to their supplies waiting for the breakthrough. This will not be completely true; but I think it will be substantially so.

Of course, in such a situation the law of supply and demand should operate to bring forth a significant increase in silver production, which could eventually stabilize the price of silver.

NO SIMPLE ANSWER

I think that those in the arts and industry who use silver should be able to see the desirability of joining the silver producers in demanding Federal policies which would encourage rather than inhibit the development of profitable American silver producing mines.

Obviously, the problem is not a simple one. The production of silver is so deeply involved with the production of lead and zinc that before we can hope to increase silver production significantly, a whole new approach to the Government's attitude on these other metals will be required. In the face of this obvious need, as recently as last month in a hearing before the Senate Interior Committee, the administration made a slashing attack on the mining industry's request for even so mild a change as one which called for flexible instead of fixed import quotas on lead and zinc. Until this whole Government attitude is reversed, the American mining industry cannot make a real contribution toward the goal of bringing silver production and consumption more nearly into balance.

FUTURE FOR SILVER IS BRIGHT

To summarize, so long as consumption of silver in the world continues to outrun production, we can expect to see more and more silver coins taken out of circulation, both in the United States and in the world—either through official action or as a result of private activity in hoarding coins and melting them down.

Possibly within 2 or 3 years—or, at the most, within 15 years—our own Treasury must be prepared to supply a whole new set of subsidiary coins in greatly increasing numbers to serve not only the expanding population but the greater demand created by the growing use of automatic vending machines. The silver content of these coins must be reduced; or, as has been done in other countries, new coins without silver must be substituted.

If the Treasury decides, as I think it will, to reduce the value of the silver in the subsidiary coinage far below the face value of the coins, this should shock no one. Except for very brief inflationary or war periods, this is the situation that existed for the 85 years between 1874 and 1959.

Even though the Treasury has about 1½ billion ounces of silver on hand, it cannot repeal either Gresham's law or the law of supply and demand; and for the foreseeable future, the combination of these two assures a good market and a constantly rising price for any mining operator who, in the face of present or future national mineral policies, can find and produce an increased volume of silver. No matter how other metals may fare, the future for silver is very bright.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Kentucky. I ask that the remainder of the time yielded to me be yielded back to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, the time for the quorum call to be taken from the time under my control.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RIBICOFF in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, before I begin the explanation of my amendment, I shall yield once more; I ask unanimous consent that at this time I may yield 5 minutes to the Senator from New York [Mr. JAVITS], without losing the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered; and the Senator from New York is recognized for 5 minutes.

THE REPUBLICAN TRADITION OF EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN PUBLIC ACCOMMODATIONS LEGISLATION

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the Attorney General of the United States is testifying on civil rights before the Judiciary Committee of the other body. Tomorrow, I shall take occasion to comment upon that testimony and to sum it up, especially as it relates to the critical aspects of the bill in regard to the power of the Attorney General to sue in civil rights cases.

But, Mr. President, for today, inasmuch as the question of the so-called public accommodations section is in discussion in the committee of the other body, and inasmuch as the Senate Commerce Committee has ordered reported a bill embodying the public-accommodations section, and also because—as the Attorney General has emphasized—it is essential that there be Republican support if there is to be any civil rights legislation during this Congress—and of course I believe the Attorney General is absolutely correct as to that, I call attention to the fact that the public accommodations section of the civil rights program now working its way through Congress has received more public attention than any other aspect of legislative activity on civil rights. It seems to me that there has been a widespread mistaken impression in the discussions to date, even among many who support the principle of such legislation, that public accommodations legislation is a sweeping innovation. There are some, too, who have come away with the feeling that this public accommodations legislation originated with this Democratic administration as part of the President's June 1963 package.

The fact is that legislation providing equal opportunity in public accommodations has a long and impressive Republican history, both in Federal law and State law. This traditional Republican initative on civil rights is most important, in view of the fact that the administration does not have the votes to carry a public accommodations bill in Congress, and will need substantial Republican support to make it law.

At my request, the staff of the Senate Republican policy committee, with the assistance of my staff and the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress, has prepared a history of legislation enacted by the States and the Federal Government on this subject.

This enlightening study demonstrates once again the great Republican heritage on civil rights. It shows, for example, that:

First. Of 31 States which now have public accommodations laws in effect, 24 were enacted under Republican Governors and/or by Republican-controlled legislatures.

Second. The first statute forbidding racial discrimination in places of public accommodations was enacted in Massachusetts, under a Republican—Unionist—State administration and a Republican legislature.

Third. The first Federal legislation on public accommodations was introduced by Republican Senator Charles Sumner, of Massachusetts, in 1870, and enacted in 1875. It was properly described as the most far-reaching civil rights legislation ever enacted by the Congress, before or since. It was later held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

Fourth. The first public accommodations bill introduced in recent history was introduced by me and seven other Republican Senators on March 28, 1963, and proved to be the basis for legislation introduced by the administration months later.

Clearly the Republican Party has a great stake historically in public accommodations civil rights legislation. It has pioneered in this field in the past; it has shown great initiative and leadership in the States and in Congress; and it will be following in this fine tradition by supporting public accommodations legislation at this session of Congress.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a table which shows the States which prohibit discrimination in places of public accommodation and the party control of the governorships and the State legislatures at the time of the enactment of such laws, as well as a memorandum on the history of public accommodations legislation.

There being no objection, the table and memorandum were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

States with laws forbidding discrimination in public accommodations and party control of governorships and State legislatures at time of enactment

Year	State	Governor	Senate	House
1865	Massachusetts	Unionist (R)	Unionist (R)	Unionist (R).
1869	District of Columbia
1874	Kansas	Republican	Republican	Farmers Party.
1874	New York	do	do	Republican.
1884	Iowa	do	do	Do.
	New Jersey	Democrat	do	Democrat.
	Ohio	do	Democrat	Do.
	Connecticut	do	Republican	Republican.
1885	Colorado	Republican	do	Do.
	Illinois	do	do	Do.
	Indiana	Democrat	Democrat	Democrat.
	Michigan	Republican	Republican	Republican.
	Minnesota	do	do	Do.
	Nebraska	do	do	Do.
	Rhode Island	do	do	Do.
1887	Pennsylvania	do	do	Do.
1890	Washington	do	do	Do.
1895	Wisconsin	do	do	Do.
1897	California	Democrat	do	Do.
1949	Alaska [1]	do	8 Democrats, 8 Republicans.	Democrat.
1953	Oregon	Republican	Republican	Republican.
1955	Montana	do	do	Democrat.
	New Mexico	Democrat	Democrat	Do.
1957	Vermont	Republican	Republican	Republican.
1959	Maine	Democrat	do	Do.
1961	Idaho	Republican	do	Do.
	New Hampshire	do	do	Do.
	North Dakota	Democrat	do	Do.
	Wyoming	do	do	Do.
1963	Maryland	do	Democrat	Democrat.
	South Dakota	Republican	Republican	Republican.
	Kentucky [2]	Democrat

[1] Enacted when Alaska was a territory. Revised and reenacted by State of Alaska in 1962.
[2] By executive order of Governor of Kentucky.

THE HISTORY OF PUBLIC ACCOMMOQATIONS LEGISLATION

The proposal that Congress enact legislation forbidding discrimination on the basis of race or color in places of public accommodation has aroused a great deal of controversy.

This is legislative ground that has been plowed before, both at the State and Federal level of government. The State record is perhaps not as well known and the chief purpose of this paper is to provide a brief history of State public accommodations legislation.

I. THE STATES ACT FIRST, 1865–1875

Massachusetts was the first State to enact legislation forbidding discrimination in places of public accommodation in 1865, 10 years before Congress enacted such legislation. The Massachusetts statute, which was the forerunner of many similar State laws, provided that—

"SECTION 1. No distinction, discrimination, or restriction on account of color or race shall be lawful in any licensed inn, in any public place of amusement, public conveyance, or public meeting in this commonwealth.

"SEC. 2. Any person offending against the provisions of this act shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $50."

One year later, in 1866 the law was amended to include "theaters" in the enumeration of public places, and the condition was added that there should be no exclusion "except for good cause."

Eight years later, in 1874, New York and Kansas passed civil rights legislation, including prohibitions against discrimination in places of public accommodation. In each instance the enumeration of public accommodations coming under the provisions of the law was considerably more detailed than in the Massachusetts law. Conviction under the Kansas statute could result in a fine of $1,000.

II. FEDERAL LEGISLATION, 1870–75

In 1870, Senator Charles Sumner, Republican, of Massachusetts, introduced a bill providing for equal rights in "railroads, steamboats, public conveyances, hotels, licensed theaters, houses of public entertainment, common schools, and institutions of learning authorized by law, church institutions, and cemetery associations incorporated by National or State authority; also on juries in courts, National and State."

Civil Rights Acts were passed by Congress in 1870 and 1871, but they provided in the main for guarantees and protections of the right to vote. The Sumner public accommodations proposals were rejected in these and successive sessions of Congress through 1874. The next year, however, the far-reaching Civil Rights Act of 1875 was passed providing, "That all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall be entitled to the full and equal enjoyment of the accommodations, advantages, facilities, and privileges of inns, public conveyances on land or water, theaters, and other places of public amusement; subject only to the conditions and limitations established by law and applicable alike to citizens of every race and color, regardless of any previous condition of servitude."

The principal change from the original proposal was the elimination of any mention of schools and church institutions. The 1875 act could be considered the high-water mark in the history of Federal civil rights legislation.

III. THE CIVIL RIGHTS CASES, 1883

In 1883, seven cases came before the Supreme Court in each of which the defendant was charged with violating the public accommodation provisions of the act of 1875.[1] The cases arose in Missouri, California, Kansas, New York, and Tennessee, and involved refusals to accommodate Negroes in hotels, a theater, an opera house, and the parlor car of a train.

The majority of the Court held that the 14th amendment to the Constitution did not authorize the legislation under which these actions were brought. The Court stated that Congress could legislate under the 14th amendment to protect the civil rights of Negroes only as against actions by the States and officers or agents thereof. But the Civil Rights Act of 1875 sought to prohibit discrimination in public accommodations without reference either to their relation to interstate commerce or to any State action; and in these cases neither interstate commerce nor State action was proved. The majority specifically withheld any judgment as to the commerce clause as a basis for the statute.

However, both majority and minority opinions in the civil rights cases agreed that the States themselves had the basic power to "define and regulate civil rights which their own people, in virtue of State citizenship, may enjoy within their respective limits."[2]

Thereafter, the Federal role in civil rights matters steadily declined. In 1894, a bill was enacted by a Democratic Congress and signed into law by President Grover Cleveland repealing the statutes which had required that voting qualifications be equal for all persons and had provided for Federal supervision of Federal elections in the States if necessary to protect the Negro's right to vote.[3]

IV. STATE REACTION TO CIVIL RIGHTS DECISION, 1884–1900

Following the civil rights decision, racial discrimination in places of public accommodation was a problem almost exclusively handled by the States. Many States thereupon passed laws modeled on the Federal Civil Rights Act of 1875. Connecticut, Iowa, New Jersey, and Ohio passed such laws in 1884; Colorado, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, and Rhode Island in 1885; Pennsylvania in 1887; Washington in 1890; Wisconsin in 1895; and California in 1897.

Thus by 1900, 18 States, plus the District of Columbia, had laws against discrimination by reason of race or color in places of public accommodation.

There were no additions to the list of States with such legislation for 50 years thereafter, although the Territory of Alaska adopted a public accommodations law in 1949, which was later revised and reenacted by the State of Alaska in 1962.

A renewed interest in civil rights legislation, including public accommodations provision was shown by the States beginning in 1953. Oregon enacted such a law in 1953; Montana and New Mexico in 1955; Vermont in 1957; Maine in 1959; Idaho, New Hampshire, North Dakota, and Wyoming, in 1961; and Maryland and South Dakota in 1963. In one other State—Kentucky—discrimination in public accommodations was prohibited in 1963 by executive order of the Governor.

Thus, by October 1963, 31 States and the District of Columbia forbade discrimination on the basis of race or color in places of public accommodation.

[From the Library of Congress, Legislative Reference Service]

THE VALIDITY OF STATE STATUTES PROHIBITING DISCRIMINATION ON ACCOUNT OF RACE OR COLOR IN PLACES OF PUBLIC ACCOMMODATION

Notwithstanding the invalidation by the Supreme Court in the Civil Rights cases, 109 U.S. 3 (1883) of Federal legislation prohibiting discrimination on account of race or color in places of public accommodation,

[1] 109 U.S. 3 (1883).

[2] See Appendix—"The Validity of State Statutes Prohibiting Discrimination on Account of Race or Color in Places of Public Accommodation."

[3] 28 Stat. 36 (1894).

many of the States, both before and after the passage of the Federal act, have enacted measures in this area. State activity in this field began with the 1865 passage by the Massachusetts Legislature of a statute, forbidding distinction, discrimination, or restriction on account of race or color in places of public amusement, public conveyance or public meeting. State action is still continuing as the issuance on June 26, 1963, by the Governor of Kentucky of a sweeping executive order in this area attests.

Under our Federal system, the issues with regard to the validity of State legislation are different from those upon which the constitutionality of Federal legislation (even that of a similar nature) hinges. It is settled that the State has broad authority to legislate under the police power to protect the health, safety, morals, and general welfare of its citizens. While the Federal Government may only legislate pursuant to power delegated and enumerated in the Constitution, the police power of the State is bounded only by the express provisions of the State or Federal Constitution including the requirements of due process of law. Due process does not require the demonstration of either the wisdom or sound policy of an antidiscrimination statute. However, such statute must not be clearly arbitrary and unreasonable, and it must bear some relation to the public health, safety or general welfare. (Euclid v. Ambler Co., 272 U.S. 365, 395 (1926).) The Supreme Court has indicated in several cases that there is no Federal constitutional infirmity in State statutes creating a right to the full enjoyment of public accommodations without regard to race or color whose violation is civilly or criminally actionable. (Bob-Lo Excursion Co. v. Michigan, 333 U.S. 28 (1948). Compare Railway Mail Assn. v. Corsi, 326 U.S. 88 (1945).) A categorical statement as to the validity of State regulation in this area is found in District of Columbia v. Thompson Co., 346 U.S. 100 (1953), wherein the Court declared, "And certainly so far as the Federal Constitution is concerned there is no doubt that legislation which prohibits discrimination on the basis of race in the use of facilities serving a public function is within the police power of the States." (Id. at 109.)

In many of the States, the validity of State regulation in this area has been generally assumed. For example there was no direct challenge presented to the Massachusetts statute, first enacted in 1865 (Massachusetts Laws 1865, ch. 277). However, the Massachusetts high court while rendering an advisory opinion, in Re Opinion of the Justices, 143 N.E. 808 (1924), made some pertinent comments upon the validity and reasonableness of this type of legislation:

"Numerous reasons lead to the conclusion that the maintenance of theaters and other places of amusement is for the use of the public and affected with a public interest. The character of the performances presented has an intimate connection with the preservation and promotion of public morality . . . They have a tendency to gather at one time large numbers of people under a single roof and under comparatively crowded conditions. In these particulars such places require constant supervision and inspection in the interests of the public at large in order to prevent disaster by fire and accident, spread of disease and general and individual disorder and crime. The construction and maintenance of buildings devoted to such uses demand approval and oversight by public officers acting for the general welfare. There can be no doubt as to the validity of a statute denouncing under penalty discrimination on account of race or color in admission to theaters and other places of amusement." (Id. at 810.)

And in California where the Civil Code, sections 51, 52, contained a prohibition against discrimination in places of public accommodation and amusement "for more than 50 years prior to the enactment of the (present) Unruh Act," the challenges to the statute have been based upon the scope of its application rather than upon its validity. In 1918 the California court remarked, after quoting the statute, "The general intent and significance of the foregoing provisions are clear enough. The purpose, of course, is to compel a recognition of the equality of citizens in the right to the peculiar service afforded by these agencies for the accommodation and entertainment of the public. There is no doubt of the constitutionality of the provisions and of the sound public policy of such legislation. (Greenberg v. Western Turf Ass'n., 140 Cal. 363, 73 Pac. 1050. Piluso v. Spencer, 172 Pac. 412, 413 (1918). See also Burks v. Poppy Construction Company, 370 P. 2d 313 (1962).)

In other States where this type of legislation has been challenged, these laws have been sustained as a valid exercise of the police power of the State. In 1888, attack was made on the constitutionality of the New York public accommodation statute on the ground that, insofar "as it undertakes to prescribe that the owner of a place of amusement shall not exclude therefrom any citizen by reason of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, [it] is an unconstitutional interference with private rights in that it restricts the owner of property in respect to its lawful use, and as to an incident which is not a legitimate matter of regulation by law." (People v. King, 18 N.E. 245, 246 (1888).) In considering the assertion of invalidity, the Court discussed the police power as follows:

"This legislation is under what, for lack of a better name, is called the police power of the State—a power incapable of exact definition, but the existence of which is essential to every well-ordered government. By means of this power the legislature exercises a supervision over matters involving the common weal, and enforces the observance by each individual member of society of the duties which he owes to others and to the community at large. It may be exerted whenever necessary to secure the peace, good order, health, morals, and general welfare of the community; and the propriety of its exercise within constitutional limits is purely a matter of legislative discretion, with which the courts cannot interfere. In short, the police power covers a wide range of particular unexpressed powers reserved to the State, affecting freedom of action, personal conduct, and the use and control of property." (18 N.E. at 247.)

Then the Court addressed itself to the contention of unconstitutionality as follows:

"The final question, therefore, is, does the law in question invade this right of property protected by the Constitution? The State could not pass a law making the discrimination made by the defendant. The amendments to the Federal Constitution would forbid it. Can the State impose upon individuals having places of public resort the same restriction which the Federal Constitution places upon the State? It is not claimed that that part of the statute giving to colored people equal rights at the hands of innkeepers and common carriers is an infraction of the Constitution. But the business of an innkeeper or a common carrier, when conducted by an individual, is a private business, receiving no special privilege or protection from the State. By the common law, innkeepers and common carriers are bound to furnish equal facilities to all without discrimination, because public policy requires them so to do. The business of conducting a theater or place of public amusement is also a private business, in which anyone may engage in the absence of any statute or ordinance.

"But it has been the practice, which has passed unchallenged, for the legislature to confer upon municipalities the power to regulate by ordinance the licensing of theaters and shows, and to enforce restrictions relating to such places, in the public interest; and no one claims that such statutes are an invasion of the right of liberty or property guaranteed by the Constitution. The statute in question assumes to regulate the conduct of owners or managers of places of public resort in respect to the exclusion therefrom of any person by reason of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. The principle stated by Waite, C.J., in Munn v. Illinois, supra, which received the assent of a majority of the Court, applies in this case? 'Where,' says the Chief Justice, 'one devotes his property to a use in which the public have an interest, he in effect grants to the public an interest in that use, and must submit to be controlled by the public for the common good, to the extent of the interest he has thus created. In the judgment of the legislature, the public had an interest to prevent race discrimination between citizens on the part of persons maintaining places of public amusement; and the quasi-public use to which the owner of such a place devoted his property gives the legislature a right to interfere. If the defendant, instead of basing his exclusion of a class of citizens upon color, had made a rule excluding all Germans, or all Irishmen, or all Jews, the law, as applied to such a case would have seemed entirely reasonable. (See U.S. v. Newcomer, (U.S. Dist. Ct.) 11 Phila. 519.) But the principle is the same; and if the law could be applied in the one case, it may in the other. The validity of similar statutes in Mississippi and Louisiana has been sustained by the courts in those States. (Donnell v. State, 48 Miss. 661; Joseph v. Bidwell, 28 La. Ann. 382.) The statute does not interfere with private entertainments, or prevent persons not engaged in the business of keeping a place of public amusement from regulating admission to an entertainment given for a social, public, or private purpose, as they may deem best; nor does it seek to compel social equality. It was, we think a valid exercise of the police power of the State over a subject within the cognizance of the legislature. The judgment should be affirmed."

In the case of Bolden v. Operating Corporation, 239 Mich. 318, 323 (1927), the Michigan court upheld the public accommodations act of that State as follows:

"The validity of the act in question is in no way affected by these decisions. The intent and purpose of the legislature in its enactment cannot be doubted. It clearly indicates a belief on their part that the public safety and general welfare of our people demand that, when the public are invited to attend places of public accommodation, amusement, and recreation, there shall be no discrimination among those permitted to enter because of race, creed, or color. It is bottomed upon the broad ground of the equality of all men before the law. It does not provide that all persons who present themselves at a theater must be admitted. The proprietor may exclude 'the rough, boisterous, and rowdyish element.' (Meisner v. Detroit, etc., Ferry Co., 154 Mich. 545 (129 Am. St. Rep. 493).)

"In our opinion, the act is a valid regulation imposed by the State in its exercise of the police power."

Other cases in which State courts have construed these statutes and found them valid include the following: Darius v. Apostolos, 190 Pac. 510 (1920) (Colorado); Chicago v. Carney, 142 N.E. 2d 160 (1957) (Illinois); Brown v. J. H. Bell Co., 123 N.W. 231

(1919) (Iowa); Rhone v. Loomis, 77 N.W. 31, 32 (1898) (Minnesota); Messenger v. State, 41 N.W. 638 (1889) (Nebraska); Commonwealth v. Athens George, 18 Dauphin 40 (1887) (Pennsylvania); Bryan v. Adler, 72 N.W. 368 (1897) (Wisconsin). (See also, Annotation, 49 A.L.R. 505, "Constitutionality of Civil Rights Legislation by State.")

FIORELLO H. LA GUARDIA

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, Fiorello H. La Guardia was one of New York's most beloved personalities, and certainly one of that city's greatest mayors.

Although the "Little Flower of New York" died 16 years ago, his achievements are still very much in evidence in that city, and he is remembered with great affection by millions of people in New York and throughout the country.

On September 15, the anniversary of his death, the La Guardia Memorial Association, a group of the "major's" friends, went to Woodlawn Cemetery, with Mrs. La Guardia, to reminisce about the days when Fiorello was the dominant figure in New York. The memorial address that day was given by Reuben A. Lazarus, a close friend and longtime associate of Mayor La Guardia; and I ask unanimous consent that his remarks be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS OF REUBEN A. LAZARUS AT MEMORIAL SERVICES—F. H. LA GUARDIA 16TH ANNIVERSARY—SEPTEMBER 15, 1963

It seems hardly possible that 16 years have elapsed since Fiorello H. La Guardia died. He was a top-ranking figure who left a deep impression on his time. The impact of his mind and personality was felt more in government than in any other field of human endeavor. The echoes of his passing are still heard and evidence of his works is to be seen everywhere in this city. The reverberation of his speeches spur good causes in the House of Representatives and his name is still a symbol of militant liberalism on the national scene.

The works of the old masters have been copied innumerable times but La Guardia was an original. Many have tried and failed to emulate the fiery Fiorello. He copied no one. He strove to improve things and did not hesitate to experiment. He had the courage and the vision to carry through his experiments to final achievement. Coupled with his courage was a brilliant mind and unmatched energy and drive. Many claim to have advised Fiorello La Guardia, but he had no advisers. He needed no brain trust. His sound judgment was forged in his successful struggles to overcome the problems and difficulties of a trying childhood and a more trying adulthood. Often cynical, he was also an incurable idealist. It is difficult if not impossible to compare the "major" with anyone else. He was different.

The 12 years of the La Guardia administration may be likened governmentally to the use of counterirritants in medicine. He irritated the political bosses. He irritated the vested interests. He often irritated his friends and supporters. His medicines were often harsh, but they cured.

We are now in the midst of a nationwide campaign to equalize opportunity for all of our citizens. Fiorello inaugurated this campaign many years ago and was pilloried and condemned for it. Ever shall I remember an incident occurring during that period of time that dramatized his deep sympathy for those subjected to racial discrimination. One day I accompanied the "major" on a trip north of 10th Avenue in the small police squad car. He suddenly commanded John Paluso to stop, jumped to the sidewalk while the car was still in motion and caught a small colored lad whom he saw take an orange from a fruit stand. He admonished the terrified boy for stealing, took a coin from his pocket and told the boy to buy an orange if he wanted it. During this time he held the boy and, passing his hand over the boy's head, turned to me and said: "You and I can change our names but this boy cannot change the color of his skin."

If La Guardia had a weakness it was children. Those of us who met with him at Gracie Mansion will remember the scores of photographs of small children that covered the entire wall back of his desk.

Which of us will ever forget the Christmas parties at the mansion, when all members of the administration and of the mayor's staff who had small children were invited to bring them. On one of these occasions, I exposed myself to a couple of the "Major's" lightning fast reprimands when I complained of the cacophony of child noises: "That's the sweetest music in the world," he scolded.

He was sportively boastful and endeared himself for being so. When he was questioned about having failed to do something he quipped: "I'm good but I'm not that good."

And he could turn aside the barbs of criticism by a frank and public confession of error. Everyone remembers how he disarmed his critics with the classic rejoinder, "When I make a mistake, it's a 'beaut.'"

After his election in 1933 he complained bitterly about the old charter and he campaigned for and won a new charter. Yet, most of his reforms were achieved under the old charter. In doing this he gave graphic proof of one side of the adage that a good man can get good government out of a bad law and a bad official cannot get good government out of a good law.

In an effort to shake a hostile press off his back, he took to the air and turned the city's radio station into a personal forum. Who will ever forget the Sunday noon broadcasts, that were launched by "Patience and Fortitude," after the inspiring opening bars of the "Halls of Montezuma," the Marine Corps battle hymn? WYNC became the city's regular weekly radio fare, which provided us with the news of the week in capsule form, La Guardia version. The tinhorns and gamblers were given hell; housewives were given cooking recipes. And through it all the news of the week was given a down-to-earth and often not too gentle treatment a la La Guardia. All listeners were invited to bring their problems to city hall and the frazzled condition of the staff bore eloquent witness to the fact that they did.

He delighted in being called "Major," a rank which he won in the Air Force in World War I.

He possessed histrionic ability. When it served his purpose, he would vibrate with anger, although he was not angry at all. He could don the impassive mask of a poker player.

He played at being fire chief and became spot news all over the country. He read, and acted, the comics when a strike deprived the children—both young and adult—of the newspapers. I thought it a poor idea and it turned out to be something that brought him lasting fame. That's why he was mayor. He had the gift of being able to communicate with the public.

He was the secret envy of all politicians who had to take orders, because he took none. He gave the orders.

Who but Fiorello could or would devise his kind of original approach. When an obscene publication was brought to his attention, he ordered sanitation trucks to go from newsstand to newstand and collect it as garbage. He then went after the unhappy distributor of the magazine, seeing to it that criminal proceedings were begun against this luckless individual. LaGuardia presided over these proceedings sitting as a magistrate and he directed me to act as prosecutor.

The trial or hearing was held in city hall. The distributor pleaded: "Mr. Mayor, I distribute more than a hundred magazines. I don't publish them. Am I supposed to censor each one?" The answer of "Judge" La Guardia still brings a smile to my lips: "What you are saying is the same as if Mrs. LaGuardia bought a dozen eggs and discovered that two of them were rotten and took them back to the grocer. Would it excuse him if he pleaded with Mrs. La Guardia, 'I am not the hen?' I fix the bail at $500."

When a certain McWilliams, trying to be a little Hitler, made wild, riot-inspiring speeches on street corners, Fiorello had him committed to Bellevue Hospital for observation.

I treasure one of the sketches made of the mayor which bears his autograph and an original message: "With pleasant recollections of unpleasant days in Albany." The sketch was made by Sam Woolf and the occasion was one of my weekly returns from the capitol, to report on the legislative situation.

The anniversary of the death of Fiorello H. La Guardia for me is like to tolling of an elegiac tocsin upon the passing of an era.

SALE OF WHEAT TO RUSSIA

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the New York Times of October 10 and an editorial from the Wall Street Journal of October 11.

These editorials voice support for the President's decision—the President having found it in the national interest—to sell wheat and feed grains to the U.S.S.R. and other Communist-ruled countries. The editorials point out what I believe to be the key aspects of this proposed transaction. The New York Times article of October 12 reports the U.S. Chamber of Commerce endorsement of the sale and its call for further exploration of more liberal nonstrategic trade with the Soviets.

However, I have warned that this "one-shot" deal might be used as a way to engage in several trade deals which would call for much more from the Soviet Union.

Politically, the sale represents an effort on the part of our country to reduce the cold war tensions by showing the Soviet Union that meaningful economic relations between that country and the United States are not impossible and can serve the interests of both sides. This will prove most important in the days ahead.

Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a release on this subject from the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

There being no objection, the editorials and the release were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Oct. 10, 1963]

BEYOND THE WHEAT DEAL

Both economically and politically, President Kennedy made a convincing case last night when he explained to the Nation his decision to approve the sale of wheat and feed grains to the Soviet Union and other Communist-ruled countries.

Pub Accom South Time 11/1/63 years later Genovese and fourteen other hoods were convicted of violating federal narcotics laws. The boss was sentenced to 15 years in prison.

After the Supreme Court refused to review his case, Genovese began to spend his money wisely. He hired Edward Bennett Williams, one of the nation's shrewdest trial lawyers. Williams promptly petitioned for a new trial. During their original appearance in court, he argued, the defense had not had access to the prosecution's notes on the pretrial testimony of the disgruntled dope peddler. In 1957, Williams pointed out, the Supreme Court had ruled in Jencks v. U.S. that a defendant in a criminal proceeding is entitled to see reports of pretrial testimony.

Lower courts denied Williams' motion. But the Supreme Court sent the case back to the Court of Appeals for "further consideration." While he waits for the next decision, Genovese is not likely to go free on bail, but the Supreme Court ruling is almost sure to have a strange side effect: the impending struggle for power among big-time U.S. hoods will be postponed while the top men wait to see whether Genovese is freed to resume his old place as No. 1.

STATUTES

Civil Rights Counterattack

Four young men have sweated out the comforts of the county jail in Americus, Ga., ever since August, when they were arrested during civil rights demonstrations. They cannot be freed on bail—they have been charged with "inciting an insurrection," a crime that, in Georgia at least, is punishable by death.

So harsh a sentence is hardly likely, but dusting off the long-unused 1871 statute serves a practical purpose: it provides a handy way to keep three annoying white men and one Negro locked up indefinitely. In some communities, so many Negroes are being held prisoner that detention facilities are swamped. In Leesburg, Ga., recently, 20 young girls aged 11 to 15 were kept for as long as a month in a single room without beds or blankets.

Ugly American. All over the South, officials impatient with the power of familiar statutes passed in the interests of public safety—laws against disorderly conduct, impeding traffic, loitering, and the like—have resurrected an odd armory full of rusty legal weaponry with which to mount a counterattack against the insistent forces of integration. Examples:

▶ In Danville, Va., 14 civil rights leaders are awaiting trial under a state law that makes it a crime to conspire to incite Negroes to "acts of violence and war" against whites, or vice versa. A relic of slavery days, the law was designed to prevent slave revolts.

▶ In Atlanta, Ga., last June a white minister who tried to enter a segregated church in company with two Negroes was tried under a 112-year-old state law declaring it a misdemeanor to interrupt "in any manner a congregation lawfully assembled for divine worship." He was fined $1,000 and sentenced to a year in prison, plus an extra six months of labor at "public works" after his prison term.

▶ In East Baton Rouge, La., two young men who visited a fellow civil rights demonstrator in jail were arrested themselves and charged with violating Louisiana's law against "criminal anarchy." Passed during World War I and updated during World War II, the law makes it a crime, punishable by up to ten years at hard labor, to teach or advocate "subversion, opposition or destruction" of the federal or state government. The principal evidence against the youths appeared to be that they brought their friend a copy of The Ugly American.

Legal Barbed Wire. Whenever the removal of antique laws has not satisfied segregationists, Southern states and municipalities have reached in the other direction and passed scores of new statutes. Seven states enacted laws against "barratry" (inciting lawsuits) to harass civil rights organizations and their lawyers. When civil rights pickets gathered at the only movie house in Americus one Saturday last July, members of the city council rounded up a quorum, swiftly passed an ordinance declaring that henceforth picketing would be permitted only between 9 a.m. and 6 p.m., that there must be no more than two pickets per city block, and that the pickets must stay at least 20 feet apart and within 24 inches of the curb. Several demonstrators were arrested under the new law that very evening.

Some Southern judges are becoming practiced in the use of the sweeping injunction to entangle civil rights leaders in legal barbed wire. In Danville, Va., for example, a state court enjoined civil rights leaders from "participating in, financing, sponsoring, encouraging or engaging in meetings or other activities" that could lead to a violation of state or local law, or "engaging in any act in a violent and tumultuous manner, or holding unlawful assemblies such as to unreasonably disturb or alarm the public within the city of Danville." That covered just about anything a civil rights organization dreams of doing.

Extraordinarily high bail for arrested demonstrators is also a highly popular gimmick, useful for depleting the treasuries of civil rights organizations. Some Georgia judges have been even more imaginative with their exploitation of a state law that says that whenever "the peace of any person is in danger of being injured or disturbed," the potential offender may be ordered to post cash that will be forfeited if he violates the court's order to behave himself. Normally, such "peace bonds" run to $500 or less. But bonds of more than $15,000 have been demanded from civil rights leaders in Savannah.

One Savannah judge ruled that peace bonds could be posted only in the form of title to real property, and only if the property were free of mortgages or other encumbrances. Under the court's terms, property value would be assumed to be the tax valuation, which in Savannah is about 25% of the market value. Says a civil rights lawyer: "We took the six largest office buildings in Savannah and looked at their encumbrances and their tax valuation. We found that all these buildings together would not be enough to furnish a $15,000 peace bond." Since the judge's terms make it financially impossible to put up a bond, the accused goes to jail without ever having been convicted of any crime.

DANNY LYON

CHILDREN JAILED FOR DEMONSTRATING IN LEESBURG, GA.
With gimmicks old and new.

INTEGRATION

De Facto Superintendent

Almost half the public school children of Chicago—225,000 of them—played hooky for a day last week, and 8,000 grownups circled city hall, waving signs and singing. It was the biggest demonstration ever held in the U.S. against de facto school segregation, which is measured in Chicago by new figures showing that enrollments in three-fourths of the schools in the city are 90% or more Negro or 90% or more white.

The target was School Superintendent Benjamin C. Willis, 61, who has long resisted Negro pressure, exerted through the board of education, to take drastic measures to mitigate segregation. Early in October, protesting that the board was moving into his area of authority, he resigned.

By this unyielding stand, Ben Willis confirmed himself as the symbol of the position that the job of the schools is education, not breaking down de facto segregation. In telegrams to the school board and by packing public meetings of the board, white homeowners backed Willis. Businessmen and educators chimed in to doubt the wisdom of dropping an expert administrator under pressure from one minority over one issue. The board majority, which had hoped to make Willis compromise on Negro demands but never intended to lose him, recognized that it was out on a limb and refused his resignation. After a week of reconsidering, Superintendent Willis withdrew it.

The Negro "Freedom Day" protest last week was vastly bigger than most Chicagoans had predicted, and set the white-Negro school issue up in sharper terms than in any other big U.S. city. Yet Willis, having had the board plead for his return and having shown massive political support from whites, seems to be in a stronger position than ever.

ART SHAY

CHICAGO'S WILLIS
Stronger than ever.

COLLEGES

Getting Bigger & Richer

These days a small college has to grow in order to survive. Last week this maxim was illustrated at two Midwestern campuses:

▶ Lawrence College (1,180 students) in Appleton, Wis., will become Lawrence University next summer by absorbing tiny (152 women) Milwaukee-Downer College in Milwaukee. Downer aims to sell its 43-acre campus for $10 million to the bulging Milwaukee branch of the University of Wisconsin. Lawrence is already distinguished as a proving ground for university presidents: its own past heads include Brown's former president Henry Wriston, Harvard's president Nathan M. Pusey and Duke's president Douglas M. Knight. Now, as a small university, it hopes to accomplish far more than it could as a small college.

▶ St. Paul's Macalester College (1,600 students) got another sharp boost from its Most Unforgettable Character, Reader's Digest Founder-Publisher DeWitt Wallace, 73, who grew up on the campus while his Presbyterian father was president. In recent years Alumnus Wallace and his wife Lila have given Macalester $15 million; last week, as the college announced a ten-year drive for $32 million, the Wallaces offered to match dollars each year that the college raises $750,000, up to a total of $10 million over the ten years.

STUDENTS

Conning the Professor

"Grades are your means of getting into graduate school; your means of keeping your parents happy; your means of avoiding the Army," says a student publication at the University of California at Berkeley. But, it adds with splendid candor: "Do not give the professor reason to suppose that your interest is in the grade. You must always act like an interested intellectual, no matter what your motive."

Here speaks an authentic voice of U.S. education, in contrast to the stately bromides of college presidents. It sums up the art of conning the professor for higher grades—a sick art that grows more feverish as more collegians compete for more degrees at ever more crowded campuses. Even schoolchildren get apprenticed in the technique in how-to-study manuals that warn "Study Your Teacher" and advise: "You have to work with people all your life; start making a science of it."

WILL RAPPORT

HARVARD'S DAVID RIESMAN & STUDENTS
One answer: "Try studying."

Gone: The Short-Skirt Bit. The old apple has to be polished a little more discreetly than it once was. The sweet Southern thing who sighs, "Ah'll do anything to get a good grade," is now likely to be told: "Try studying." Symbolic of the times, a Michigan State professor last year ruined the short-skirt bit by ordering all coeds to the back of the room. "I don't let myself get close to any student," says a grim Houston professor. "I try to look at all of them as enemies."

Yet, faced with 700 yawning faces, the big-campus lecturer yearns for one passionate learner—and this is what the good con man impersonates. "The very first lecture, the one everybody cuts, is the most important in the course," says a Wisconsin senior. Moving in fast, the con man lovingly establishes his own name with the prof. After that, says a Princeton honors student, one need only "sit in the first two rows of the lecture room and maintain continuous eye contact with the lecturer. Make him glad he's looking at you. Give him that receptive gaze, which implies amazement at his genius and quiet excitement at the information being transmitted."

Prof. Voltaire. At the University of Michigan, fraternity houses are stocked with not only old exams but also "teacher psych-outs"—dossiers compiled by A-students on professors' likes and dislikes. This allows con men to lug around the prof's favorite magazine, or to ape his lingo. If this fails, says a recent Michigan graduate, there is the "welfare approach" of pretending poverty by wearing "hand-pressed khaki pants" and asking the professor on the very first day "Ah, how much did you say that textbook was?" As a Wisconsin con man puts it: "These days, if you're not one up, you're one down."

Con men rely heavily on "respectful disagreement"—tantalizing the professor who pines for ardent student procent—of the population. The dummy organs of government pick the bosses, and Khrushchev does the picking.

11/13/63

If the vast flop of Soviet agriculture, the shelves bare of consumer goods, the inflated prices for something as simple as a pair of shoes or trousers (assuming they are even available) are any indication of Khrushchev's managerial prowess, he would not be the man we would choose to run any business enterprise in which we were interested.

Congressman JOHANSEN said in the House that he wonders what explains "the foolish fascination" which takes American businessmen to Khrushchev's door to hear him insult the United States, capitalism, and themselves.

Some of the business leaders appraised Khrushchev as tough, a pragmatist, but a man with a sense of humor. We do not know whether proof of the sense of humor was found in his statement that the blockading of an American troop convoy by the Russians on the autobahn to Berlin could have led to a shooting and a nuclear war which would incinerate him and his guests. That's not our idea of a real boffo.

Pub. Accomm. Sen.

Mrs. Murphy's Private Rights

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY S. REUSS

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 16, 1963

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, I include an article from a recent issue of America by Father William J. Davis, S.J., on the public-accommodations section of the civil rights bill:

Of the many witnesses to come before the Senate Commerce Committee, testifying against the public-accommodations section of the President's civil rights bill, perhaps none was more eloquent or forceful than Gov. Farris Bryant, of Florida. In a packed Senate caucus room, he told the Senators that he came "to argue the case for freedom."

Customers are free to trade where they please, but this civil rights bill would deny owners a like freedom. If a customer can walk into a store, look over the owner or the merchandise, and then decide not to buy, for any reason whatsoever, or even for no reason at all; if he can base his decision even on the looks of the store owner—then "the owner of the property ought to have the same freedom." So runs the argument of Governor Bryant, and so runs the argument in the minds of many reasonable men who seem genuinely concerned about Federal interference with the rights of property owners.

To resolve the apparent conflict between civil rights and property rights, it is necessary to take a second look at our traditional view of private property. Just what rights, for instances, does the now famous Mrs. Murphy have in the running of her boardinghouse?

For Mrs. Murphy, and for Americans generally, the right of ownership is an unassailable absolute. "I earned this property. It's mine. I can do with it as I please." Some such expression of absolute ownership, including use, rises spontaneously to the lips of most Americans. Even those who cannot justify this right philosophically know that it is somehow guaranteed as God-given and inalienable, and the presumption is one of absolute independence in the ownership of property. The defenders of Mrs. Murphy contend that she (or her family) built her establishment independently and that she therefore can expect to do as she pleases with it. They decry Government interference as an infringement on her right to own and dispose of her property freely.

Their argument begins with the fact that this property was gained by private initiative. Was it really? Did the Murphys mill the boards that built it? Did they smelt the steel that fashioned the tools that drove the nails? While the building was under construction, who grew the wheat and ground the flour and ran the railroads and provided the thousand and one other services that the Murphys used? And even more fundamentally, who settled the land and built a society and maintained law and order, so that this building could be constructed? "Private" initiative, in any absolute sense, is a myth.

But if Mrs. Murphy could not originally acquire her boardinghouse without the aid of society, neither can she now maintain it privately. How can she keep it safe from thieves? How can she be assured that the commodities she needs to run it will not skyrocket beyond her means through the action of monopolists? How can she be assured that the food she buys for her guests will not poison them? And finally, how can she be secure from those today who have sworn to "bury her"?

The point is obvious. The individualist's exaggerated view of private endeavor is one of the greatest hoaxes ever to slip into the stream of conventional wisdom. No one owns a boardinghouse, or anything else for that matter, without being in partnership with a tremendously complex, cooperating, interrelated organism known as society. Like it or not, we are interdependent. And if property cannot be gained independently or maintained independently, then neither can it be used in total independence.

To say that owners have the right to do whatever they please with their property, irrespective of society, is simply false. St. Thomas Aquinas, while defending the right to acquire private property, makes it very clear that this right does not carry with it the right of indiscriminate use. The disposal of private goods must be in accord with the primary destiny of all goods—service of man. As Ambrose Farrell, O.P., puts it: "Ownership of every kind is a stewardship carrying with it social obligations."

Traditionally, we have emphasized the fact that man's very nature demands a measure of independent ownership. But what we must bear in mind, while insisting on this natural right, is that man's nature is a social nature and demands a concern for society even in his ownership. It is not as though man has independent rights to which are added a few social riders. The fact is that the right itself is essentially colored by man's social nature.

The social character of private property, therefore, is not a sort of afterthought of only relative importance. It is of the very essence of private property. Review the traditional arguments for private property and you will find that they all reduce to one: private property is the best way to make our God-given fund of material goods serve the common good of all mankind. The truth is that the social character of property is absolute; its private character is relative.

This is not to say, as Saint-Simon, Comte and their camp followers said, that society is the real owner of all property. Individuals are true owners, but society has a vested interest in their ownership. Especially those private businesses that draw constantly from the public must, in turn, recognize the rights of the public. If they do not, then public authority must intervene.

Some might object that government intervention is bad. In a sense it is; it's too bad. In fact, in a sense, it is tragic, because it is an indication that we as individuals have not recognized and fulfilled our social obligations. Because of our failure, government intervention becomes necessary and its desirability is no longer the question. And if there is danger involved (as there admittedly is) in such intervention, we have no one to blame but ourselves for failing to act on the individual or local level. We cannot hide behind an irrational hostility to public authority when we ourselves have necessitated the expansion of that authority.

Exaggerated individualism has traditionally blasted all social reforms with bromides about freedom from interference, private rights, private initiative, and creeping socialism. But the ironic truth is that no one makes social reforms more necessary than does the individualist. Numerous social problems, calling for government regulation, are the direct result of his laissez-faire principles. Granted, for instance, that I can do as I please with my property, then naturally enough I can shift the location of my plant without regard to employee dislocation; I can hire and fire without regard for collective bargaining; I can engage in rack-renting, in real estate speculation, and in a host of other activities that result in social harm. Discrimination against Negroes cap a long list of abuses resulting from the liberalist view of "the sanctity of private property."

In fact, even the various forms of collectivism, which the individualists so universally fear, frequently follow from this same false premise of the absolute nature of private property. Given the assumption that ownership carries with it the right to use things as the owner pleases, then the only way to correct misuse is by a change of ownership. And so the various collectivist systems conclude that the state must become sole owner if society is to benefit properly from material wealth. Even Catholic writers sometimes leave the impression that the only solution to the problem of injustice is some impractical equalization of ownings, and, in so doing, neglect to stress the social obligations of those who are owners.

In correcting abuses, however, we must not make the mistake of the collectivists. Government intervention must itself be controlled by strict limits. The day will never come when the right of ownership will be justly absorbed by the state. Private property will never become obsolete. It will remain as long as man is man. The forms that ownership takes may need constant readjustment by social authority to bring them in line with their essential purpose; but that authority cannot swallow up the basic right.

Obviously, if individuals and lesser organizations realize their responsibilities, the state need not and ought not to step in; but when we on the lower level fail, then it is the responsibility of the government to see to it that community rights are not trampled on by individuals. In Quadragesimo Anno Pius XI insised, while reiterating the warning to leave to subordinate groups as broad a control as possible, that public authority has not only the right but the duty to make adjustments in the matter of ownership. His words bear quoting at length:

"It follows from what we have termed the individual and at the same time social character of ownership that men must consider in this matter not only their own advantage but also the common good. To define these duties in detail when necessity requires and the natural law has not done so is the function of those in charge of the State. Therefore public authority, under the guiding light always of the natural and divine law, can determine more accurately, upon consideration of the true requirements of the common good, what is permitted and what is not permitted to owners in the use of their property (sec. 49)."

A Catholic can hardly deny the right of the state to intervene in the use of property for the common good, as indeed the state already does by a number of accepted practices, such as lawsuits to redress injuries, zoning laws and eminent domain.

The attitude we should take toward such intervention was well expressed by Mayor Ivan Allen, Jr., of Atlanta, Ga., testifying before the Senate Commerce Committee in favor of the civil rights bill. Asked about Federal intrusion into businesses in his city, he replied that such Government actions as child-labor laws, certain labor laws themselves, wage-and-hour acts and the like can hardly be considered intrusions since, for the most part, they have been for the benefit of most of the people of the country.

Finally—and this question brings us back to Mrs. Murphy—when should the Government act? Obviously, too much Government interference will create more evils than it corrects; but too little is equally harmful. When the state moves, it must keep all aspects of the common good in mind. Property has a social aspect, but it also has a private aspect. The state must preserve both. When a business is small and relatively more private, as we will presume is the case with the Murphy boardinghouse, the state should not interfere directly, even though Mrs. Murphy may be unjustly drawing profit from the public without realizing her social obligations to that public. But in the case of those businesses that substantially affect the common good, the state can and should interfere whenever there is serious abuse.

And how to decide what is a "Mrs. Murphy" boardinghouse and what is a substantial business? Reason and prudence must decide. Although we hate to give these factors a place in this world of scientific exactness, there is simply no substitute for them in human affairs. They guide us in interpreting what is substantial in the Clayton Act and in other acts; they must likewise guide us in the present matter. Perhaps, as has been suggested, the Murphys can be separated from the non-Murphys by the $10,000 gross-income level. Some division point must be agreed upon to preserve both privacy and public good. And while $10,000 is an arbitrary figure, it does not seem an unreasonable one. If someone thinks otherwise, he can advance reasons why the division point should be moved up or down, but he ought not to attack the very principle of the government's right to regulate.

In conclusion, therefore, let me return to the problem posed by Governor Bryant. He has shrewdly appraised the civil rights issue as a struggle "between conflicting demands for freedom." But are the demands for freedom equally justified on both sides, or are owners demanding freedoms that were never theirs? Those who make private property an unassailable absolute stretch property rights beyond reason. And if they have their way, they will not only destroy an important civil rights bill; they will strip social authority of the very possibility of effective reform. They will hack away from free society its strongest bulwark—its capacity for self-adjustment and reform.

There is no solution to "the conflicting demands for freedom" if we accept the individualist assumptions about the nature of ownership. The solution Governor Bryant suggests—to allow the owners the freedom to continue to make errors—is intolerable when so large a portion of the public, indeed, when the whole Nation, is suffering from those errors. The Communist or Socialist solution—to make the state the sole owner—is likewise intolerable in view of man's nature. This conflict can be resolved only by admitting that our right of ownership bears within it social responsibilities which should be promoted by the reasonable, controlled, and limited intervention of social authority.

Spain and Portugal: Red Target

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. DANIEL J. FLOOD

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 13, 1963

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, serious students of military history have long recognized the strategic importance of the Iberian Penninsula consisting of Spain and Portugal, and how this area has served as the location for decisive stages in wars.

An informative article in the July 20, 1963, issue of the Evening Star, Washington, D.C., by Constantine Brown, distinguished geopolitical analyst now residing in Rome, Italy, gives the latest developments in plots to overthrow the Governments of Spain and Portugal.

The article follows:

SPAIN AND PORTUGAL: RED TARGET—LEFTISTS SHIFT PLOTTING CENTER IN ITALY, AND MOSCOW MAKES OIL OVERTURES

(By Constantine Brown)

ROME.—Communist and democratic groups plotting for the overthrow of the Governments of Spain and Portugal recently have received a new impetus. The main center of their activities has been transferred from Milan to Genoa.

The reason is that it is easier to ship men, arms and propaganda from a seaport than from an inland city. Since relations between France and Spain have become very friendly, the underground, which in the past moved from Yugoslavia and Italy to Spain through France, can no longer be used.

The Soviet Union and other anti-Facist governments are reported to be assisting these groups, which are composed mostly of Spanish and Italian Communists. But strangely enough, at the same time Moscow has begun flirting wth the Madrid government and suggesting better relations.

A delegation of Soviet labor union leaders is reported to have received visas from Madrid to attend an international labor meeting there this summer.

On the other hand the Soviet Government is reported to have sounded out the Spanish Government concerning some arrangements about the $800 million which Madrid accuses Moscow of having stolen from Spain in 1938 when the Loyalist government realized it had lost the battle.

At that time the Loyalist government transferred to Odessa the entire treasury of the Spanish Government for safekeeping. After the Loyalists fell and Generalissimo Franco became the undisputed head of state, demands were made to Moscow through neutral embassies for the return of the gold. The Russians answered that there was no such gold available. It was true they admitted, that a quantity had been shipped to the U.S.S.R., but that amount was due Russia for the military equipment purchased throughout the civil war.

Now the Russians appear to admit that there is a balance due to the Spanish Government—about $650 million—and that under certain conditions they are willing to discuss its return. There is no possibility, of course, say the Russians, that the actual gold will be returned to Spain. But if the present Madrid government were willing to discuss economic relations, Moscow might consider shipping to Spain crude or refined oil representing the amount involved.

Spain lacks oil; it has to purchase it from the United States and British companies at prices considerably higher than those of the U.S.S.R. The Russians are reported to suggest that the gold of the Spanish treasury be repaid in oil over a period of 5 or 6 years, according to the needs of Spanish industry. The proposition, which appears on the surface acceptable—no one as yet has had time to look under the rug—would deprive the American and British oil producers of an important market, especially at this time when Spanish industry has begun to boom in earnest.

The fact that Madrid seems inclined to consider economic discussions with the U.S.S.R. is attributed to gentle pressures from Washington for further democratization of the present Spanish regime.

Generalissimo Franco and his top counselors in the cabinet are being urged to liberalize Spain by permitting the creation of a Spanish Socialist Party. So far these gentle hints from Washington have had no effect on the Spanish Government and are unlikely to be received favorably by the Spanish people. The Government and the bulk of the Spaniards remember that Spain had had a Socialist government before the outbreak of the civil war. It started with moderate socialism, but eventually became infiltrated. The net result of the experience of the thirties was a civil war which brought, besides total economic ruin to Spain, casualties amounting to more than 2 million dead.

Spain, after years of unbelievable hardships caused by the unofficial economic embargo imposed by the West from 1945 to 1949, at present is moving up fast. Everybody in Europe speaks of the "Spanish miracle," comparable to that of Germany and France. Although only 10 years ago Spain had less than $100 million gold or hard currency in its treasury, it possesses today close to $1 billion.

The creation of a "Socialist Party," Washington is being politely told, might eventually get things back to where they were in 1936. And Generalissimo Franco and his cabinet, for the sake of their people, cannot accept such a risk. They point out that the present shaky situation in Italy—both political and economic—proves what a government to the left can do to the welfare of a country.

Al Reid, Newspaperman With a Heart

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT R. BARRY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 13, 1963

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Al Reid, distinguished writer and correspondent of the Home News & Times in Yonkers, N.Y., has been leading a worthwhile effort to help the Cross Country Hospital in Yonkers and the Lawrence Hospital in Bronxville.

He calls this effort "Operation Trading Stamps." Under this charitable plan, people send their trading stamps to Al Reid who then uses them to buy items such as toys and games for the two hospitals.

Al Reid says, "I licked every stamp." To date, this amounts to over 50,000. This is certainly a highly original idea. Moreover, it is one that other communities can use in order to bring comforting items to the children and adults in our hospitals.

11/29/63

Soviet Union ever has achieved. Both also export many industrial products although here, too, U.S. excess production is much greater than the Soviets.

In addition, trade is another weapon in the cold war in the minds of the Soviet strategists. The factors of demand and supply that govern trade in this country always can be subject to—and controlled by—political considerations in the Communist world. So it would be dangerous for this country ever to become dependent for any of its strategic supplies on the Soviet bloc countries.

The factor of political advantage to the Soviet Union also must be considered. Increased trade with the Soviet Union would tend to indicate U.S. approval of the status quo in Eastern Europe. It also would lessen the effectiveness of the special consideration that the United States now gives to Poland and Yugoslavia in an effort to wean them away from full dependency on the Soviets.

Yet all of these arguments do not offset the possible advantages to be gained. The United States needs new markets to replace those it is losing to the Common Market in Western Europe. The United States needs greater exports to reverse the balance-of-payments deficit. The United States by selling more consumer products to the Soviet Union would harvest Soviet dollars and gold that could not be spent for armaments.

So we hope that the Senate Foreign Relations Committee gives open-minded consideration to the prospect of greater trade with the Soviet Union and its satellites. Always, of course, the committee must keep in mind the protection of the best long-range interests of this country, just as, we feel, Mr. Kennedy did in approving the sale of wheat to the Soviet bloc.

Pub. Accomm. Gen.

CIVIL RIGHTS PUBLIC PROTESTS AND DEMONSTRATIONS

Mr. HART. Mr. President, one of the more controversial aspects of the current civil rights ferment has been its use of various kinds of public protests and demonstrations.

We have all heard these questions raised: Do these demonstrations represent a disrespect for law and order? Or are they in the mainstream of a great heritage and right of public protest protected by the Constitution? If so, are there limits to this constitutionally protected right of protest?

In August of this year, the American Civil Liberties Union, long a respected and vigilant guardian of the constitutional rights of all Americans, published a pamphlet entitled "How Americans Protest: A Statement on the Civil Rights Demonstrations."

This pamphlet surveys the constitutional development of the right of assembly from the Magna Carta, through early State constitutions, to its inclusion in the first amendment as "an independent right, equally as important as free speech and press." And it traces the history of public protest in this country from revolutionary days to the current civil rights movement.

Finally, the pamphlet examines the limitations on the right of assembly and finds that its abridgement can be justified only in order to protect other substantial rights.

Mr. President, I commend this ACLU pamphlet to all Americans, and I ask unanimous consent that its text and editorials on it from the Baltimore Sun and the Boston Herald be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article and editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOW AMERICANS PROTEST—A STATEMENT ON THE CIVIL RIGHTS DEMONSTRATIONS

FOREWORD

The American Civil Liberties Union views with firm hope the course being taken by the movement of our Negro countrymen toward full citizenship. A protest movement of such dimensions is bound to arouse opposition and be attended by disorders, perhaps some that will be more serious than have already occurred. But disorder is less to be dreaded than suppression of the right to protest. In our constitutional system this right is one of fundamental importance—a part of the purpose of our national being. It is also a means of resolving deep-seated problems—the loss of which threatens dangers of a much higher order.

We deem it essential, therefore, to revert to first principles—to inquire why the 1st amendment forbids Congress to make any law "abridging * * * the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances," why the 14th amendment forbids State action abridging the same right, how Americans have used this right before, and how all this affects what we do in response to today's headlines.

The first amendment prohibition was a fruit of colonial experience. Bacon's Rebellion in Virginia, the Regulator movement in North Carolina, and the movement culminating in the Boston Massacre—all originated in denial to the people of a right to assemble and voice their grievances. The colonists therefore, had had bitter experiences at the hands of an unrestrained government willing to resort to shooting and hanging to suppress popular protest. Hence the architects of the Constitution rightly put the new government under restraint.

Yet in the very act of establishing a government they placed themselves under reciprocal restraint, acknowledging this in the word "peaceably" which they wrote into their definition of the first amendment right. Even so, the right they defined is quite as capable of being suppressed by violent citizen opponents as by an unrestrained government. Clearly, then, government is not only required to refrain from interference with peaceful assemblies; it must restrain the restrainers as well.

Those government officials and editorial writers, who have been quick to rebuke certain parts of the extraordinarily effective civil rights demonstrations of 1963, have forgotten this clear direction of the first amendment. They have likewise forgotten that the demonstrators have shown a keen awareness of the meaning and limit of the first amendment right. When breaches of order have occurred, the well-led civil rights assemblies have manifested truly remarkable self-discipline, and they have rarely been the aggressors.

But observers of these actions owe the protesters an additional concession; the grievances sought to be redressed are themselves the denial of a carefully defined constitutional right to equality. Members of the majority that has dominated the American society and its lawmaking machinery for the past century cannot escape responsibility for the years of callous indifference to the demands of nonwhite citizens. This indifference created the frustration which now finds expression in the current demonstrations. After decades of denial of rights, is it any wonder that demonstrations show such deep emotion? Or that some actions have been taken which inconvenience—or even interfere with rights of—other citizens? The American Civil Liberties Union does not assert that every civil rights demonstration has confined itself to constitutionally protected protests. But we remind every American who feels adversely affected by this activity that he is involved in the current crisis: he must face the issue of the deprivation of rights—rights having dignity equal with his own.

In the final analysis it is redress of the grievances that will measure the living value of the right to protest. In employing this time-honored American right, the people engaged in this movement have created an awareness of the extent of deprivation, and the justice of their cause, that never before existed among their countrymen. Yet ignorance of these matters persists, sometimes from almost conscious self-deception, more often from an unreal sense of distance from and noninvolvement in the issues. None of us is free from involvement.

The blot of inequality, of persisting vestiges of that slavery which the 13th amendment undertook to outlaw, is a curse upon all of us, and threatens the security with which we all enjoy the fundamental rights of an American. Until this lesson is brought home, until the grievances to which it relates are in fact redressed, we may expect an increasingly persistent employment of the right of protest. And a decent respect for our own interest in all of the rights of an American demands that we acquire and manifest a more perfect understanding of this one.

THE AMERICAN HERITAGE OF PUBLIC PROTEST

The major impact of the civil rights demonstrations in 1963 warrants our knowing more of the American heritage of public protest. Too many of us have forgotten the important role protests have played in the history of the United States, and the constitutional rights involved.

De Tocqueville's "Democracy in America" pertinently remarks that the exercise of the right of association in order to pursue common objectives is a potent weapon of free citizens to resist tyranny of the majority and to achieve desired legislative action.[1] The first amendment contained in the Bill of Rights (1791) guarantees the right of the people "peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances." This Federal constitutional guarantee was preceded by provisions of several State constitutions guaranteeing the right of the people to "assemble together, to consult for the common good, to instruct their representatives and to apply to the legislature for redress of grievances."[2] Although stemming historically from the right to petition the crown for redress, set forth in chapter 61 of the Magna Carta (1215), the U.S. Supreme Court has established that the American right is not limited to assembly in order to petition the Government but is an independent right, equally as important as free speech and press.[3]

The Declaration of Independence reminds us that this Nation came into being as an act of protest against discriminatory treatment of the colonies by the British Government. It is not surprising then that we find throughout our turbulent history numerous examples of public and even violent protest either against governmental action or to achieve the creation of new public policy. The formation of a Government of the United States followed such public protests as the Boston Tea Party and those of the earlier movements in Virginia and the Carolinas.

---

[1] De Tocqueville, "Democracy in America" (New York, 1956), pp. 194–195.

[2] North Carolina Constitution, 1776, Declaration of Rights, art. 18. See also similar provisions in the constitutions of Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts.

[3] DeJonge v. Oregon, 299 U.S. 353, 364 (1937).

In New York the protest took a less violent but no less effective from when the Sons of Liberty of New York published, on November 29, 1773, a resolution branding as an "enemy of the liberties of America" whoever aided in transporting, selling or buying the taxed tea. The forceful suppression of these protests culminated in a war of revolution, whose successful conclusion made the paper independence of 1776 an ultimate reality. The relationship between these protests enshrined in history and the current protests on behalf of equal rights for Negroes was recognized by Senator JOHN O. PASTORE in the course of Secretary of State Rusk's July 10, 1963 testimony before the Senate Commerce Committee on the pending civil rights bill. When Senator THURMOND challenged Secretary Rusk's approval of civil rights demonstrations, Senator PASTORE asked Senator THURMOND whether he believed in the Boston Tea Party.

Slavery in the United States, prior to its abolition in 1865 by the 13th amendment, was the object of vigorous public attack and support in the North as well as in the South. William Lloyd Garrison, a leading abolitionist, was a pacifist; the agitation he led and countenanced did not include physical violence or go beyond the bounds of colorful speech and symbolic burnings of copies of the Federal Fugitive Slave Act of 1850 and of court decisions enforcing it.

Determined efforts to stop his nonviolent agitation for abolition involved disorderly public demonstrations and unlawful threats in several Northern cities. For example, on his return in 1835 from London, where he spoke against slavery, Garrison was criticized in the New York newspapers and met at the pier by a throng of 5,000 persons opposing abolition. His appearance in Boston was met with placards urging that he be tarred and feathered. Prominent people, including members of the clergy, joined in denouncing the abolitionists and Boston's Faneuil Hall, that historic cradle of liberty, was packed with a crowd of the best people to listen to speeches denouncing the abolitionists and in support of states' rights and slavery. A month later a mob gathered in front of the Boston office of Garrison's newspaper, the Liberator, and dragged him through the street at the end of a rope. In 1838 a mob opposing the abolitionists rioted for several days in Philadelphia and in the process burned down the newly built Pennsylvania Hall.

For years abolitionists could not meet in New York City without encountering organized disturbances. And even during the Civil War the New York City draft riots of 1863, which in large part reflected anti-Negro sentiment, resulted in thousands of deaths and several lynchings of Negroes. Southern States, such as South Carolina, of course, handled abolition talk very simply by threatening to hang any abolitionist who might fall into their zealous hands. (It is only fair to add, however, that the abolition movement had its start and, prior to 1831, most of its members in the plantation States.[4])

Even though Garrison refused to support or condone them, violent demonstrations also supported the cause of abolition. The enforcement of the Federal Fugitive Slave Act of 1850 requiring the return of escaped slaves met with violent resistance. In 1854 the capture and return of Anthony Burns was met with riot in Boston as well as by Thoreau's famous denunciation, "Slavery in Massachusetts." The Supreme Court's Dred Scott decision in 1857, holding that an escaped slave remained the property of his master, aroused indignation and protest throughout the entire North. The raids, violence, and killings in the struggle to determine whether Kansas would be a free or slave State culminated in John Brown's raid on the Federal arsenal at Harper's Ferry seeking to arm volunteers, white and Negro, to invade the South and free the slaves. Although Brown was promptly captured and hanged, his truth that slavery is an abomination did indeed go marching on and all of the violence on both sides merged into the Civil War.

After the ultimate violence of that fratricidal war, in which more Americans were killed than in any other war in which the United States participated, the struggle to secure the freedom and equal rights of Negroes guaranteed by the 13th (1865), the 14th (1868), and the 15th (1870) amendments, continued. The strongest measures were taken by the Federal Government, including the passage of the Civil Rights Acts of 1866 and 1875, and the series of Reconstruction statutes imposing military rule on the defeated South until 1877.[5] During this period, as at present, Negroes demonstrated to obtain in fact the equal treatment under the laws which the civil rights acts undertook to grant them and then, as now, their peaceful protest actions were met with counterattacks and physical violence. For example, in May 1871, in Louisville, Ky., Negroes who insisted on riding in streetcar seats reserved for whites were dragged off the cars by fellow passengers and bystanders and beaten. When the U.S. Attorney General promised Federal court action to support the rights of the Negro riders, the streetcar company capitulated and allowed passengers to sit where they pleased. The Kentucky press approved this desegregation of the streetcars as a model for good race relations and the community accepted the new state of affairs.[6]

The Supreme Court's 1883 decision in the Civil Rights Cases,[7] holding invalid the act of 1875 which prohibited discrimination in public accommodations, brought to a halt that era of demonstrations to support the rights of Negroes. The 1954 decision in the school segregation cases[8] was the forerunner of the protests currently developing.

Wholly apart from the many forms of proslavery and antislavery agitation, our history has recorded many vigorous public protests, either against action taken by State or Federal authorities or urging action to be taken. Even under the Articles of Confederation it was necessary for State authority to cope with such uprising as Shay's Rebellion. In 1794 the militia of the infant Federal Government was called to suppress the Whiskey Rebellion in western Pennsylvania against the Federal excise tax on liquor. Public agitation against the Senate's ratification of the Jay Treaty terminating the War of the Revolution with Great Britain was so violent and extensive that John Jay, who negotiated the treaty for the United States, was burned in effigy in 1795 at the culmination of public meetings of protest in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Charleston, Savannah, and other cities.[9] Convictions under the infamous Sedition Act of 1798 were protested by large assemblies before the jails demanding the release of the prisoners. In later demonstrations, the suffragettes helped secure voting rights for women; supporters of the Anti-Saloon League contributed to the enactment of prohibition; a "Bonus Army" of thousands of jobless veterans marched on Washington, D.C. in 1932; farmers in the Middle West protested against foreclosures of farm mortgages during the economic depression of the 1930's; and extensive agitation and picketing accompanied the attainment by labor of the right to organize. All these uses of the right of public assembly give solid precedent for the current demonstrations against unequal treatment of Negro citizens.

THE RIGHT OF PROTEST

Two vital questions are immediately presented to the public as it views the current protests: what are the proper limits to which these demonstrations may go, and are the participants under any obligation to avoid occasions where violence may occur?

There is no doubt that some demonstrations have exceeded the proper limits of the constitutionally protected right of protest. For example, last July 4 a protest against discrimination in employment by Jones Beach State Park in Long Island, N.Y., took the form, not merely of legal picketing, but in addition of blocking automobile approaches to the park by bodies of demonstrators lying across the highway. More recently the blocking of all access to the construction site for Downstate Medical Center in Brooklyn, N.Y., in protest against the hiring policies in the construction trades, prevented persons from entering the site on their own business. Each of these violated legal protections of the public's right of movement and thereby exceeded the limits of constitutionally protected activity. The ACLU does not support such excesses; specifically we believe that physical obstruction of the right of movement does not merit civil liberties protection.

But citizens will variously judge these invasions of the rights of others—deliberately done on these occasions by persons prepared to accept the consequences of law violation. We owe these persons acknowledgement that the discrimination they object to is itself a violation of law—more outrageous in these cases because the public's funds, and thereby a measure of official sanction, are involved. Moreover, it recognizes but part of the problem to editorialize, as did the New York Times recently, that "protest certainly cannot be allowed to interfere with the rights of innocent bystanders."[10] This analysis neglects the fact that the majority, long indifferent to racial discrimination, may scarcely be considered to consist entirely of innocent bystanders. Some men of conscience are moved to use extraordinary means only because ordinary ones have seemed to fail.

The Supreme Court has made it clear that the right of assembly is a relative, not an absolute right, subject to regulation to protect the rights of others.[11] But it may be regulated only to protect substantial rights, not merely to avoid inconvenience. Just as the distribution of noncommercial handbills (an exercise of the comparable right of freedom of press) may not be prohibited merely to avoid littering,[12] so the right to assemble and protest may not be denied to avoid possible public unrest, or even violent opposition.[13] A permit may be required for the

---

[4] Charles A. Madison, "Critics and Crusades" (2d ed.; New York, 1951), pp. 3–4.

[5] Claude Bowers, "The Tragic Era" (New York, 1929).

[6] Alan F. Westin, "Ride-In," American Heritage magazine, August 1962.

[7] 109 U.S. 3.

[8] Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483.

[9] Claude Bowers, "Jefferson and Hamilton" (Boston, 1925), pp. 265–288.

[10] "Bounds of Protest," July 9, 1963; see also "Right Goal—Wrong Method," July 22, 1963; "Breakthrough or Breakdown?" July 31, 1963.

[11] Hague v. CIO, 307 U.S. 496, 516 (1939).

[12] Lovell v. Griffin, 303 U.S. 444 (1938).

[13] Kunz v. New York, 340 U.S. 290; Terminiello v. Chicago, 337 U.S. 1. As Mr. Justice Douglas said in Terminiello, of an intensely provocative speech made in a public meeting, "[a] function of free speech under our system * * * is to invite dispute. It may indeed best serve its high purpose when it induces a condition of unrest, creates dissatisfaction with conditions as they are or even stirs people to anger. * * * It may strike holding of parades or public meetings, and meetings and demonstrations may be regulated, for example, to prevent undue restriction of normal traffic or to limit use of facilities to one group at a time. But this power may not be used to "protect" the public from exposure to what some members of it—or some officials—do not want said.[14]

The American majority may well see the predominantly lawful activity which has characterized the current movement as bringing troublesome inconvenience. And indeed the protests forecast even more. Painful readjustments are demanded by the expressed grievances. Many people, in every section of the country, are only now beginning to understand how racism pervades our daily lives and to sense how profoundly all our ways will be affected in the process of eliminating it. As white citizens in northern communites begin to reexamine entrenched habits and customs, particularly those involving schools, employment, and housing, many of the same emotions may be stirred as in a deep southern community moving away from total segregation. Change is difficult and often frightening. But it is coming, and its accomplishment will occupy a towering place in history. Oliver Wendell Holmes said that a man must "share the passion and action of his time at peril of being judged not to have lived," and we are confident that Americans will increasingly welcome the sense of urgency which our time impels. We are also confident that as a beginning each community will bend to accommodate the immediate inconveniences engendered by today's legitimate protests.

The major aspect of the right to demonstrate which has had insufficient attention is found in the suggestions by many of the highest public authorities that assemblies likely to lead to breaches of peace should be avoided. Governors of various States and even the President of the United States have been among the authors of this misstatement of principle. The point that has not been made clear is that the important constitutional right of protest cannot be abridged by the violent threats of lawless individuals opposed to the objectives of the demonstrators.

The courts have plainly declared that important constitutional rights, such as free speech and assembly and equal protection of the laws, cannot be curtailed because of apprehension that the exercise of these rights will result in riotous disturbances by lawless opponents. The U.S. Supreme Court very recently reiterated this point in Wright v. Georgia,[15] in reversing the "breach of peace" conviction of six Negroes for peacefully playing basketball in a "whites only" public park. There the Court said "the possibility of disorder by others (whites, whom the police anticipated would be provoked to a breach of the peace by the Negroes' presence) cannot justify the exclusion of persons from a place if they otherwise have a constitutional right (founded on the equal protection clause) to be present." The constitutional rights of speech and protest are equally fundamental.[16] In Cooper v. Aaron,[17] the "lawless opponents" were State officials themselves who, encouraging mob violence and interposing State units of the National Guard forcibly to prevent compliance with Federal court orders, led the school authorities in Little Rock, Ark., to ask a Federal court to postpone implementation of a desegregation plan because of extreme public hostility. The Supreme Court rejected this petition and ordered immediate reinstatement of the plan, saying that "law and order are not here to be preserved by depriving the Negro children of their constitutional rights." [18]

This issue arises in the streets, at police headquarters and at executive mansions before it reaches the courts and it is the Governors, the mayors, and the police officials who must bring home the truth that demonstrations for racial equality cannot be prohibited because lawless reaction is anticipated. Means must be found to turn the forces of law and order to the protection of the demonstrators and to prevent violence by those who would attack them.

It is unthinkable that the constitutional right to demonstrate peaceably should be abridged by the least tolerant element in the community. Reversing the denial of an injunction against interference with free speech of Jehovah's Witnesses, the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit in Sellers v. Johnson [19] explained:

"Under such a doctrine (that individuals may be deprived of their constitutional rights of assembly if their unpopularity threatens a riot), unpopular political, racial, and religious groups might find themselves virtually inarticulate. Certainly the fundamental rights to assemble, to speak, and to worship cannot be abridged merely because persons threaten to stage a riot or because peace officers believe or are afraid that breaches of the peace will occur if the rights are exercised."

Of course police may be compelled to stop a public meeting or demonstration if the situation develops to the point of imminent riot. But before the tension reaches that stage police must act to prevent hostile threats against peaceful demonstrators from being carried out and to arrest those seeking to break up an assembly.[20] There is no legal or constitutional right for other citizens to interfere with a public assembly.[21]

NEEDED: A NATIONAL COMMITMENT

The exercise of the right of assembly, protest and demonstration cannot guarantee a redress of all just grievances and of only those which are just. Not every movement of protest will be successful, nor will history necessarily judge to be just all those which are successful.

But grievances must be heard in order to be redressed—and in a forum where action can be taken that is responsive to the whole thrust of the problems raised. Underlying the emphasis which the civil rights movement now places upon public demonstrations is the proven inadequacy of the forums in which their grievances have previously been heard. The courts have responded to their suits with unequivocal declarations of the right to equal treatment. Yet 9 years after the decision in the school segregation cases, but a small proportion of Negro students in biracial districts attend integrated schools, and parks and other public facilities continue to discriminate. Presidents and Governors have issued Executive orders in response to the pleas of civil rights leaders, dealing among other things with discrimination in public employment. Yet lack of employment opportunities for nonwhite people is a problem approaching crisis proportions today. Congress has legislated that there shall be no discrimination in voting rights, but application of these laws has so far made only a small dent in the rejection that faces many Negroes seeking to vote.

Each of these forums—the judicial, the Executive, and the legislative—has responded, when it acted, with an unequivocal endorsement of the justice of the civil rights demands and each has contributed important gains which have in turn given impetus to both the demands and the awakening of the American conscience. But these gains, in the context of the total problem, have afforded only a token measure of redress. What has not yet come to pass is a commitment of the whole Nation to right the wrongs toward minority races embedded in the patterns of our national existence. Such a commitment can only come from a total awareness of the problems, and of the inconsistent clash that exists between our historic and constitutional standards of equality and our everyday practices. Only appeal in a larger forum—the public demonstrations—can achieve that total awareness. Only then will legislation, Executive action, judicial decree and private response concur to redress not merely some grievances, but an entire pattern of second-class citizenship.

Thus it is that our aggrieved countrymen have come to state their case in the largest forum our free society provides. They follow the path of countless others—from the participants in the Boston Tea Party to the suffragettes and the trade unionists. They count on a core of humanity and decency in their fellow men to respond to a case that is well and forcefully stated. And, as their cause is just, so may we as confidently count on the Nation's ultimate response to be equal to it.

[From the Boston Herald]

PERSPECTIVE ON OLD RIGHTS

The American Civil Liberties Union's scholarly new pamphlet on the legal and historical justification of civil-rights demonstrations ought to be read by everyone who seeks an understanding of this extraordinary social phenomenon of our times.

Indeed, the pamphlet constitutes a whole new gloss on the treasured first amendment rights of peaceable assembly and of petition to the Government for redress of grievances.

Although the ACLU does not abandon its traditional role as a friend of the underdog, in no sense is its pamphlet onesided.

---

at prejudices and preconceptions and have profound unsettling effects as it presses for acceptance of an idea." 337 U.S. at 4. These words apply equally to protest demonstrations.

[14] Hague v. CIO, note 11 above (holding void a municipal "permit" ordinance which had been used by local authorities to prevent public meetings on behalf of union organization); Rockwell v. Morris, 211 New York State 2d 25, affd. 10 N.Y. 2d 721, cert. denied 368 U.S. 913 (requiring issuance of a permit to hold a public meeting for a speech by a "'self-confessed advocate of violence' and Hitlerian methods").

[15] 373 U.S. 284.

[16] Edwards v. South Carolina, 373 U.S. 229 (peaceful protest on State capital grounds; Rockwell v. Morris, note 14, above; Terminiello v. Chicago, note 13, above (inflammatory speech which occasioned mob violence by opponents outside the meeting hall).

[17] 358 U.S. 1.

[18] 358 U.S. at 16.

[19] 163 F. 2d 877, 881.

[20] Police Commissioner Michael J. Murphy, of New York City, on June 20, 1963, issued a public statement describing the responsibility assumed by the police of department he heads. In it he said: "The police are the representatives of the government—a government of laws, not men. The police have a sworn duty to enforce the law—impartially, objectively and equally. * * * They recognize and respect the right of the people to express their views on matters of public concern. The police will protect the rights of all to peacefully assemble and petition. They will brook no interference with these rights by anyone. Their impartial role is clear and set by law."

[21] See dissenting opinions in Feiner v. New York, 304 N.Y. 315; also, David Fellman, "The Constitutional Right of Association," pp. 29–33.

It acknowledges that the current demonstrations have at times exceeded the proper limits of the constitutionally protected right of protest, citing two cases in point—the July 4 demonstration at Jones Beach State Park in Long Island, where pickets blocked access by automobiles by lying across the highway, and the more recent demonstration against discrimination in construction trade hiring in Brooklyn, where pickets prevented persons from entering the site on their own business.

"Each of these (cases) violated legal protection of the public's right of movement and thereby exceeded the limits of constitutionally protected activity," says the pamphlet.

But even these demonstrations ought not to be condemned out of hand, the ACLU goes on to suggest. "We owe these persons acknowledgment that the discrimination they object to is itself a violation of law, more outrageous in these cases because the public's funds, and thereby a measure of official sanction, are involved."

America's heritage of public protest, the ACLU notes, is indeed a rich one, including such notable events as the Boston Tea Party.

"The Declaration of Independence," declares the pamphlet, "reminds us that this Nation came into being as an act of protest against discriminatory treatment of the Colonies by the British Government."

And the ACLU also points out the lack of either legal or moral justification in suggestions that demonstrations ought to be discontinued when they meet with violent disfavor.

"The courts," says the pamphlet, "have plainly declared that important constitutional rights, such as free speech and assembly and equal protection of the laws, cannot be curtailed because of apprehension that the exercise of these rights will result in riotous disturbances by lawless opponents. Means must be found to turn the forces of law and order to the protection of the demonstrators and to prevent violence by those who would attack them. There is no legal or constitutional right for other citizens to interfere with a public assembly."

[From the Baltimore Sun]

SPEECH WITH ORDER

The American Civil Liberties Union, widely respected for its vigilant constitutionalism, has come out with a statement on picketing and demonstrations. The statement refers obviously to current activities, but it draws on universal rules. The law of picketing and of demonstrations, arising from constitutional guarantees, was developed in the great labor surge of the early thirties and thereafter. The ACLU now applies this body of doctrine as enunciated in the Supreme Court decisions to the current problems.

The gist of the matter is that picketing and demonstrations come under the first amendment protections of the right to speak and assemble. The Supreme Court has held that the picket's placard is as much a publication as a newspaper or a constitutional treatise, and privileged in the same degree. The demonstration, a merely more complex or massive form of picketing or assembly shares the same protections under the Bill of Rights.

But every right involves a duty, and the duties keep the rights from being absolute. Just as there is an individual or a group right to speak, to publish, to persuade, by picketing and demonstration, so there is what the ACLU calls "the public's right to movement." It goes without saying that the picketing privilege does not extend to violent attack; neither does it extend to the blockade, however passive, of public ways. (A demonstration like that scheduled for next Wednesday in Washington, arranged with the help of law officers, does not constitute blockade of public ways—if it proceeds as planned.) "Physical obstruction to the [public's] right of movement does not merit civil liberties protection," says the ACLU.

Well, then, can provocateurs compel the prohibition of picketing and demonstration by threatening to precipitate violence or obstruction? Not at all, says the ACLU: "The important constitutional right of protest cannot be abridged by the violent threats of lawless individuals opposed to the objectives of the demonstrators." The rule, after all, is not a complicated one: Speech and assembly will be protected, and so will law and order.

ANNIVERSARY OF HUNGARIAN REVOLUTION OF 1956

Mr. HART. Mr. President, October 23 marked the seventh aniversary of the Hungarian revolution of 1956. In the nature of things, time assuages bitter passions. We seem now to be progressing toward resumption of normal relations with the Hungarian Government.

This seems strange in the light of our bitter resentment at the time of the uprising's suppressions. Even so, there is wisdom in taking measures which must ultimately ease world tensions and lead to a less austere existence for the people of Hungary.

Taking this step is not condoning the 1956 attack on a virtually unarmed civilian population. It certainly is not an abandonment of concern and hope that the Hungarian people soon will win the personal freedom and national independence for which they fought so gallantly.

Mr. President, there are many thousands of persons—many now citizens of the United States—who fought in the Hungarian revolution and who were fortunate to be able to escape from Hungary. They fled from Hungary but not from a moral concern for the welfare and the future of their brethren whom they left behind.

During October, throughout the United States, these fighters for Hungarian freedom are commemorating the events and ideals of the Hungarian revolution of 1956. They will reaffirm their determination that the Hungarian people's yearning for freedom shall not be forgotten.

Mr. President, I join with them in this desire.

SPECIAL TREATMENT FOR FILING OF DELINQUENT TAX RETURNS

Mr. WILLIAMS of Delaware. Mr. President, today I wish to call attention to another situation wherein this administration after finding a glaring violation of the law by one of its Frontiersmen allowed this individual merely to submit a quiet resignation and then promptly proceeded to brush the whole episode under the rug.

On August 14, 1963, Mr. Herbert K. May, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs, submitted his resignation, which was accepted by the administration with the usual profound regrets.

The record shows that Mr. May not only had an historical record of delinquencies in the filing of his tax returns but also had neglected to file any returns at all during the 8-year period 1953 to 1961. When this was discovered the only action taken was to allow him in 1963 to file returns retroactively for those delinquent years, 1953 through 1961, and then submit what as far as the public was concerned was an honorable resignation.

This is quite a contrast to what would have happened had this been an ordinary laborer or farmer without proper political connections.

Some explanation of this special treatment for this New Frontiersman should be forthcoming from both the Department of Justice and the Treasury Department.

At this point I ask unanimous consent to insert a letter dated October 3, 1963, signed by Mr. Mortimer Caplin, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, confirming this situation.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE,
Washington, D.C. October 3, 1963.

Hon. JOHN J. WILLIAMS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR WILLIAMS: In response to your letter of August 21, 1963, there is shown below a summary of the income tax filing record of Mr. Herbert K. May for the years 1948 through 1962.

YEAR AND FILING RECORD

1948, timely filed.
1949, delinquently filed in 1951.
1950, delinquently filed in 1952.
1951, delinquently filed in 1953.
1952, delinquently filed in 1953.
1953 through 1961, delinquently filed in 1963.
1962, timely filed.

The district director in Baltimore, in whose office all of these returns were filed, reports that there are no outstanding unpaid assessments for any of these years.

I hope that this information satisfactorily answers your questions in the matter.

With kind regards,
Sincerely,

MORTIMER CAPLIN,
Commissioner.

SOME DIED

Mrs. NEUBERGER. Mr. President—

The average prescription costs a weeks wages for these people * * * something they could not possibly afford. Some went without drugs * * * they had to stay sick * * * some died.

These words spoken by the Acting Health Minister of Colombia, Dr. Alberto Escobar, paid grim tribute to the efficiency of a fearsome campaign by drug companies, including leading American firms, to choke off the sale of low-cost drugs in Latin America. In a recent report from Caracas, Venezuela, and Bogotá, Colombia, published by the Herald Tribune, William Haddad furnished firsthand evidence of the guerrilla warfare currently being waged by a combine of American and Latin American drug firms.

The Colombian and Venezuelan Governments, troubled by the poverty of their people, have been attempting to stimulate the marketing of low-cost generic-name drugs. Last year the Colombian Government succeeded in enlisting the cooperation of a major Amer-news

AMERICAN JEWISH CONGRESS

STEPHEN WISE CONGRESS HOUSE, 15 EAST 84th STREET • NEW YORK 28, N. Y. • TRAFALGAR 9-4500

Pub. Accomm. Sen.

LWDL
S
B

Richard Cohen, Director
Department of Public Relations

For Release
Sunday, Dec. 22

1963 A RECORD YEAR FOR PASSAGE OF STATE ANTI-DISCRIMINATION LAWS, AMERICAN JEWISH CONGRESS REPORTS

70% of Americans Covered by State Public Accommodation Laws and 65% by State Fair Employment Laws, Study Shows; Arguments Against Federal Laws Held 'Punctured'

NEW YORK, Dec. 21 -- Nearly 70 per cent of the American people live in states prohibiting discrimination in places of public accommodation and 65 per cent are covered by state fair employment laws, the American Jewish Congress reported today in its biennial summary of state civil rights legislation.

The survey also disclosed that more states adopted more anti-discrimination laws in 1963 than in any previous year. Twenty-five states adopted a total of 45 bills and three constitutional provisions during the year, the report said.

In a statement accompanying the 25-page report, Ephraim London, chairman of the American Jewish Congress Commission on Law and Social Action, declared:

"Much of the heat generated by opponents of proposed Federal civil rights legislation would be dissipated by a sober, objective study of the facts contained in this report.

"We may take, as an example, the shrill charge that a law prohibiting discrimination in theatres, restaurants and other public places would overthrow cherished rights of private property. Surely propert rights are still cherished in the 30 states and the District of Columbia where such laws have been adopted."

He said that 124,882,281 Americans -- 69.6 per cent of the total population -- live in states in which discrimination in places of public accommodation is prohibited. These, he said, include 42.6 per cent of U.S. Negroes and 93.9 per cent of American Jews.

MORE

Mr. London added that "the elaborate arguments against Federal fair employment legislation are similarly punctured by the operation of no less than 25 state laws against job bias." He said these laws apply to 115,759,778 Americans or 64.6 per cent of the total population. These include 39.7 per cent of the total number of Negroes and 89.7 per cent of the total number of American Jews.

In his statement, Mr. London said the report showed that "the American people firmly believe that government has a responsibility to take action against inequality.

"The fact that minority groups continue to demand more laws prohibiting discriminatory practices is evidence that they have found the laws already enacted to be beneficial," he asserted. "The fact that legislatures continue to adopt them is persuasive evidence that they have caused none of the disruption sometimes predicted for them."

The report also noted that 74,261,515 Americans -- 41.4 per cent of the total population -- lived in states that have outlawed discrimination in housing. This covers 24.9 per cent of the country's Negro population and 78.4 per cent of American Jews.

State fair education laws now cover 51,802,722 persons -- 28.9 per cent of the nation's population, according to the report. In these states live 20.6 per cent of the U.S. Negro population and 66.3 per cent of the Jewish population.

The American Jewish Congress study was prepared by Joseph B. Robison, assistant director of the organization's Commission on Law and Social Action. Leo Pfeffer is director of the Commission.

'Impressive' Number of State Laws in Effect

As a result of the actions of state legislatures during 1963, the survey noted, "an impressive number of state anti-discrimination laws are now in effect." The American Jewish Congress report summarized them as follows:

1) Twenty-five states prohibit job discrimination -- 21 by administrative order and four by criminal penalties.

2) Seven states broadly prohibit discrimination in education, enforced by administrative agencies, while a number of other states have more limited legislation dealing with discrimination in schools.

3) Eleven states have by statute prohibited discrimination in a substantial portion of the general housing market and a twelfth state appears to have done so by constitutional provision. A number of states have more limited statutes applying to public and public-assisted housing.

MORE

4) Thirty states and the District of Columbia have outlawed discrimination in places of public accommodation. Of these, 15 states provide for administrative enforcement.

The biennial report also listed nine anti-discrimination laws enacted in three states in 1962. Highlights of state civil rights legislation passed during the two-year period covered in the report are listed under these headings:

Employment

Eleven states in 1963 and one in 1962 enacted laws dealing with job discrimination. An "important breakthrough" was the Indiana statute making its fair employment law enforceable. Today every industrial state outside the South has an enforceable fair employment law.

Hawaii enacted a fair employment law providing for administrative enforcement by criminal penalty rather than court decree.

Oklahoma, a border state, enacted detailed provisions barring discrimination in state employment.

Education

Four states adopted seven bills and a constitutional provision banning discrimination in education. Illinois and California enacted statutes -- the first in the U.S. -- aimed at eliminating "de facto" public school segregation.

Housing

During the two-year period covered in the report, Alaska and California acopted comprehensive fair housing laws and three states -- Connecticut, Massachusetts and New York -- amended existing laws to cover virtually the entire housing market.

Public Accommodations

Twelve states adopted laws affecting discrimination in places of public accommodation -- two of them, Maryland and South Dakota, for the first time.

Human Rights Commissions

Oklahoma, a border state, established a human relations commission with power to investigate and attempt to eliminate discrimination.

Other

Three states -- Arizona, Nebraska and Utah -- repealed their laws prohibiting interracial marriage.

By the end of 1963, the proposed Constitutional amendment prohibiting poll taxes as a prerequisite to voting in Federal electionshad been ratified by the legislatures of 36 states.

RCrk-12/20/63 -30-
AJ:DM:NP:Wash:Off:Reg:Aff.

HC..
T
UPI A75N AJ

Pu[illegible] — General

NIGHT LEAD RACIAL

CLARKSDALE, MISS., AUG. 1 (UPI)--FOUR SOUTHERN CITIES EXPERIENCED ANTI-SEGREGATION DEMONSTRATIONS TODAY BUT THE INCIDENTS WERE MILD IN COMPARISON TO RACIAL HAPPENINGS IN NEW YORK AND CHICAGO.

ONE NEW YORK POLICEMAN WAS BEATEN AND KICKED IN A CLASH WITH PICKETS DEMANDING MORE JOBS FOR NEGROES WITHIN THE CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY, AND CHICAGO POLICE NARROWLY AVERTED A PRE-DAWN BATTLE BETWEEN HUNDREDS OF NEGROES AND WHITES AT ODDS OVER TWO NEGRO FAMILIES THAT SETTLED IN A WHITE NEIGHBORHOOD.

THE FOUR SOUTHERN CITIES WHERE DEMONSTRATIONS OCCURRED INCLUDED CLARKSDALE, MISS., HUMBOLT, TENN., CHARLESTON, S.C., AND WINSTON-SALEM, N.C.

FOURTEEN NEGRO DEMONSTRATORS WERE ARRESTED IN CLARKSDALE WHEN THEY ATTEMPTED TO PICKET A DIME STORE WITH PLACARDS READING "GOODBYE UNCLE TOM, HELLO FREEDOM JOE."

EARLIER IN THE DAY A CLARKSDALE MUNICIPAL JUDGE CONVICTED 33 NEGROES ON CHARGES OF PARADING WITHOUT A PERMIT IN A SIMILAR DEMONSTRATION YESTERDAY. HE SENTENCED EACH TO 30 DAYS IN JAIL AND A FINE OF $101.

AT HUMBOLT, POLICE ARRESTED 36 NEGROES, MOST OF THEM JUVENILES, WHEN THEY ATTEMPTED A MARCH THROUGH THE DOWNTOWN SECTION WITHOUT FIRST OBTAINING A PARADE PERMIT. THERE WERE NO INCIDENTS AND THOSE 17 YEARS OF AGE OR UNDER WERE RELEASED IN THE CUSTODY OF THEIR PARENTS.

ABOUT 150 NEGROES PARADED IN THE PORT CITY OF CHARLESTON WITHOUT INCIDENT, AND AT WINSTON-SALEM REV. JAMES D. BALLARD, LOCAL HEAD OF THE CONGRESS OF RACIAL EQUALITY (CORE), WAS ARRESTED, BUT LATER RELEASED UNDER A 1942 ORDINANCE PROHIBITING LOITERING AND ASSEMBLY ON SIDEWALKS. PICKETING OF K&W CAFETERIAS IN WINSTON-SALEM CONTINUED.

IN ANOTHER DEVELOPMENT AT CHARLESTON, A CIRCUIT JUDGE ORDERED TWO INTEGRATION LEADERS--REV. I. DEQUINCY NEWMAN AND JAMES BLAKE--TO SHOW CAUSE AUG. 9 WHY THEY SHOULD NOT BE HELD IN CONTEMPT OF COURT FOR VIOLATION OF A JULY 5 ORDER BARRING CIVIL RIGHTS PROTESTS THAT INTERFERE WITH PEDESTRIAN TRAFFIC.

IN BIRMINGHAM, FEDERAL JUDGE CLARENCE W. ALLGOOD DECLINED TO ASSUME JURISDICTION OF A CIRCUIT COURT INJUNCTION PROHIBITING CERTAIN TYPES OF RACIAL DEMONSTRATIONS AT GADSDEN, ALA.

ALLGOOD SAID THE NEGROES FAILED TO SHOW A "FEDERAL QUESTION" WHICH WOULD PERMIT HIM TO MOVE JURISDICTION FROM THE ETOWAH COUNTY CIRCUIT COURT TO FEDERAL COURT.

NEGRO ATTORNEYS WANTED THE JURISDICTION MOVED TO GET FEDERAL COURT HEARINGS FOR MORE THAN 300 NEGROES ARRESTED IN ANTI-SEGREGATION DEMONSTRATIONS RECENTLY FOR VIOLATING THE INJUNCTION. NEGROES CLAIMED PROSECUTION IN STATE COURTS WOULD VIOLATE THEIR CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS.

THE INJUNCTION PROHIBITS NEGROES FROM BLOCKING DORWAYS OR OTHERWISE OBSTRUCTING PUBLIC TRAFFIC DURING DEMONSTRATIONS. IN HIS ORDER LAST JUNE, CIRCUIT JUDGE A. B. CUNNINGHAM PERMITTED PEACEFUL PROTESTS.

THE ORDER WAS LATER AMENDED TO MAKE IT ILLEGAL FOR NEGROES TO REFUSE TO LEAVE RESTAURANTS WHEN REQUESTED TO DO SO BY THE OWNER.

ALLGOOD HAD THE NEGROES' REQUEST UNDER ADVISEMENT FOR 10 DAYS. HIS REFUSAL TO ACCEPT JURISDICTION MEANS THE NEGROES WILL RECEIVE HEARINGS IN STATE COURTS ALTHOUGH THERE WAS NO INDICATION WHEN THE HEARINGS WOULD BE HELD.

OTHER RACIAL DEVELOPMENTS:

--THE STATE OF NEW JERSEY CUT OFF SCHOOL AID PAYMENTS TO THE ORANGE BOARD OF EDUCATION UNTIL IT REDUCES RACIAL IMBALANCE IN ITS SCHOOLS.

--THE CITY OF TORRANCE, CALIF., WENT INTO COURT SEEKING AN ORDER TO RESTRICT RACIAL PICKETING AT A HOUSING TRACT. ACTOR MARLON BRANDO WAS AMONG THE MORE THAN 100 INDIVIDUALS NAMED IN THE COMPLAINT.

--AN AMUSEMENT PARK IN OKLAHOMA CITY THAT WAS OPENED TO NEGROES AND THEN CLOSED TO THEM EXCEPT FOR ONE DAY A WEEK ANNOUNCED IT WILL BE REOPENED TO ALL RACES NEXT TUESDAY.

--FINAL ARGUMENTS WERE HEARD BY A CORPORATIONS COURT JUDGE IN DANVILLE, VA. ON THE ISSUE OF WHETHER THE COURT SHOULD LIFT ITS INJUNCTION AGAINST ANTI-SEGREGATION DEMONSTRATIONS. DESPITE THE CONCLUSION OF ARGUMENTS, THE HEARING WAS HELD OPEN BECAUSE OF A HOSPITALIZED WITNESS.

--NINE YOUNG ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA., NEGROES WERE CONVICTED OF STAGING ILLEGAL SIT-INS AND WERE SENTENCED TO 45 DAYS IN JAIL OR $100 FINES.

--THE UNIVERSITY OF SOUTH CAROLINA FORMALLY ACCEPTED ITS FIRST NEGRO STUDENT SINCE THE RECONSTRUCTION ERA.

UH616PES..

UPI A75N WA

MISSILES -- WITH K

Appendix I

Statistics and Charts Relating to Annual Sales of Specified Types of Businesses in Ten Selected Cities

Appendix I, Table 1

Number of Establishments and Percentage with Sales of $150,000 or more, $100,000 or more, $50,000 or more, and $30,000 or more, and Average Sales, for Five Kinds of Business In Ten Illustrative Standard Metropolitan Statistical Areas, 1958

SMSA and Kind of Business	Number of Establishments 1/	Percentage of Establishments 1/ with Sales of: $150,000 or more	Less Than $150,000	$100,000 or more	Less Than $100,000	$50,000 or more	Less Than $50,000	$30,000 or more	Less Than $30,000	Average Sales, all Establishments ($ thousands)
Atlanta, Georgia
Gasoline Service Stations	1,002	19	81	25	75	57	43	77	23	74
Eating Places	894	12	88	14	86	35	65	49	51	63
Drinking Places	104	5	95	7	93	35	65	66	34	45
Department Stores	8	100	-	100	-	100	-	100	-	17,109
Variety Stores	118	28	72	32	68	57	43	73	27	207
Birmingham, Alabama
Gasoline Service Stations	566	16	84	22	78	57	43	78	22	66
Eating Places	622	7	93	9	91	23	77	40	60	52
Drinking Places	113	1	99	1	99	17	83	47	53	34
Department Stores	10	100	-	100	-	100	-	100	-	6,093
Variety Stores	55	36	64	40	60	55	45	78	22	297
Dallas, Texas
Gasoline Service Stations	1,128	19	81	25	75	59	41	77	23	76
Eating Places	1,202	12	88	14	86	30	70	49	51	57
Drinking Places	149	7	93	9	91	24	76	49	51	44
Department Stores	18	100	-	100	-	100	-	100	-	7,650
Variety Stores	137	32	68	39	61	60	40	71	29	135
Houston, Texas
Gasoline Service Stations	1,392	18	82	24	76	58	42	75	25	70
Eating Places	1,283	11	89	14	86	28	72	44	56	53
Drinking Places	558	1	99	1	99	5	95	16	84	20
Department Stores	17	100	-	100	-	100	-	100	-	7,780
Variety Stores	91	33	67	38	62	59	41	71	29	243

Appendix I, Table 1 (Continued)

SMSA and Kind of Business	Number of Establishments 1/	Percentage of Establishments 1/ with Sales of: $150,000 or more	Less Than $150,000	$100,000 or more	Less Than $100,000	$50,000 or more	Less Than $50,000	$30,000 or more	Less Than $30,000	Average Sales, all Establishments ($ thousands)
Kansas City, Mo. - Kans.
Gasoline Service Stations	951	20	80	26	74	57	43	77	23	78
Eating Places	1,087	11	89	13	87	26	74	44	56	56
Drinking Places	506	2	98	3	97	24	76	53	47	37
Department Stores	20	100	-	100	-	100	-	100	-	5,300
Variety Stores	104	40	60	46	54	57	43	65	35	189
Memphis, Tennessee
Gasoline Service Stations	550	20	80	27	73	60	40	80	20	75
Eating Places	701	6	94	8	92	21	79	40	60	42
Drinking Places	63	-	100	-	100	5	95	32	68	23
Department Stores	10	100	-	100	-	100	-	100	-	6,869
Variety Stores	67	30	70	36	64	46	54	54	46	129
Miami, Florida
Gasoline Service Stations	787	24	76	31	69	66	34	86	14	85
Eating Places	1,176	17	83	21	79	36	64	50	50	84
Drinking Places	508	6	94	8	92	25	75	42	58	42
Department Stores	12	100	-	100	-	100	-	100	-	7,425
Variety Stores	86	40	60	46	54	78	22	88	12	257
New Orleans, Louisiana
Gasoline Service Stations	552	23	77	31	69	61	39	79	21	78
Eating Places	920	12	88	15	85	30	70	46	54	63
Drinking Places	975	3	97	3	97	13	87	32	68	32
Department Stores	13	100	-	100	-	100	-	100	-	7,811
Variety Stores	63	44	56	51	49	60	40	65	35	343

Appendix I, Table 1 (Continued)

SMSA and Kind of Business	Number of Establishments 1/	Percentage of Establishments 1/ with Sales of: $150,000 or more	Less Than $150,000	$100,000 or more	Less Than $100,000	$50,000 or more	Less Than $50,000	$30,000 or more	Less Than $30,000	Average Sales, all Establishments ($ thousands)
Richmond, Virginia
Gasoline Service Stations	461	17	83	22	78	57	43	78	22	76
Eating Places	607	7	93	8	92	28	72	54	46	48
Drinking Places	46	-	100	-	100	9	91	54	46	30
Department Stores	7	100	-	100	-	100	-	100	-	10,170
Variety Stores	50	20	80	22	78	38	62	72	28	178
St. Louis, Mo. - Ill.
Gasoline Service Stations	1,845	21	79	28	72	59	41	81	19	84
Eating Places	1,976	1	99	13	87	27	73	46	54	54
Drinking Places	2,112	1	99	2	98	13	87	39	61	30
Department Stores	25	100	-	100	-	100	-	100	-	10,510
Variety Stores	190	40	60	47	53	66	34	74	26	215

Source: Based on data in 1958 Census of Business, Volume 1, Retail Trade -- Summary Statistics, U.S. Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census

1/ Establishments operated entire year.

Appendix I, Table 2

Population of Selected Department of Commerce
Field Office Cities, 1960

City	Population
Atlanta, Georgia	487,455
Birmingham, Alabama	340,887
Dallas, Texas	679,684
Houston, Texas	938,219
Kansas City, Missouri	475,539
Memphis, Tennessee	497,524
Miami, Florida	291,688
New Orleans, Louisiana	627,525
Richmond, Virginia	219,958
St. Louis, Missouri	750,026

Source: 1960 Census of Population, U.S. Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census

Appendix I, Table 3

Number of Places Distributed by Population Size Group and Percentage of State's Population in Each Group, for Southern States, 1960

State	1,000,000 or more		100,000 to 1,000,000		50,000 to 100,000		25,000 to 50,000		10,000 to 25,000		2,500 to 10,000		Under 2,500 (incl. rural places)
	Number of Places	% of State Pop.	Number of Places	% of State Pop.	Number of Places	% of State Pop.	Number of Places	% of State Pop.	Number of Places	% of State Pop.	Number of Places	% of State Pop.	Number of Places	% of State Pop.
Alabama	-	-	3	20.7	3	5.9	8	8.0	15	6.2	80	11.3	250	47.9
Arkansas	-	-	1	6.0	2	6.2	3	5.5	12	10.4	48	13.6	366	58.3
Delaware	-	-	-	-	1	21.5	-	-	1	2.6	8	8.6	41	67.4
Florida	-	-	4	19.1	6	8.4	13	9.2	30	9.0	126	12.4	257	42.0
Georgia	-	-	3	19.1	3	5.0	5	3.9	23	9.4	90	10.8	489	51.8
Kentucky	-	-	1	12.9	2	4.1	5	5.5	13	5.8	67	10.5	311	61.3
Louisiana	-	-	3	29.0	2	3.5	4	4.4	20	9.4	72	10.6	192	43.0
Maryland	-	-	1	30.3	4	8.4	6	6.3	21	10.9	34	5.5	129	38.6
Mississippi	-	-	1	6.6	-	-	7	11.8	10	7.8	52	11.4	220	62.4
North Carolina	-	-	3	9.5	4	6.5	8	6.3	21	7.3	89	9.0	429	61.6
Oklahoma	-	-	2	25.2	1	2.6	5	7.5	18	12.6	63	13.2	455	38.9
South Carolina	-	-	-	-	3	9.6	3	4.8	9	5.6	61	12.6	232	67.4
Tennessee	-	-	4	25.5	-	-	5	4.0	22	9.2	63	8.7	212	52.6
Texas	-	-	11	38.4	10	7.2	19	6.7	62	9.8	218	11.1	572	26.7
Virginia	-	-	5	23.1	4	8.4	3	2.8	17	6.3	47	5.6	187	53.8
West Virginia	-	-	-	-	3	12.0	4	6.9	8	7.3	41	10.0	203	63.9

Source: 1960 Census of Population, U.S. Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census

Appendix I, Table 4

Distribution of Restaurants in the United States, by Size and Percentage of Sales, 1958

	Establishment Basis			Enterprise Basis
Size of Business - Gross Vol. of Sales	Number of Restaurants	% of Total Number	% of Total Sales	Number of Restaurants	% of Total Number	% of Total Sales
Over $ 1,000,000	325	0.1	3.5	7,000	2.0	10.0
Over $ 500,000	1,625	0.5	10.0	10,000	3.0	20.0
Over $ 300,000	4,322	1.4	17.3	20,000	7.0	30.0
Over $ 100,000	24,760	8.0	40.9	40,000	13.0	50.0
Over $ 50,000	69,000	22.5	63.0	69,000	22.5	60.0
All Establishments:	306,000	100.0	100.0	306,000	100.0	100.0

Source: Prepared by the American Restaurant Association

Appendix I
Chart 1

GASOLINE SERVICE STATIONS

Appendix I
Chart 1 (cont'd)

GASOLINE SERVICE STATIONS

Sales (thousands of dollars)

GASOLINE SERVICE STATIONS

Sales (thousands of dollars)

Appendix I
Chart 2

EATING PLACES

Appendix I
Chart 2 (cont'd)

EATING PLACES

EATING PLACES

Sales (thousands of dollars)

Appendix I
Chart 3

DRINKING PLACES

Appendix I
Chart 3 (cont'd)

DRINKING PLACES

DRINKING PLACES

Sales (thousands of dollars)

Appendix I
Chart 4

DEPARTMENT STORES

Appendix I
Chart 4(Cont'd.)

DEPARTMENT STORES

Appendix I
Chart 4 (Cont'd.)

DEPARTMENT STORES

Sales (thousands of dollars)

Appendix I
Chart 5

Variety Stores

Appendix I
Chart 5 (Cont'd)

Variety Stores

VARIETY STORES

Sales (thousands of dollars)

ST. LOUIS

Public Accommodations Policy

Ordinance 50553

The Law:

Board Bill 18, establishing a public accommodations policy, was passed by the St. Louis Board of Aldermen on May 19, 1961, and signed by Mayor Raymond R. Tucker on June 1, 1961, to become effective on July 1, 1961.

Purpose:

"To insure that there be no discriminatory practices in places of public accommodations on account of race, color, religious beliefs, ancestory, or national origin."

Places of Public Accommodation:

All places and businesses offering service to the general public, including, but not limited to places providing food, shelter, recreation and amusement.

Provisions:

Places serving the public shall not deny service, privileges or equal accommodation advantages to any person on account of race, color or religion; nor post or circulate discriminatory information or advertisement.

Administration:

The Anti-Discrimination Division of the St. Louis Council on Human Relations shall have full administration responsibility.

Enforcement:

The administrative body shall have power to initiate on its own or receive, investigate and seek to adjust all complaints or discriminatory practices; and, to hold hearings, subpoena witnesses and compel their attendance.

Prosecution:

Refusal to comply with this ordinance may result in the case being referred to the City Counselor for appropriate action. Any persons found to be in violation shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined from $25.00 to $500.00.

Display of Ordinance:

A copy of Board Bill No. 18 shall be kept conspicuously posted in all places of public accommodation.

FOR FULL

INFORMATION

AND ASSISTANCE

Contact

ST. LOUIS COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

Room 200, Municipal Courts Building

1320 Market Street MA 1-5560 - Station 301

Pub. Fac.

WHAT'S WHAT WITH JEKYLL ISLAND?

AFTER ALMOST A YEAR OF FUTILE ATTEMPTS TO NEGOTIATIE THE DESEGREGATION OF THE JEKYLL ISLAND GOLF COURSE WITH PERSONS DESIGNATED BY THE STATE OF GEORGIA AS RESPONSIBLE FOR ITS OPERATION, THE GEORIGA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS AND THE NAACP REQUESTED APPEARANCE BEFORE THE NEWLY CREATED JEKYLL ISLAND STATE PARK AUTHORITY TO AIR GRIEVANCES.

For reasons not clearly understood and among which was the expressed belief that "the Council speaks for all Negroes", the NAACP was not granted an audience.

March 11, 1963 - The Staff of the GCHR met with the Jekyll Authority at its annual meeting. We asked for not only free and unrestricted use of Jekyll, but of all public facilities over which the "Authority" exercised jurisdiction.

The Chairman of the State Park Authority and the newly-appointed Director of State Parks were quite firm in their assertion that ample provisions were made for Negroes. The State Auditor suggested that we produce a guarantee that desegregation would not drive the whites away and added: "You (Negroes) might have the right to use the facilities, but we would not like to make a decision until we have talked with the Attorney General (an absent member of the 'Authority')". The GCHR was to be contacted when this decision had been made.

March 23, 1963 - For reasons strictly their own, the NAACP decided to take some independent action. This action took the form of an omnibus move; an attempt to use all facilities on Jekyll Island.

The NAACP Youth Council of Savannah and Brunswick, led by the State President of Branches, W. W. Law, and J. C. Hope, Chairman of the Political Action Committee of the Brunswick Branch, visited Jekyll Island on Saturday afternoon, March 23rd. They attempted to use all State operated facilities. They were refused. This refusal does not jibe with Mr. Fortson's statement on March 11, 1963 when he asserted that "the venture of Jekyll Island is so new until a RACIAL POLICY HAS NOT BEEN ESTABLISHED."

Why Use Jekyll Island?? State brochures proudly proclaim the many features of Georgia's year round family beach resort. The "lower end", reserved for use by Negroes, has none of the facilities which are available on the "upper end." Jekyll Island, however, is the one state park listed as operated for both races. Georgia operates a total of 37 parks; 30 for whites, 6 for Negroes - JEKYLL FOR BOTH RACES.

Of the many discrepancies which could be listed, only one is mentioned now, - the matter of financing. Figures for expenditures as listed in the State Auditor's report for 1962 show:

Money spent for 6 Negro parks for Personal Services - $ 8,825.07
Money spent for 29 white parks for Personal Services - $399,058.73

If it costs that much more to operate the white parks, it appears that those parks must offer that much more...

WHAT DOES THIS ALL MEAN AND WHAT SHOULD STATE AND LOCAL COUNCILS DO? PLEASE SEND YOUR SUGGESTIONS.

6/28/63

the Republic of France, General de Gaulle, and other members of the NATO alliance. I have a high regard for General de Gaulle. I have great respect for his leadership. He has performed miracles for France. He has given strength to the cause of human freedom and political independence, not only in Western Europe but throughout the world. He does not deserve our scorn or even our angry retort. He deserves respect and admiration. He will receive it from thoughtful citizens of the United States and elsewhere.

But having said that, I believe it is the responsibility of the leadership of France and those who speak for that leadership to remember the many sacrifices that the United States has made in the past for the freedom of Western Europe, including France itself, and the commitment this country is now making, has made in days gone by, and will continue to make in the years head. No one can really see what the future offers. We can only judge the future by the performance of the past. Every nation has a page in its history which it does not like. For example, in our history we have the unfortunate refusal to join the League of Nations; the long period of expressed neutrality in a world where neutrality really could not be a fact.

However, it is my judgment—and I believe history will bear it out as being an honest judgment—that the United States has undertaken tremendous burdens and responsibilities, both during World War II and in the postwar years, and that we have really earned the mantle of leadership. That mantle of leadership has not been worn as a luxury, but rather as a heavy responsibility.

So I would hope that our friends in France would rebuke the spokesman who this morning attempted to engage—not only attempted, but did engage—in loose talk that does little or no good except for the enemy. Only one other voice could have made a statement that was so unworthy of the great French people and of the relationships between the United States and France, and that voice would have come from the Kremlin. I cannot believe—and I will not believe—that the fraternity that exists between these two great Republics, the United States of America and the Republic of France, will wither away or vanish because of the petulant words or the unfortunate comment or the emotional outpouring of one or two spokesmen who say they speak for the Government or for the people of the grand nation of France.

ABOLITION OF DISCRIMINATION IN PUBLIC FACILITIES

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, on Wednesday of this week the Governor of Kentucky, Hon. Bert T. Combs, set a standard of governmental leadership, responsibility, coverage, and integrity that marked him as a great public servant. Governor Combs took a forthright and courageous step forward in the cause of human rights when, as Governor of the sovereign Commonwealth of Kentucky, he issued an executive order forbidding racial discrimination in all businesses licensed by the State. If more Governors would do this, the work of the Federal Government could be minimized and eased.

Governor Combs has demonstrated that State government can and will perform or fulfill its responsibilities and can take the lead. The Governor of Kentucky has set the pattern and standard for the Nation. He deserves our commendation, respect, and admiration. What he has done is precisely what was needed.

Such decisive action is demanded in every State of the Union. It is analogous to the action which President Kennedy has called upon Congress to take by enacting his omnibus civil rights package, including title II, to ban racial discrimination in public accommodations.

This most recent action by Governor Combs further establishes him as one of the Nation's most determined advocates of civil rights and human rights. In 1960, Governor Combs secured the passage of a law forbidding discrimination in the State's merit system for employees. He also successfully sponsored legislation to establish a State human rights commission.

Earlier this year Governor Combs signed an executive order banning discrimination in employment by State contractors and subcontractors. Mr. President, I remind Senators that this was done by the State of Kentucky, where there are people of many races, colors, and creeds, and where there are whites and Negroes in large numbers.

I understand that certain business interests in Kentucky are planning to challenge Governor Combs' most recent executive order. It is my personal hope that the courts will sustain the Governor and will uphold his actions in this vital area of nondiscrimination in public businesses. I predict that the courts will sustain the Governor's actions, because the Governor has seen to it that the 14th amendment is applied. He is a constitutional Governor.

I know much more will be said regarding the distinction between civil rights and property rights. Yesterday the New York Times published a short editorial that puts the distinction in proper perspective. Let me quote the crucial paragraph:

> But the distinction between what is really private and what is really public is not too difficult to draw. Under the civil rights bill there would be no invasion of private homes or private clubs and no effort to enforce "association"; these remain a matter of personal choice. That the Government would be saying under the bill is that the owner of a public business—whether a lunch counter, a movie house, a motel, or any other facility open to the public at large—cannot pick and choose among his customers for reasons of race.

This distinction is the basis for Governor Combs' executive order.

The distinguished senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. COOPER] has demonstrated the same kind of courage; and I am sure he has somewhat eased the way for his fellow Kentuckian, the Governor of Kentucky. These men are of different political parties, but they are of like moral stature; and this kind of bipartisan cooperation is exactly the standard that is needed for all of us in the days ahead.

Speaking now of the distinction between what is private and what is public, let me say it is also the basis for public-accommodations laws in some 30 States and the District of Columbia. It is a distinction that will have to be made again and again in the coming civil rights debate in the Congress.

Therefore, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a New York Times article reporting Governor Combs' executive order, a short biography of Governor Combs, and an editorial entitled, "Rights—Civil and Property," all from the New York Times.

There being no objection, the articles and the editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows.

KENTUCKY FORBIDS BIAS IN BUSINESSES—GOVERNOR'S ORDER AFFECTS ALL LICENSED ACTIVITIES—HE PRODS SCHOOL DISTRICTS

FRANKFORT, Ky., June 26.—Gov. Bert T. Combs signed an executive order today forbidding racial discrimination in all businesses licensed by the State.

The order, which went into effect immediately, covers such businesses as taverns, restaurants, barber shops, beauty parlors, funeral homes, and real estate concerns.

The Governor warned that school districts, which need accreditation by the State department of education, would be in danger of losing State and Federal funds if they did not integrate.

His order directed those State agencies empowered to license businesses to prepare reports within 60 days on how they planned to enforce the order.

Mr. Combs suggested that enforcement could be patterned after the procedures of the State alcoholic beverage control board.

COULD LOSE LICENSE

After an illegal act has been charged, the board cites a licensee and orders him to appear for a hearing to show cause why he should not have his license suspended or revoked.

Hence, the Governor noted, "the penalty under this executive order also would go to a man's pocketbook."

Mr. Combs acted at a special session of the general assembly, the legislature, met here. Civil rights groups and Mayor William O. Cowger of Louisville had urged the Governor to extend the special session to include consideration of a State antidiscrimination law.

The session had been called to provide State aid for four eastern Kentucky hospitals owned and operated by the United Mine Workers of America. The union plans to close the hospitals this summer because of economic reasons.

Governor Combs said he had declined to place a civil rights bill before the legislators because many had come unprepared to consider such legislation.

In addition, he said, "it is my judgment, based on contacts with key members of the legislature, that an effective bill could not be passed at this extraordinary session."

He asserted that an order "will be much more effective than filing a citation with the local court," as a State law would require.

"While Kentucky has made great strides, both for voluntary and legislative action, additional action is needed to make it possible for all Kentuckians to become first-class citizens," he declared.

He said a civil rights bill would come before the legislature, but did not specify when.

In his order the Democratic Governor declared that discrimination "in places of public accommodation is unfair, unjust, and inconsistent with the public policy of the Commonwealth of Kentucky."

Mr. Combs' 4-year term expires in December. He is prohibited by statute from succeeding himself. Edward T. Breathitt, Jr., Democratic nominee in the gubernatorial election next fall is supported by the Combs administration.

The order was considered broad by some civil rights leaders. Several said they would investigate the possibility that it could include discriminatory practices in private employment.

This was the second move in 2 months to end racial discrimination in places of public accommodation.

The first occurred in May, when the Louisville Board of Aldermen passed an antidiscrimination ordinance, to go into effect within 90 days.

The Louisville ordinance and the executive order came without the pressure of demonstrations by Negro groups. In some cases, however, civil rights leaders were hard-pressed to contain their followers.

The Louisville school system desegregated in 1956 without the need for court action. In the last 8 years there has been progress in desegregating parks, swimming pools, hotels, restaurants, and theaters.

In 1960 Governor Combs pushed through a law forbidding discrimination in the State's merit system for employees. He also succeeded in having legislation passed to create a State human rights commission.

Earlier this year, he signed an order forbidding discrimination in employment by State contractors and subcontractors.

Of the State's 3,100,000 population about one-eighth are Negroes.

UNORTHODOX KENTUCKIAN: BERT THOMAS COMBS

The Governor of Kentucky was once introduced to a political rally as "the first Baptist Governor of our State in 100 years. From the rear of the audience, a man shouted, "And if he doesn't do a little better, he'll be the last one for 100 years." Nobody on the staff of Gov. Bert Thomas Combs remembers the incident. But the Governor tells the story with delight as he roams the State, meeting people and listening for ideas.

That he issued an executive order yesterday banning discrimination in places of publice accommodation is no surprise to those who know Mr. Combs. He has often said that segregation is coming to an end, and that those who fight it are only spreading bitterness.

Despite a fondness for stories, most of them self-deprecating, Mr. Combs is no orthodox politician, at least not in a State that has produced A. B. (Happy) Chandler, Alben W. Barkley, and Earle C. Clements.

His opponents call him a "captive" of more experienced professionals.

He is also sometimes accused within his party of having backed away from supporting John F. Kennedy for President and the Kennedy administration. In Kentucky, where politicians say pockets of religious intolerance remain, Richard M. Nixon outpolled Mr. Kennedy, a Roman Catholic, in 1960.

Mr. Combs made his first bid for public office in 1955, seeking the Democratic gubernatorial nomination against Mr. Chandler, former Governor, who was a national figure.

"Bert had been on the State Court of Appeals, Kentucky's supreme court," a friend said recently. "He campaigned like a judge—responsibly, methodically, and unsuccessfully."

Four years later Mr. Combs ran again, defeating a Chandler protege, 203,802 to 177,191. He then easily beat the Republican nominee.

In his successful campaign Mr. Combs was considerably more caustic about Mr. Chandler. As a result, when Mr. Chandler attempted a comeback last spring, he centered his attack on Governor Combs. He particularly gibed at a $50,000 floral clock planted on the capitol lawn.

Because Kentucky law forbids a second successive term, Governor Combs backed his own protege for the post, Edward T. Breathitt, Jr., 38-year-old legislator.

Mr. Breathitt defeated Mr. Chandler in the primary. Mr. Combs, pleased, commented in an afterthought that the floral clock was paying for itself as a tourist attraction.

The Governor was born August 13, 1911, in Clay County, in the heart of Kentucky's mountains.

"He's almost the perfect man to deal with the racial situation in this State," a friend said. "In his home area, around Manchester, there's just no problem. He brought no bias or emotion to his deliberations on the issue."

Mr. Combs quit school in 1931 to work as a clerk in the State highway department. Two years later he entered the University of Kentucky and worked his way through law school, graduating second in his class.

He joined the Army in 1942 as a private and was discharged as a captain 4 years later.

Returning to civilian life, he became city attorney in Prestonburg in 1950 and the Kentucky equivalent of district attorney soon afterward.

A restless man who enjoys traveling, the Governor likes to take along his staff on visits to small towns around the State. In Calhoun or West Liberty, he would open an office for a day, listening to anyone's complaint.

With retirement from office facing him next December 9, Mr. Combs has indicated he will not accept another judgship. "I'm going to sit back and give a lot of free advice to all of those who have been so generous with advice to me over the past 4 years," he says.

Mr. Combs and his wife, the former Mabel Hall, have two children, Lois Ann, 19, and Thomas, 17.

RIGHTS—CIVIL AND PROPERTY

The principal battle over President Kennedy's proposed civil rights law—as indicated by the line of questioning yesterday when the Attorney General appeared before a House Judiciary subcommittee—will revolve around the provision prohibiting discrimination against Negroes in the use of public facilities. The proposed law would guarantee all citizens "equal access to the services and facilities of hotels, restaurants, places of amusement, and retail establishments." The general argument against this provision is that it would interfere with private property rights.

But the distinction between what is really private and what is really public is not too difficult to draw. Under the civil rights bill there would be no invasion of private homes or private clubs and no effort to enforce association; these remain a matter of personal choice. What the Government would be saying under the bill is that the owner of a public business—whether a lunch counter, a movie house, a motel, or any other facility open to the public at large—cannot pick and choose among his customers for reasons of race.

As a matter of fact, some 30 States, the District of Columbia, and many cities—covering two-thirds of the country—already have laws against discrimination in places of public accommodation. But in our mobile society and interdependent economy, protection of these public facilities has properly become a matter of national concern. Property has its obligation as well as its rights.

It is possible, as Attorney General Kennedy agreed yesterday, that certain small businesses—such as "Mrs. Murphy's" boardinghouse with a few rooms—could remain private in the ancient sense. But in the larger meaning of the law, civil rights cannot be subservient to an exaggerated claim for property rights.

WHY A DOMESTIC PEACE CORPS?

Mr. YOUNG of Ohio. Mr. President, it gives me no pleasure whatever when I announce myself very definitely as against some legislative proposal sponsored by this administration. I shall, however, continue to do just that whenever my judgment and my conscience so dictate. It is well known that I consider myself a friend and admirer of our President and a supporter of his policies.

Following careful study and research, it is my conclusion that the administration proposal to create a national service corps, termed "Domestic Peace Corps," as set forth in bills introduced in the House of Representatives and in the Senate, and supported by many of my distinguished colleagues, should not be enacted into law in their present form. My study of these legislative proposals leads me to express the hope they will not be reported from committee for debate and vote unless they are first substantially amended.

The organization to be created under these bills is commonly referred to as the "Domestic Peace Corps," which is admittedly an appealing name. One could say, following study of the proposal, that the best thing about the entire plan is the name "Domestic Peace Corps." It immediately brings to mind the outstanding work being accomplished by the Peace Corps abroad, under the very capable leadership of Director Shriver. However, the differences between the two are as wide as the oceans that separate them.

Mr. President, this proposed legislation, if enacted into law, would create another independent agency to add to our already sprawling Federal bureaucracy. The cost to the taxpayers in the long run would far exceed the $5 million a year minimum presently contemplated.

My primary objection to the proposed Senate bill is that its enactment would duplicate work of existing Federal, State, and local agencies. There is already too much waste and duplication in Government, and it would be unconscionable to add to this burden already being shouldered by American taxpayers. The proposed Corps would be created to help Indians, migratory workers, residents of depressed areas, elderly persons, disabled persons, delinquent children, dependent children, and almost all others in our society who are in need of aid and assistance. This is a worthy undertaking, but we do not need another Federal agency to undertake it.

On the Federal level, the Bureau of Indian Affairs is charged with aiding and assisting Indians; the Department of Commerce is already engaged in working with depressed areas, under the Area Redevelopment Act—which I have always supported and for which I voted the day before yesterday. The Department

✓ Pub. Facilities

EDITORIAL

Questioning a Question — And Some of the Answers

LAST FALL, we said on this editorial page: "Our vote for the most improved state library association periodical in the country would be awarded unhesitatingly to The Bay State Librarian, the quarterly bulletin of the Massachusetts Library Association" (see Lj, Sept. 1, '62, p. 2850). The issues of The Bay State Librarian which have appeared since that comment was made have given us no reason to revise our opinion. We think editor John N. Berry III has done a fine job — BUT . . . we do question the wisdom and the tactics of an editorial which appeared in the April 1963 issue of the Massachusetts magazine.

Mr. Berry named in that editorial eleven libraries, all located in the south, which had recently received awards under the Dorothy Canfield Fisher Library Award Program, which is administered by the Book-of-the-Month Club, with the advice of the American Library Association. The editorial was headed "A Question," and Mr. Berry's question, in essence, was "Are these libraries segregated?"

In answer to his inquiry, said Mr. Berry, the Southern Regional Council* had stated: "Our files show no record of desegregation at any of the libraries cited in your letter. We assume, therefore, that they are still segregated."

The editorial concluded: "We violently oppose any award to strengthen institutions which maintain a system of service that in any way separates one citizen from another in his use of books. We ask the question in the sincere hope that every library and system involved can and will truthfully answer with a resounding 'no!' to separation, segregation, and unequal library service. Can we expect a reply?"

Mr. Berry's editorial, it seems to us, raises not a question, but several. First, there is the basic question as to whether the Canfield Fisher awards — or any other awards — are going to strengthen segregated libraries? If they are, there are the further questions, why are they and who is responsible? And, Mr. Berry, there is another question of a different kind. Is it responsible editorial practice to ask a question, loaded with dynamite as this one is, without first making an attempt to check the facts with the individual libraries involved, with the state library agencies or with ALA? All of these seem likely to be better informed than the Southern Regional Council, which has such a wide sphere of operations that it can scarcely be expected to have very specific knowledge about library services.

Mr. Berry's basic question was, of course, perfectly valid. The professional press has an obligation to probe issues, even sensitive ones, and a duty to examine constantly the actions of the profession and see that they bear some relation to the purity of some of our official pronouncements. Like Mr. Berry, we oppose (not "violently" perhaps, but certainly firmly) the presentation of awards to libraries operating segregated services, particularly when ALA, whose policies are now clear in this area, is involved in such awards. But this does not condone accusation without evidence — and to ask a question in print without first trying for the answer amounts to about the same thing.

We decided to pursue the matter further, and in order to gather the necessary facts:

1) Wrote to all the libraries named in The Bay State Librarian editorial and sent them a copy of the editorial;

2) In some cases where the individual libraries did not immediately reply, wrote also to the state library extension agencies concerned;

3) Asked the Book-of-the-Month Club for a copy of the application form and conditions governing the Canfield Fisher Library Awards;

4) Informed Mr. Berry of our actions.

Ten of the 11 libraries answered our inquiry, and we had letters from three state library agencies. Only in one case did we

*The Southern Regional Council, according to Encyclopedia of Associations (3rd ed., Gale Research Co., 1961) was founded in 1918, has 80 members and a staff of 18. Located in Atlanta, Georgia, it consists of "leaders in education, religion, business, labor and the professions interested in improving race relations in the south." It "provides community relations consultation and field services when requested by official and private agencies, distributes pamphlets dealing with desegregation of various public facilities, and fosters elimination of barriers to Negro registration and voting." It issues a publication entitled New South eleven times a year.

able to specify exactly what he wants to provide, in other words, to define his own need.

The speaker's second error was to assume that complete technical mastery of computer technology, advanced mathematical theory and programming techniques and information theory and systems design, etc., etc., was the essential prerequisite for facing the problem of library automation in a practical and responsible way. The answer, again, is that a system is good only insofar as it ably fills a need. No good system can be designed, whatever the technical qualifications of its designer, unless that need is known. And the formulation, the verbalization of that need is the librarian's role. He will have continuing discussions with the machine or systems people, and he will have to make many decisions regarding space and cost and personnel. But these decisions can and must constantly be referred against his original statement of what the system is and what it must do. Sacrifices, compromises, expansions if need (and cash) be — these are measured against his carefully evaluated standard. It is here that the librarian alone is the expert, and it is on his experience of library service that he makes that claim.

In terms of library education, then, the above considerations need implementation. The library school has the responsibility, I believe, to orient tomorrow's staff to face exactly the problems that were brought out in the conference. If, as we trust, the next generation of library school graduates is more hospitable to machines, how will they have developed that feeling? Further, will it be a kind of generalized hospitality of the kind that the ancient Greeks and Hebrews gave to every stranger, in the hope that they entertained an angel or a god unaware? Such an attitude may lead them, like their predecessors in responsibility, to buy the first cheap, attractive package they see.

I like to think that the library school student will be indoctrinated with an attitude rather than a specific (and rapidly outmoded) skill, and that this attitude would be the chief result of a course in library automtion given in the library school, as well as the effect of his teachers' counsel and advice. That attitude should reflect, first, a pride of stewardship directed toward the processes and services and products which he knows must be carried out or produced. It should show, second, a sensible, even an eager regard for the ways in which machines can help to "free the mind." The intellectual emancipation offered by the machine should, to the student who is able and wise, represent the most urgent recommendation for its use. He must be encouraged in this attitude by the training and environment provided to him by the library school where, by library-oriented exposure to machines and (cautiously?) to systems personnel, he can stick his big toe into the salt sea and find that the water, instead of overwhelming him, actually buoys him up.

Into the millenium

Libraries, as well as many other social institutions, are entering an age of hastened automation. This development frightens some readers and some librarians, and delights others. Many are deluded by science fiction dreams and thus fall easily into the hands of quacks who flourish wherever hope is wedded to ignorance and large sums of quick money are in sight.

Happily, in our judgment, we are approaching the time when library business is becoming so important, socially and financially, that technological research is beginning to take account of its needs. If just a few more crucial resolutions and adaptations of photography, television, and computer processes can be stimulated, many cumbersome library procedures can be streamlined and far greater access provided to library materials. But the millenium is not here yet. Much more basic research and tough-minded experimentation must be undertaken in the near future if we are to enjoy the efficiency of mechanization. — from "Report of the University Librarian to the Chancellor," by Robert Vosper, 1962

Out of the woods

. . . the impression remains with a British reader that his American colleagues have become absorbed in routine to such an extent that they fail to see that machine and computer techniques are not the only way out of the wood — they could cut down some of the trees. — C. A. Crossley, in a review of "Advanced Data Processing in the University Library," Library Association Record, April 1963 not get a reply, either from the individual library named in the original editorial or from the state library agency.

The reactions to Mr. Berry's editorial method, to nobody's surprise, were almost unanimously unfavorable. The most fiery reply, appropriately, came from Ray Peppers, librarian of the Beaufort (S.C.) County Library, which won the biggest of all the Canfield Fisher Awards. Mr. Peppers said he would answer the question if it were asked in "the normal way" (he did answer ours), but to Mr. Berry he said: "I'll be damned if I'll answer your editorial question."

Mrs. Leola F. Miller, librarian of the Rolla (Mo.) Free Public Library commented: "The principle of 'assuming' a fact without any evidence is something I deplore." Mrs. Evelyn Griffith, librarian of the North Arkansas Regional Library, resented "the tarnish that this editorial would like to spread over [her library's] selection" for the award.

The chairman of the library board, Mrs. James D. Bruton, replied for the Plant City (Fla.) Public Library: "Unfortunately racial strife will continue so long as people, expecting the worst, act on someone's assumption instead of facts. We in the South have become accustomed to the prejudiced and misleading editorials which continue to appear in too many publications, written without basis of fact by editors far removed from the scene. I never expected this practice to extend to library journals, however."

Elaine von Oesen, extension services librarian at the North Carolina State Library, to whom we wrote after receiving no initial reply from the librarian of the Henderson County Public Library (she was on vacation, said Miss von Oesen, and we did later hear from Henderson librarian Mary Kent Seagle), declared herself "appalled at the editorial" in The Bay State Librarian.

In sharp contrast to most of these comments was the reply from Richard K. Burns, director of the Falls Church (Va.) Public Library. He sent Mr. Berry three interesting pages, and to us, the following observations:

"We regret that we should be accused without being asked or investigated. The writer of the editorial was, of course, careless and wrong. It appears that he was looking for an argument. For my part, however, I'm not too unhappy about it. Although erroneous in its facts, the editorial does ask a serious question, and asks it seriously. I prefer this to the countless editorials which are spineless in spirit, based on empty ideals, and achieve only their pointless effect, which appear again and again in our professional journals. I can respect The Bay State Librarian for, if nothing else, its own admission that public libraries are far from realizing their professed ideals. Inaccuracy is bad, but meaningless pap is worse."

Mr. Berry was criticized on another score in a letter he received from Eleanor A. Ferguson, Executive Secretary of ALA's Public Library Association, who asked: "Why were the Wicomico County Free Library, Salisbury, Maryland, and the Marshall County Free Library, Lewisburg, Tennessee, omitted? They seem as likely to have segregated policies as some of those you do mention. Come on now, if we're going to do research, let's do it thoroughly, and not use biased samples!"

And what did Mr. Berry have to say in response to our questioning of his editorial judgment? It's perhaps only fair, after printing so much criticism of him, to quote him at some length:

> It is my contention that any such award, involving as it does the American Library Association, must expect the scrutiny of the profession, and its recipients should respond as freely to inquiries as several have done in this case. The truth, in print, will provide a unique and gratifying statement opposing segregation. If the question were asked privately, and only the segregated replies were published, this spirited denial would have been lost.
>
> The question was asked editorially with the full intention that it would be answered editorially, regardless of the results. It is my conviction that asking libraries, many in the deep south, to respond to this question will serve one of two purposes. If they respond with the resounding "No!" to segregation that the editorial expects and desires, then we have an impressive collection of documentary evidence, from southern libraries, to publicize a fact in which the profession should take pride. We know that this is an award strengthening equal, integrated service. It publicizes a group of libraries with the courage and willingness to publicly deny segregation. We can then give the award, and the receiving libraries, all the publicity and commendation they deserve.
>
> On the other hand, if there are among the eleven libraries, some which do segregate, then we have forced the exposition of this practice, and at the same time discovered a flaw in the selection of recipients for the award. It is my sincere hope that only the first of these purposes may be served in this case . . .

Now, what about the facts on segregation or integration at these 11 award-winning libraries? Seven denied unequivocally that they were segregated:

Beaufort (S.C.) County Library: "Each facility of the Beaufort County Library serves any Beaufort County resident who presents himself."

Falls Church (Va.) Public Library: "This library has never done other than serve our readers without regard to race, creed, sex, age or any other discriminatory principle. When this library opened its new quarters in 1958, the USIA wrote a feature story on the library and its program. The story has been carried throughout the world in many languages. It is significant that in the photographs accompanying the story, Negroes and whites appear together, both children and adults. It is also significant that one of the earliest members of our local Friends organization, and a most effective supporter of our program, is a Negro. It is significant that in the block where the library is located, property and homes on both sides of the street are owned by Negroes. It is significant that the public schools in this city were totally integrated years ago without incident or protest." (Much more from Falls Church, but read The Bay State Librarian).

Rolla (Mo.) Free Public Library: "There has never been any segregation in this library." The librarian included as documentary evidence a 1958 newspaper photograph showing both black and white citizens using the library.

Keyser-Mineral (W.Va.) County Library: " . . . since its inception as a WPA Library in 1937, has never practiced any form of racial segregation."

Plant City (Fla.) Public Library: "Our community is 25 per cent Negro and as I write from a desk in our library," said the library board chairman, "I see in the reading room almost as many Negro patrons as white ones, and they have been coming ever since the library first opened its doors for service, and without incident! We have yet to receive the first complaint." Mrs. Bruton also gave, for good measure, the name and address of a local Negro citizen to whom Mr. Berry could write, since he appeared "to need confirmation."

Killgore Memorial Library, Dumas, Texas: Sent a copy of the criteria for the Canfield Fisher Awards, and observed: "I understand this to mean that the libraries must be desegregated — ours is."

Henderson County (N.C.) Public Library: "It serves all races and has for over ten years," said Elaine von Oesen, extension services librarian at the North Carolina State Library.

Mrs. Elizabeth D. Moore, director of the Oconee Regional Library, Dublin, Georgia, said: "I assure you that our governing officials, our library board and our library staff members are striving diligently to provide adequate free library service to every citizen who lives within the four counties served by the Oconee Regional Library. Specific materials and services are available to everyone. No citizen has been refused any material or any library service requested." The same kind of reply came from Lucile Nix, chief library consultant in the State Department of Education. But at least a query must remain here. One of the branches of the Oconee Regional Library is listed in the American Library Directory, 23rd edition, as "Negro." The data listed in this directory are based on replies received from the libraries.

The question — Mr. Berry's and ours — was evaded by the North Arkansas Regional Library. In a testy letter which returned some fire in the direction of Massachusetts libraries, regional librarian Mrs. Evelyn Griffiths merely pointed out "that there are few Negroes living in the northern third of Arkansas and none at all in the mountainous six-county section which makes up our region." She did not state what the library's policy might be should a Negro decide to move to the mountains.

And the question was even more fully evaded by the Carnegie Library, Eufaula, Alabama, which did not reply at all — to us nor, as far as we know, to Mr. Berry. Nor did we receive a reply from the Alabama Public Library Service, the state agency.

Finally, from one library, the Jackson Parish Library, Jonesboro, Louisiana, came an admission of segregated service. Said librarian M. E. Wright, Jr.: "The Jackson Parish (county) Library is designed for the use of all citizens. The same staff — trained bookmobile librarian and clerk-driver — operate two bookmobiles, one of which is devoted exclusively to the service for Negroes, with a collection selected to appeal to their interest and informational needs. It should be emphasized that any book in the library's collection is available to any reader, since if it is not at the outlet point where he makes his request, it is obtained and sent to him . . . By action of the library board, Negroes do not use the one branch of the parish system, but every attempt is made to give equal service. The pattern of service in Jackson Parish does not deny the Negro the use of any library materials, and it brings close to his door the books which are appealing and useful to him . . ."

It is clear from this last reply that, however one feels about the methods used, Mr. Berry has uncovered a situation which needs further examination. No. 7 among the criteria listed by the Book-of-the-Month Club for the Dorothy Canfield Fisher Awards reads: "The library shall provide equal service to all, regardless of race, creed or nationality." Undoubtedly, those who still adhere to the "separate but equal" doctrine would claim that they are meeting this condition, but we feel sure that this is not in keeping with the spirit of the award. Certainly the "separate but equal" doctrine is not in keeping with present ALA policies, and since ALA is finally responsible for the selection of the winners ALA should ensure that the criteria are fully met.

The state library agencies in each state are also responsible in no small measure for the way in which these awards are distributed. Elaine von Oesen, in her letter to Lj, drew attention to the Book-of-the-Month Club criteria for the Awards, and added: "Not only must the library state, in applying, that it meets the criteria; but the state library agency in each state must endorse each application. The Bay State Librarian editorial not only censures these public libraries, it censures the state library agencies in those states. You may remember that Mississippi disqualified itself for an Award."

Miss von Oesen is quite right. The individual libraries are not alone to blame: in fact, the major responsibility rests with the state library agencies. ALA's Eleanor Ferguson claims that "the Committee appointed by the Public Library Association looks closely at the evidence submitted about each library," but she adds: "If neither the library nor the State Agency can be trusted to abide by the criterion [of equal service to all], then indeed it is 'difficult to obtain incontrovertible evidence'." The evidence here presented would suggest that Mississippi's example in withdrawing as ineligible might have been followed by at least one other state — and maybe more. It also suggests that the committee from the Public Library Association will have to look even more closely at the submitted evidence. EM

From Lj's historical file — Library service for all in Evanston, Illinois. The year: 1921

COPY

SB/

BP - this should be attached to the original report

AMERICAN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION

50 East Huron Street, Chicago 11, Illinois

From: Charles R. Carner
Public Relations Officer
(312) 944-6780

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: TO EDITORS, NATIONAL LIBRARY PERIODICALS ALA Bulletin
Catholic Library World
Library Journal
Special Libraries
Wilson Library Bulletin

SUBJECT: ACCESS TO PUBLIC LIBRARIES

At the 1963 Annual Conference of ALA, the Advisory Committee for the Access to Libraries study recommended to the LAD Board of Directors and the Intellectual Freedom Committee that the International Research Associates survey of access to public libraries be published to make it available for study.

Since then the Advisory Committee has continued to evaluate the total study in the light of questions raised during the Conference as well as data and arguments presented subsequently.

Because of the special concern shown on the findings of the section titled "Location and resources of branch libraries in ten selected cities," (II,F), the Committee has meticulously re-examined this portion of the study. On September 19, 1963, it met with International Research Associates to consider its analyses and responses.

On the basis of the discussions at this meeting the Advisory Committee has unanimously approved the following statement as representing its thinking:

> "It should be noted that the section on adequacy of access to branch libraries was limited, as stated in the report, to the study of specific census tracts which were either 80% or more white or 80% or more non-white. The conclusions must, therefore, be limited to the kinds and numbers of census tracts studied. It is the judgment of the Advisory Committee that the findings cannot be generalized to apply to the whole of any city concerned or to the comparison of cities without further study. The Advisory Committee, therefore, recommends that the use of this part of the report be limited and that no generalizations be made about the cities studied."

-Harold W. Tucker, Chairman
Advisory Committee for Access to Libraries Study

- 30 -

September 30, 1963

JN 26964

Comments on the Advisory Committee Statement of September 30, 1963

Regarding INRA Report on "Access to Public Libraries"

by Harry N. Peterson, Librarian
D. C. Public Library

It is interesting to note that the LAD Advisory Committee for Access to Libraries met with the President and two staff members of International Research Associates, Inc. to see how they could pull the fat out of the fire, so far as the ACCESS TO PUBLIC LIBRARIES report is concerned. The statement unanimously approved by the Advisory Committee and issued by its Chairman eleven days after the meeting in New York is, in its own small way, as inaccurate as the INRA report itself. The statement says, "It should be noted that the section on adequacy of access to branch libraries was limited, as stated in the report, to the study of specific census tracts which were either 80% or more white or 80% or more non-white." This is a misinterpretation of the INRA report. In Section II, F, page 54, the following statement is made:

> For this part of the study, ten cities were examined in order to determine what relationship exists between four socio-economic characteristics of a population, and the location and resources of branch libraries.

This statement appears on pages 55-56:

> Information on the socio-economic characteristics of racial concentration, income, education, and elementary school enrollment was obtained by census tracts for the ten cities, and the tracts whose population are highest and lowest in each characteristic were examined to ascertain relationships between these factors and locations, numbers, and resources of branch libraries.

On the basis of this methodology INRA made the following sweeping generalization on page 59:

> In four of the six Southern cities, the likelihood of finding a branch library in a heavily white area is over one and a half times that of finding one in a neighborhood which is predominantly non-white, and in all of the Southern cities, branches in non-white neighborhoods contain fewer volumes than those located in white areas. The greatest racial inequality occurs in Birmingham and in Washington, D. C., where libraries in predominantly white neighborhoods exceed those in highly non-white areas by a ratio of more than three to one, and branches in heavily white areas have on the average twice as many volumes as those in predominantly non-white sections.

There is no indication that the INRA report was referring only to tracts. Quite the contrary; it referred to cities. However, it is evident that the research specialists were committing the error of generalizing from the particular. This mistake was pointed out in a letter I sent to Mr. James E Bryan on July 16, 1963, copies of which were sent to INRA, the ALA staff, and others. In this letter I said, "Apparently the INRA, Inc. arrived at the statement regarding the 3 to 1 ratio on the basis of the 1960 population in the immediate Census tract in which each branch is situated. This is a fallacy." My comment was ignored.

During the discussion at the ALA Conference in Chicago, Miss Maxine LaBounty of the DCPL Staff reaffirmed this point when she said, "it was not valid to equate branches with census tracts, since the tracts average only 4,000 people and branches serve 20,000 - 40,000." To this and other criticisms, Mr. Brown of INRA replied, "the ratios of white to non-white branches had been obtained by dividing the number of branch libraries located in 80 per cent white and non-white tracts into the total number of 80 per cent white and non-white tracts. With regard to the 80 per cent cut-off point, he said that 70 per cent of the people live in 80 per cent white or non-white areas." (ALA BULLETIN, September 1963, p.745) This just is not true, at least in Washington, as I have demonstrated in a recent analysis.

The methodology was a lazy way to try to determine accessibility. Unfortunately INRA and the Advisory Committee erroneously assumed that it was valid. As a matter of fact, according to the LIBRARY JOURNAL for September 1, 1963 (p. 3008-3009) Mr. Tucker "Indicated that the Advisory Committee on the Study had met subsequent to the explosive LAD gathering, and read a letter from Bernard Berelson, the one member of the committee not present at the conference. Mr. Berelson's opinion after reviewing the technical methods employed in the study, was that these methods were 'appropriate for the purpose,' and that 'in general, this is a well-done study.' The questionsraised, said the Berelson letter, 'do not substantially change the conclusions reached.'" In contrast, a Government statistician made this evaluation of Tables 17, 18, 19, and 20 relating to Location and Resources of Branch Libraries in Ten Cities: "In my opinion the logic on which these tables...were constructed was naive and amateurish....The crudeness of this approach is almost breathtaking..." At this point the Advisory Committee also seems to be somewhat less certain about the reliability of the methodology. The astonishing thing is that these professional people put any stock in such hocus-pocus in the first place. About the only purpose this methodology serves is as an example of statistical misrepresentation.

Now, in an effort to save face, the Advisory Committee tries to make it appear that the part of the INRA "research" regarding access to branches was a study of census tracts. But isn't it ridiculous to say, "The conclusions must, therefore, be limited to the kinds and numbers of census tracts studied." This is obviously at variance with the previously quoted INRA conclusion about alleged inequality of public library service in Washington and elsewhere. However, it does confirm what I said in the first place, in my letter of July 16, 1963 and in other communications. Perhaps I should be flattered to have my judgment confirmed, even if belatedly. What I can't understand is why the Advisory Committee doesn't just come right out, as honest men should, and admit an error, a grievous error, instead of trying to cover up with a transparent attempt to rewrite the facts in the case.

At long last we are told, "It is the judgment of the Advisory Committee that the findings cannot be generalized to apply to the whole of any city concerned or to the comparison of cities without further study. The Advisory Committee, therefore, recommends that the use of this part of the report be limited and that no generalizations be made about the cities studied." Would that the Advisory Committee, the ALA officers, and the ALA staff had listened to reason and arrived at this "judgment" sooner--before the damage was done. Damning and undeserved generalizations have already been made by INRA itself in Section II, F. These were approved by the Advisory Committee; announced in a release, approved by this Committee and the Executive Secretary of ALA, on Monday, July 15th; and approved for publication by the membership on Friday, July 19. (Apparently the ALA staff had jumped the gun, as it was disclosed that the cover was already in production in the new ALA Headquarters on Friday, July 19th, according to the LIBRARY JOURNAL for September 1.) The report was published in mid-August. Now hear this: the announcement in the BOOKLIST for September 15 does not say that the ACCESS TO PUBLIC LIBRARIES report was published only "to make it available for study;" neither does the report itself. Furthermore, the people who read the report will not have the benefit of the Advisory Committee's injunctions not to generalize from the limited and misleading "findings."

I fail to see what good will come of the Advisory Committee's decision to have INRA "prepare a detailed document on Section F of Part II covering the various comments and questions raised since the ALA Conference." It seems to me that International Research Associates, Inc. and the Advisory Committee have already done enough harm. At best, the proposed document will be an effort to whitewash the "methodology" and "findings" of the Access report. So far as the maligned libraries are concerned, this constitutes a kind of double jeopardy.

There seems to be an assumption that except for Section F of Part II, the rest of the INRA report is without error. However, the now admitted mistakes in Section F of Part II throw doubts upon the entire document.

The Advisory Committee will next prepare a "brief 2000 word document giving the historical background for the Study." What purpose this will serve, I do not know. Many of the errors in the INRA report and much of the trouble that resulted from it could have been avoided if the Advisory Committee had had a sense of decency and fair play and just an ounce of foresight. Pounds of hindsight and thousands of words will not make up for the lack of competence it has demonstrated.

In its eagerness to avoid criticism for censorship, the ALA has permitted several public libraries and those associated with them to be traduced. It seems to me that an organization such as this also has some responsibility to uphold the truth. Now that the false statements in the study have been pointed out (and, at least indirectly, admitted), International Research Associates, Inc. should recall its report on ACCESS TO PUBLIC LIBRARIES, for the sake of its own reputation. If this is not done, the ALA Council should reject this canard. In any event, INRA, the ALA Advisory Committee, the Intellectual Freedom Committee, the officers and the staff of the ALA owe the D. C. Public Library and the other maligned libraries an apology for the irresponsible way they have handled, published, and publicized this slanderous report.

Nov. 1963
Public Facilities

PUBLIC PARKS

And

RECREATIONAL

FACILITIES

A STUDY IN TRANSITION

PENN COMMUNITY SERVICE INC . . . FROGMORE , SOUTH CAROLINA

1963

Pub [redacted]. Facilities

VMA Research

PENN COMMUNITY SERVICES, INCORPORATED

ST. HELENA ISLAND

FROGMORE, SOUTH CAROLINA

COURTNEY SICELOFF
DIRECTOR

BEAUFORT, S.C., 524-4337
AREA CODE 803

BOARD OF TRUSTEES
Hon. Marion A. Wright
Chairman
Linville Falls, N. C.
William E. Cadbury
Vice-Chairman
Philadelphia, Pa.
Mrs. Julia Abrahamson
Secretary
Burnsville, N. C.
William A. Clement
Treasurer
Durham, N. C.
Clyde Barrington
Dillon, S. C.
Paul W. Brown, Jr.
Philadelphia, Pa.
Rev. Will D. Campbell
Nashville, Tenn.
James M. Dabbs
Mayesville, S. C.
Herbert DeCosta
Charleston, S. C.
Willis Gardner
Frogmore, S. C.
Dr. C. G. Gomillion
Tuskegee Institute, Ala.
Rev. John Hardy
Beaufort, S. C.
Miss Grace B. House
Orient, N. Y.
Mrs. James L. McConaughy
Hartford, Conn.
Robert K. Mooney
Hartford, Conn.
Dr. J. Floyd Moore
Guilford College, N. C.
Mrs. Ann Petry
Old Saybrook, Conn.
Dr. Ira DeA. Reid
Haverford, Pa.
Mrs. Edward G. Sanders
Frogmore, S. C.
A. M. Secrest
Cheraw, S. C.
Rev. Mack E. Sharpe
Washington, D. C.
William Shurcliff
Cambridge, Mass.
W. E. Solomon
Columbia, S. C.
Charles E. Washington, Jr.
Beaufort, S. C.
Mrs. Arnette Waters
Savannah, Georgia
Rev. Cornelius A. Wood, Jr.
Washington, D. C.

PROGRAM ADVISORY COMMITTEE
Dr. George Aull
Clemson, S. C.
Mrs. Y. W. Bailey
Frogmore, S. C.
George A. Buchanan, Jr.
Columbia, S. C.
Mrs. Ruby P. Cornwell
Charleston, S. C.
Harold Evans
Philadelphia, Pa.
Miss Wil Lou Gray
Columbia, S. C.
Mrs. Grace T. Hamilton
Atlanta, Ga.
Dr. Guy B. Johnson
Chapel Hill, N. C.
Dr. Benjamin E. Mays
Atlanta, Ga.
Rev. M. C. McCollum
Walterboro, S. C. deRosset Myers
Charleston, S. C.
Mrs. John Potts
Denmark, S. C.
Dr. O. R. Reuben
Sumter, S. C.
Paul Rilling
Washington, D. C.
Mrs. William W. Smith, II
Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

November 1963

Dear Friend:

Since the recent court action, the subject of future operation of our state parks has had the attention of all South Carolinians. Although this matter requires an immediate decision, the issues involved are far reaching and will be a public concern for some time, since cities will be facing a similar situation. The decision is crucial; to what extent will the present and future generations of South Carolinians have facilities for leisure time activities?

In the interest of helping opinion makers and other thoughtful citizens to become more informed about the far-reaching effects of South Carolina's decision on state parks, we have gathered together data which is pertinent to the problem as a whole. By outlining various facets of the closed-park possibility, and by summarizing ways in which other areas have responded to the realities of the situation, we have attempted to put the problem in perspective for those who are concerned about it.

The booklet which we enclose has been prepared from sources of public information. We hope you will read it carefully, and we would appreciate having you send any comments that you care to make.

Sincerely,

Courtney Siceloff

Courtney Siceloff

cs/bm

Pub. Facilities

ACCESS TO PUBLIC LIBRARIES

A Research Project:
Prepared for the Library Administration Division,
American Library Association
by International Research Associates, Inc.

American Library Association Chicago, 1963

Pub. Facilities

Hand bill passed out by demonstrators for better Pub. Facilities on the South side of Atlanta

THE CITY MUST PROVIDE

WE ARE MARCHING today to protest neglect by the City Government of the Negro communities of South Atlanta.

THE CITY GOVERNMENT HAS FAILED to provide our communities with:

.... adequate building inspection
.... proper park and recreation facilities
.... adequate libraries
.... sufficient street lights, cross walks, and traffic signs
.... proper sewage and garbage disposal
.... adequate transportation facilities

THOUGH we have petitioned for years for the correction of these conditions, our communities still lack many of the essential services which it is the duty of every city to provide for all of its citizens.

WHY are these services not provided in our communities? They are not provided in our communities because our communities are Negro communities. They are not provided in our communities because our communities are not wealthy communities. They are not provided in our communities because our communities have too long been represented by those who do not care about our needs.

NOW we are marching to City Hall to present a report to the Mayor containing the grievances of our communities. We demand that the needs of our communities be met at once. We insist that the needs of 60,000 people cannot be forgotten! We insist that the votes of 10,000 citizens cannot be ignored!

WE will be heard from again and again until the demands of our communities are met!

L.D. Simon - President: Atlanta Civic Council
President: South Atlanta Civic League

Benny T. Smith - Vice-President: Atlanta Civic Council President: Southeast Community Civic League

Henry Phelp - Pres. Peoplestown Civ. Lg.
Jesse Smith - Pres. Pittsburg Civ. Lg.
Rev. H. Pitman - Pres. New Thomasville Civ. Lg.
Rev. Colbert - Pres. Georgia Ave/Pryor St. Civic Lg.
Robert L. Barnes - Pres. Highpoint Area Civ. Lg.

PW ~~RA~~ LPA

file "Bibliography" Materials fees

Enclosed is a marked page from the current VERTICAL FILE INDEX showing the listing of your pamphlet material. As we are discontinuing our practice of sending tear sheets this is the last one you will receive.

Please continue to send us review copies of any new paper-bound material you may issue so that you will receive orders through our listing.

Thank you for your cooperation.

Vertical File Index
950 University Avenue

The H. W. Wilson Company
Bronx, New York 10452

VERTICAL FILE INDEX

SUBJECT AND TITLE INDEX TO SELECTED PAMPHLET MATERIAL

MAY 1966

ADULT education
Treasury of techniques for teaching adults, ed by V. B. Warren. 48p '64 Nat assn for pub sch adult educ 1201 16th st Washington D C 20036 $1 send payment with order
Tells how to plan adult courses, group classes, and lead discussion sessions

AERONAUTIC engineers. See Aviation engineers

AFGHANISTAN and Pakistan
Constitutional development and cultural change, part 8: The future of constitutional law in Afghanistan and Pakistan, by Louis Dupree. (S Asia ser v9 no 10) 24p '66 Am univ field staff 366 Madison av N Y 10017 $1 proc

AFRICA, West
See also Guinea

AGE and employment
Older worker, over 40; under 65. 11p '65 N Y state comm for human rights 270 Broadway N Y 7 free to libs

AGED
Guide to meeting the needs of the elderly in Maryland (revised as of June 1, 1965). rev ed 25p '65 Md state comm on the aging 301 W Preston st Baltimore 21201 free to libs proc

Employment
See Age and employment

AGRICULTURAL administration

United States
Reversal of farm policy, by R. L. Worsnop. (v 1 '66 no 13) 18p '65 Editorial res reps 1735 K st Washington D C 20006 $2
Contents: American bounty vs. world famine threat; American farm policy in peace and war; Limits on food output here and abroad

AIR conditioning industries
Air conditioning—heating technician. (Career summary S-179) rev ed 2p '66 Careers Box 135 Largo Fla 15c send cash with order

AIR pollution
OK air for the OK state; a report on the appraisal of air pollution in Oklahoma, by J.D. McHard & R. F. Wromble. 60p charts maps tables '65 Okla state dept of health 3400 North Eastern Oklahoma City Okla 73105 single copy free supply limited Compiled in cooperation with U.S. Department of health, education and welfare, Public health service

AIRLINES

Employees
Airline dispatcher. (Career brief B-125) rev ed 8p '66 Careers Box 135 Largo Fla 25c send cash with order

AIRPLANE crews
Second flight officer (engineer). (Career brief B-123) rev ed 8p '66 Careers Box 135 Largo Fla 25c send cash with order

APHORISMS and apothegms
1600 squibs and quips for church bulletins and bulletin boards, by E. C. McKenzie. 72p '66 Baker bk house co Grand Rapids Mich $1

APPORTIONMENT (election law)
Changing patterns of apportionment, by W. J. D. Boyd. 42p '65 Nat munic league 47 E 68th st N Y 10021 75c

ART, Australian (aborginal)
Aboriginal art from Australia. 96p il maps Worcester art mus 55 Salisbury st Worcester Mass 01608 $2.35
Catalog of an exhibition

ART education
Art and education, ed by George Conrad. 93p il '65 Glassboro state coll Dept of art Glassboro N J 08028 free to libs; $1.50 to others proc spiral binding

AUDIO-visual education
Audiovisual instruction, by P. R. Wendt. (What res says to the teacher 14) rev ed 33p '66 Nat educ assn Dept of classroom teachers 1201 16th st Washington D C 20036 25c

AUSTRALIAN art. See Art, Australian (aboriginal)

AUTOMOBILE accidents. See Traffic accidents

AUTOMOBILE drivers
Development of a criterion for driver behavior, by J. L. Fine & others. 119p '65 Teachers coll Bur of pubns 525 W 120th st N Y 27 $1.95

AUTOMOBILE models

Racing
Know about model roadracing, by Robert Reed. (Skillfact lib no629) 96p '66 Editors & engineers ltd Box 68003 New Augusta Ind 46268 $1

AUTOMOBILES

Accidents
See Traffic accidents

AVIATION engineers
Should you be an aeronautical engineer, by Igor Sikorsky, as told to Phil Gustafson. rev ed 8p il '65 N Y life ins co Career inf serv Box 51 Madison Sq sta N Y 10010 free

BANKS and banking
Should you be a banker, by A. K. Davis, as told to Lester David. 8p il '65 N Y life ins co Career inf ser. Box 51 Madison Sq sta N Y 10010 free

BASS fishing
Compact book of bass, by Ray Ovington. (Compact outdoorsman's lib) 96p il '66 J Lowell Pratt & co 15 E 48th st N Y 10017 75c

BIRDS

Habits and behavior
Backyard birddom, by M. J. Ericson. 63p il '66 Island press 175 Bahia via Fort Meyers Beach Fla pa $1; cl $1.75

BLIND, Books, etc. for the Guidelines for the production of material in large type. (Pubn noP-317) 13p '65 Nat socy for the prevention of blindness 16 E 40th st N Y 10016 35c

BLINDNESS
Every sixteen minutes. . .blindness strikes one American. 10p folder '66 Nat socy for the prevention of blindness 16 E 40th st N Y 10016 single copy free

BONDS, Government
U.S. treasury advance refunding, June 1960-July 1964, by T. R. Beard. 60p '66 Bd of governors of the Fed reserve system Washington D C 20551 50c

BOOK reviews
Verdict: young adults judge books '66. 25p '66 Queens borough pub lib Pub rel dept 89-11 Merrick blvd Jamaica N Y 11432 single copy free to libs
Book reviews written by young adults, 13-19, who are registered borrowers of the Queens borough public library

BOOKS

Reviews
See Book reviews

BREAD
Sunset cook book of breads. 96p il '66 Lane mag & bk co Menlo Park Calif $1.95

BROKERS, Food. See Food brokers

BRUSH drawing
Sumi-e, an introduction to ink painting, by Nanae Momiyama. 35p il nd Japan socy 112 E 64th st N Y 10021 free to libs

BUDGET

United States
Federal budget for the 1967 fiscal year. (89th cong 2d sess Analysis no4) 118p tables '66 Am enterprise inst for pub policy res 1200 17th st Washington D C 20036 $1 proc

BUILDING industry
Should you go into construction business, by A. D. Christensen, as told to Lester David. rev ed 8p il '65 N Y life ins co Career inf serv Box 51 Madison Sq sta N Y 10010 free

BUS boys and girls. See Restaurants—Employees

BUS drivers, School. See School bus drivers

BUSINESS law. See Commercial law

BUSINESS statistics
Missouri business trends for retailing, wholesaling and selected services, by K. E. Miller & Wilbur Sayre. (Mo econy study no9) 79p charts tables maps '66 Univ of Mo Sch of bus & pub adm Res center Columbia Mo 65202 $1.75
On cover: Retailing, wholesaling & selected services in Missouri

CAESAR, Gaius Julius
They made our world. . . .Julius Caesar, by Leo Rosten. 1p '65 Look mag 488 Madison av N Y 10022 5c
Reprint from 'Look," December 28, 1965

CALIFORNIA
History
Flush times of California, by J. G. Baldwin; ed by R. E. Amacher & G. W. Polhemus. 82p por '66 Univ of Fla press 15 NW 15th st Gainesville Fla 32603 $3

CANADA
See also
Income tax—Canada

CAPITAL investments
Tax aspects
Investment credit—the case for its permanency, by Charles Stewart. 11p '66 Machinery & allied products inst 1200 18th st Washington D C 20036 free proc
Statement to Subcommittee on fiscal policy of the Joint congressional economic committee in connection with hearings on shortrun stabilization tax changes, presented by the Institute and Council for technological advancement, March 31, 1966

CASTLES
Castles of the old world, by R. P. Long. 64p il map '66 Hastings house pubrs 151 E 50th st N Y 10022 $2.50
Guide to castle hotels in Europe

CATARACT
Cataract shadows that need not be. (Pubn G-5) 8p folder il '65 Nat socy for the prevention of blindness 16 E 40th st N Y 10016 5c

CEREBRAL hemorrhage
Administrative research in the rehabilitation of stroke patients, by C. M. Wylie. (Rep DR-32) 8p por '64 Nat socy for crippled children & adults 2023 W Ogden av Chicago 12 25c
Reprint from 'Rehabilitation literature," January 1964

CHEMISTS
Chemist. (Chronicle occupational briefs 153R) rev ed 4p il '66 Chronicle guidance pubns Moravia N Y 13118 35c send cash with order

CHIANG, Mei-ling (Sung)
Meet the press; guest: Madame Chiang Kai-shek. (Meet the press v9 no38) 8p '66 Merkle press Box 2111 Washington D C 20013 10c send cash & s.a.e. with order
Script of radio and television interview, October 31, 1965

CHILD guidance. See Child study

CHILD placing. See Foster home care

CHILD study
Early childhood, crucial years for learning, ed by Margaret Rasmussen & L. P. Martin. 89p il '66 Assn for childhood educ int 3615 Wisconsin av Washington D C 20016 $1.25
Reprints from "Childhood education"

CHILD welfare
Child abuse—preview of a nationwide survey, by Vincent De Francis. (Pubn no23) 20p charts '63 Am humane assn Childrens div Box 1266 Denver Colo 25c
Child welfare program of Maryland, part 3: Detention and child study centers. (Pubn no 100-65) 4p '65 League of women voters of Md 3 Dock st Annapolis Md 21401 10c proc
Intensive casework project in child protective service, by J. A. Bishop & others. (Pubn no24) 34p '63 Am humane assn Childrens div Box 1266 Denver Colo 80201 35c
Public welfare responsibility for child protective services, by H. C. Erickson & others. (Pubn no27) 22p '64 Am humane assn Childrens div Box 1266 Denver Colo 80201 single copy free to libs; 35c to others
Review of legislation to protect the battered child; a study of laws enacted in 1963, by Vincent De Francis. (Pubn no25) 22p '64 Am humane assn Childrens div Box 1266 Denver Colo 80201 single copy free to libs; 25c to others
See also
Foster home care

CHILDREN
Nervous and mental disorders
Child welfare program of Maryland, part 2: Care of the emotionally disturbed. (Pubn no099-65) 15p '65 League of women voters of Md 6 Dock st Annapolis Md 21401 25c proc
Learning disorders; psychoneurological disturbances in childhood, by H. R. Myklebust. (Repr DR-34) 8p por '64 Nat socy for crippled children & adults 2023 W Ogden av Chicago 12 25c
Reprint from "Rehabilitation literature," December 1964

CHILDREN'S literature
Bibliography
Best books for children, 1966, comp by P. H. Allen. 237p il '66 R R Bowker co 1180 Av of the America N Y 10036 $3
3700 approved titles, annotated, arranged by grade and subject with author, title and illustrator index
Guide to children's magazines, newspapers, reference books, by Nancy Nunnally. ('65-'66 Membership serv bul-B) 8p '66 Assn for childhood educ int 3615 Wisconsin av Washington D C 20016 10c

CITY manager plan
First 50 years of the council-manager plan of municipal government, by R. S. Childs. 117p '65 Nat munic league 47 E 68th st N Y 10021 pa $1; cl $2
Model council-manager plan enabling act. 47p '65 Nat munic league 47 E 68th st N Y 10021 $2

CITY ordinances
Enforcing municipal ordinances in North Carolina, by Allan Ashman. 54p '66 Univ of N C Inst of gov Box 990 Chapel Hill N C 27515 $2.50 proc

CITY planning
New look on Main street. 12p il '65 Downtown idea exch 125 E 23d st N Y 10010 $1.50
6 part special study covers sidewalk beautifications, semi-mall concepts, parks and plazas, etc. Projects are in Boston, Louisville, Albuquerque, New York and other downtown areas
See also
Slums

CIVIL disobedience. See Passive resistance to government

CIVIL rights
Annual report 1964. 70p '65 N Y state comm for human rights 270 Broadway N Y 7 free to libs proc
Encounter with the future, by Pat Watters. 34p '65 Southern regional counc 5 Forsyth st Atlanta Ga 30303 20c
Law against discrimination (as amended through July 23, 1965) rev ed 29p '65 N Y state comm for human rights 270 Broadway N Y 7 free to libs

CLEMENS, Samuel Langhorne (Mark Twain, pseud)
Mark Twain's jest book, ed by Cyril Clemens. 3d ed 27p '65 Mark Twain jour Kirkwood Mo 63122 $1

CLOTHING and dress
See also Handicapped—Clothing

CLOTHING for the handicapped. See Handicapped—Clothing

COAL
Class report—coal. 24p il nd Nat coal assn Educ div 1130 17th st Washington D C 20036 free to libs
Teaching aid and devices
Map of coal areas in the United States. 8p folder '65 Nat coal assn Educ div 1130 17th st Washington D C 20036 free to libs

COAL mines and mining
Coal, by W. G. Fritz. 24p '63 Nat coal assn Educ div 1130 17th st Washington D C 20036 free to libs
Reprint from "World book encyclopedia"

COLLEGE graduates, Women
Is someone kidding the college girl? College pushes her to create and contribute, then typing in a New York office, by Jack Shepherd. 2p '66 Look mag 488 Madison av N Y 10022 5c
Reprint from "Look," January 11, 1966

COLLEGE women (graduates). See College graduates (women)

COLLEGES and universities

Finance

Planning for effective resource allocation in universities, by Harry Williams. 78p '66 Am counc on educ Pubns office 1785 Massachusetts av Washington D C 10036 $2.50
Prepared for the Commission on administrative affairs of the American council on education

COLOMBIA
See also Elections—Colombia

COMMERCIAL law
Texas uniform commercial code; practical aspects on secured transactions, by G. A. Jentz. (Bus guide no 12) 67p '66 Univ of Tex Bur of bus res Austin Tex 78712 $1.25

COMMERCIAL statistics. See Business statistics

COMMUNITY colleges. See Junior colleges

COMPUTERS

Chemistry applications

Introduction of a heuristic computer program into a chemistry laboratory, by G. H. Haines jr & R. C. Matthews. 4p '65 Univ of Calif Grad sch of bus adm Div of res Los Angeles 90024 free to pub, coll & univ libs
Reprint from "IEEE transactions on engineering management," June 1965

CONSTITUTIONS
See also subhead Constitution under names of countries, states, e.g.
Pakistan—Constitution

CONSTRUCTION industry. See Building industry

COOKERY, Japanese
Japanese recipes ,by Tatsuji Tada. 2d ed rev 20p '65 Japan socy 112 E 64th st N Y 10021 free to libs

COTTON industry and trade
Economic outlook for U.S. cotton, 1966, by M. K. Horne jr. & D. S. Wellford. 24p charts '66 Nat cotton counc of Amer Box 12285 Memphis Tenn 38112 free proc
Report before the Council's twenty-eighth annual meeting at Jacksonville, Florida, January 31, 1966

COURTS
Racial discrimination in the southern federal courts. (Sp rep) 11p '65 Southern regional counc 5 Forsyth st Atlanta Ga 30303 15c proc
See also
Justice, Administration of

CRAFTS. See Handicraft

CREDIT
Monetary policy and credit pressures, by W. F. Treiber. 10p '66 Consuelo Matthias c/o Bond buyer 67 Pearl st N Y 4 50c
Address before the Municipal forum of New York, March 24, 1966

CRIMINAL law
See also Embezzlement

CURRICULUM
Curriculum studies at Educational testing service. 8p nd Educl testing serv 20 Nassau st Princeton N J 08540 free supply limited Research and evaluation service for curriculum developers

DANCING
See also Square dancing

DEFALCATION. See Embezzlement

DENTISTRY for the handicapped
Dental care for the handicapped child, by W. O. Young & J. R. Mink. 6p '65 Nat socy for crippled children & adults 2023 W Ogden av Chicago 12 10c
Reprint from "Rehabilitation literature," April 1965

DENTISTS
Should you be a dentist, by P. E. Blackerby jr, as told to M. M. Hunt. rev ed 8p il '65 N Y life ins co Career inf serv Box 51 Madison Sq sta N Y 10010 free

DEPARTMENT stores

Employees

Department store occupations. (Chronicle occupational briefs 375) 4p il '66 Chronicle guidance pubns Moravia N Y 13118 35c send cash with order

DETECTIVES
Detective (criminal investigator). (Career summary S-180) rev ed 2p '66 Careers Box 135 Largo Fla 15c send cash with order

DIET
Practical diet manual for the prevention and control of emotional illness; dietary suggestions for alcoholism, epilepsy, diabetes and hypertension, by R. V. Basso. 61p '66 Dr R V Basso 230 Poland Center rd Poland Ohio 44514 95c

DISCRIMINATION in employment
Management and merit employment. 8p nd N Y state comm for human rights 270 Broadway N Y 7 free to libs Rulings on pre-employment inquiries relating to race, creed, color or national origin, under the New York state law against discrimination. 20p nd N Y state comm for human rights 270 Broadway N Y 7 free to libs

DISCRIMINATION in housing
In search of housing; a study of experiences of Negro professional and technical personnel in New York state. 52p '65 N Y state comm for human rights 270 Broadway N Y 7 free to libs

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC
Dominican dilemma, by L. B. Dennis. (v 1 '66 no 14) 18p '65 Editorial res reps 1735 K st Washington D C 20006 $2
Contents: Struggle to stabilize Dominican Republic; Island dictatorships and American policy; Dominican economic and social conditions

DRUG inspectors. See Food and drug inspectors

EAVESDROPPING
See also
Privacy, Right of

ECONOMIC conditions
also subhead Economic conditions under names of countries and regions, e.g.
Guinea—Economic conditions

EDUCATION
See also Teaching

EDUCATION, Value of Education—an investment in people. 56p charts maps '64 Chamber of comm of the U S 1615 H st Washington D C 20006 $1.50

EDUCATIONAL tests and measurements
Testing vs. your child, by G. B. Leonard. 4p il '66 Look mag 488 Madison av N Y 10022 10c
Reprint from "Look," March 22, 1966

EDUCATIONAL workshops
Faculty role in working with students as persons; report of the eighteenth annual Workshop on teacher education, ed by Nathan Budd. 104p '65 Nathan Budd Kan state teachers coll Emporia Kan 66802 $1 proc

ELECTIONS
See also
Presidents (U.S.)—Election

Colombia

Colombia election factbook, March-May, 1966. 40p maps tables '66 Inst for the comparative study of pol systems 4000 Albemarle st Washington D C 20016 $2

ELECTRIC appliances

Maintenance and repair

Care and repair of your small home appliances, bk 2, by Jack Darr. (Skillfact lib no635) 96p il '66 Editors & engineers ltd Box 68003 New Augusta Ind 46268 $1

ELECTRIC motors
Testing DC motors & generators, by Samuel Heller. 62p il '64 TAB bks Drawer D Thurmont Md $2.50

Repairing

333 motor repair problems solved. 63p il '64 TAB bks Drawer D Thurmont Md $1.95

EMBEZZLEMENT
Embezzlement and its control, by S. H. Wales. 115p '65 Indiana univ Sch of bus Bloomington Ind $1.50

EMOTIONALLY disturbed children. See Children—Nervous and mental disorders

EMPLOYMENT
See also
Age and employment

ENGINEERS
See also Aviation engineers

EQUALITY
Equality of opportunity in education and employment in Maryland. (Pubn no 103-65) 29p tables '65 League of women voters of Md 6 Dock st Annapolis Md 21401 50c proc
Brief picture of the current areas of inequality of education and employment opportunity in Maryland and a summary of federal financial efforts to alleviate these problems

ESTATES, Industrial. See Industrial districts

EYE
Human eye—how we see. (Pubn V-7) chart il '64 Nat socy for the prevention of blindness 16 E 40th st N Y 10016 5c
Includes large drawing of the eye with definitions of the various parts illustrated

Diseases and defects

See also Cataract
Glaucoma

FELLOWSHIP of reconciliation
What is the Fellowship of reconciliation. 12p nd Fellowship pubn Box 271 Nyack N Y single copy free

FINANCE
United States
Money managers and the boom, by A. H. Meltzer. 4p il charts '66 Challenge communications 475 5th av N Y 10017 35c
Reprint from "Challenge," March/April 1966

FISHING
See also
Bass fishing

FLIGHT engineers. See Airplane crews

FOOD and drug inspectors
Food and drug inspector. (Career summary S-165) rev ed 2p '66 Careers Box 135 Largo Fla 15c send cash with order

FOOD brokers
Directories
NFBA directory of members; a comprehensive index of member firms, listing types of products sold, executive personnel, addresses and telephone numbers, corrected to June 1965. 238p '65 Nat food brokers assn 1916 M st Washington D C 20036 single copy free to libs

FOREIGN exchange
Treasury and federal reserve foreign exchange operations, by C. A. Combs. 14p tables '66 Bd of governors of the Fed reserve system Washington D C 20551 free
Eighth joint interim report covers period September 1965-February 1966. Reprint from "Federal reserve bulletin," March 1966

FOREIGN students in the United States
Overseas selection of foreign students, a report. 34p '66 Educ & world affairs 522 5th av N Y 10036 free

FOSTER home care
Child welfare program of Maryland, part 1: Foster care. (Pubn no095-64) 7p '64 League of women voters of Md 6 Dock st Annapolis Md 21401 10c proc

FOUNDRY workers
Foundry occupations. (Chronicle occupational briefs 374) 8p il '66 Chronicle guidance pubns Moravia N Y 13118 35c

FREE speech
Saying the unthinkable, pts 1-2. (Rep nos 380-381) 7,6pp '66 Yale reports Yale univ New Haven Conn single copy free; send mailing label proc
Transcript of two radio programs, January 2 & 9, 1966 on which Clifford Durr, Joseph Barnes and Willard Uphaus were the discussants

FREEDOM of speech. See Free speech

GERMANY
Union (proposed)
German border question and German reunification, by Jeanne Kuebler. (v 1 '66 no 12) 18p '66 Editorial res reps 1735 K st Washington D C 20006 $2
Contents: Partitioning of Germany after the war; Territorial losses and border problems; Pressures for reunification of Germany

GLAUCOMA
Glaucoma—sneak thief of sight. (Pubn G-1) 8p folder il '64 Nat socy for the prevention of blindness 16 E 40th st N Y 10016 5c
General description in layman's terms

GOVERNMENT, Passive Resistance to. See Passive resistance to government

GOVERNMENT, Resistance to
See also Revolutions

GOVERNMENT spending policy
Where do all the billions go, by Murray Weidenbaum. 8p il '66 Washington univ Dept of econ St Louis 63130 free
Reprint from "Trans-action," January-February 1966
See also
United States—Economic policy

GREAT BRITAIN
Defenses
Dilemma of British defense; the imbalance between commitments and resources, by Walter Goldstein. (Mershon soc sci prog in nat security pam ser no3) 98p '66 Ohio state univ press 164 W 19th av Columbus Ohio 43210 $1.50

GROOMING, Personal. See Toilet

GROWTH stocks. See Stocks

GUINEA
Economic conditions
Decline of the Guinean revolution, part 2: Economic development and political expediency, by V. D. Du Bois. (W Africa ser v8 no8 Guinea) 22p il '65 Am univs field staff 366 Madison av N Y 10017 $1 proc

GUITAR
Study and teaching
It's easy to play the guitar for fun. (Skillfact lib no627) 96p il '66 Editors & engineers ltd Box 68003 New Augusta Ind 46268 $1

HAIKU. See Japanese poetry

HANDICAPPED
Avenues of action for long-term care of the multiply handicapped, by E. D. Helsel. (Rep DR-35) 8p '65 Nat socy for crippled children & adults 2023 W Ogden av Chicago 12 25c
Reprint from "Rehabilitation literature," September 1965

Apparatus and equipment
Designing for mentally handicapped, by D. C. Bryant. (Rep AR-189) 3p '65 Nat socy for crippled children & adults 2023 W Ogden av Chicago 12 10c
Reprint from "Rehabilitation literature," November 1964

Clothing
Special clothing for handicapped; review of research and resources, by P. N. Hallenbeck. (Rep noAR-196) 7p por '66 Nat socy for crippled children & adults 2023 W Ogden av Chicago 12 10c
Reprint from "Rehabilitation literature," February 1966

HANDICAPPED, Teachers of the Teachers of exceptional children. (Chronicle occupational briefs 377) 4p il '66 Chronicle guidance pubns Moravia N Y 13118 35c send cash with order

HANDICRAFT
More handcrafts and fun; simple handcrafts for boys and girls 4-10, by Eleanor Doan. 95p il '66 Zondervan pubg house 1415 Lake dr SE Grand Rapids 6 Mich $1.50

HIGHWAY accidents. See Traffic accidents

HOME care hospital service. See Hospitals—Home care programs

HOME economics workers
Home economist. (Chronicle occupational briefs 105R rev ed 4p il '66 Chronicle guidance pubns Moravia N Y 13118 35c send cash with order
Should you be a home economist, by C. T. Dennis, as told to Llewellyn Miller. rev ed 8p il '65 N Y life ins co Career inf serv Box 51 Madison Sq sta N Y 10010 free

HOME economists. See Home economics workers

HOSPITALS
Health education in the hospital; proceedings of an invitational conference conducted in Chicago, May 4-6, 1964. (G-254) 74p '65 Am hospital assn 540 N Lake Shore dr Chicago 60611 $1.50
Contents: Part 1, Aspects of health education: a philosophic framework for hospitals; part 2, The role of hospitals: six points of view on programming for health education; part 3, Dynamics of the conference
Hospitals as educational institutions. (S-27) 2p '66 Am hospital assn 840 N Lake Shore dr Chicago 60611 single copy free
Approved by the American hospital association, November 17-19, 1965

Administration
Guiding principles for hospital utilization review programs. (S-29) 12p '66 Am hospital assn 840 N Lake Shore dr Chicago 60611 single copy free
Approved by the American hospital association, February 3-4, 1966
Role and responsibilities of the Board of trustees and the chief executive officer of a hospital conducting a diploma school of nursing. (S-28) 8p '66 Am hospital assn 840 N Lake Shore dr Chicago 60611 single copy free
Approved by the American hospital association, November 17-19, 1965

Employees
Orderly (hospital). (Career summary S-332) 2p '66 Careers Box 135 Largo Fla 15c send cash with order

Home care programs
Hospitals and coordinated home care programs. (G260) 10p '66 Am hospital assn 840 N Lake Shore dr Chicago 60611 single copy free
Revision of an earlier statement, Principles of administration of hospital-based home care programs

HOUSING

Maryland

Equal opportunity in housing in Maryland. (Pubn no 101) 24p '65 League of women voters of Md 6 Dock st Annapolis Md 21401 50c proc

HOUSING laws and legislation

Housing a nation. (CQ background) 94p '66 Congressional quarterly serv 1735 K st Washington D C 20006 $2.50

Federal programs in housing and urban affairs, 1945-1965, housing and the national economy, urban renewal, public housing, loan programs, veterans' housing, slums, the search for better cities, mass transit, the federal Department of housing and urban development

HUMAN rights. See Civil rights

INCOME

Kentucky county income, 1963; with comparative data, 1956-63, by W. D. Bishop. 31p maps tables '65 Univ of Ky Bur of bus res Lexington Ky 40506 single copy free to libs

INCOME tax

Canada

Income tax burden on Canadian stockholders, by J. R. Allan. (Queen's univ pas in taxation & pub fin no2) 173p tables '66 Canadian tax found 154 University av Toronto 1 Ont Can $2.50

INDEPENDENT study

Independent study: an annotated bibliography, by H. S. Davis. (Staff utilization proj '66) 26p '66 Educl res counc of Greater Cleveland Rockefeller bldg Cleveland 13 75c

INDUSTRIAL districts

Industrial estates in Africa. (Sales no66. 2.B.2) 52p '65 United Nations Sales sec Room 1074 N Y 10017 75c

Prepared by Department of economic and social affairs

INDUSTRIAL estates. See Industrial districts

INDUSTRIAL relations

Employer—employee relationship: What is its nature? What are its areas of agreement and conflict? Can the conflict be resolved, by R. E. Doherty. (Grass roots guides on democ & practical politics no25) 14p '66 Center for inf on Amer Washington Conn 06793 35c

Some pros and cons of union-management cooperation, by Melville Dalton. (Repr no 153) 9p '66 Univ of Calif Inst of indl rel 405 Hilgard av Los Angeles 90024 single copy free; additional copies 20c ea

Reprint from "Personnel administration," November—December 1965

INDUSTRIAL research

Manual on the management of industrial research institutes in developing countries. (Sales no66.2.B.3) 122p '66 United Nations Sales sec Room 1074 N Y 10017 $2

Prepared by Department of economic and social affairs

INDUSTRY and state

Business and the Great Society, by A. G. Erpf. 4p por '66 Challenge communications 475 5th av N Y 10017 35c

Reprint from "Challenge," March/April 1966

INFANTS

Nutrition

Procedures and layout for the infant formula room. rev ed 40p il '65 Am hospital assn 840 N Lake Shore dr Chicago 60611 $1.50

INK brushwork. See Brush drawing

INSURANCE, Health

Taxation

Health insurance taxation; pertinent questions and answers on the taxation of health insurance, by R. H. Christy & P. A. Quarto. (Code: BK 1-3) 32p '66 Res & review serv of Amer 123 W North st Indianapolis 46209 40c

INSURANCE, Life

Farmers need estate conservation too, by st Indianapolis 46209 25c

John Thompson. (Code: BL 466-1) 16p '66 Res & review serv of Amer 123 W North

INTERNATIONAL relations

Asia & U.S. policy, by Elizabeth Weideman. 3p '66 Women's league for peace and freedom 2006 Walnut st Philadelphia 19103 3c proc

INVASION of privacy. See Privacy, Right of INVENTIONS

See also

Patents

INVESTMENT tax credit. See Capital investments—Tax aspects

JAPAN

Materials on Japan: films, filmstrips, records, paperbacks. 29p '64 Japan socy 112 E 64th st N Y 10021 free to libs

Bibliography

What shall I read on Japan, an introductory guide, by Hyman Kublin. 8th ed rev 18p '65 Japan socy 112 E 64th st N Y 10021 free to libs

Description and travel

Travel in Japan, an introductory guide, by D. W. Overton. 3d ed rev 23p map '66 Japan socy 112 E 64th st N Y 10021 free to libs

JAPANESE language

Study and teaching

Useful Japanese, pronunciation and basic words, by Hyman Kublin. rev ed 31p il '64 Japan socy 112 E 64th st N Y 10021 free to libs

JAPANESE poetry

Haiku in English, by H. C. Henderson. 44p '65 Japan socy 112 E 64th st N Y 10021 free to libs

Guide lines and ideas for those who wish to produce haiku in English

JAPANESE sumi-e. See Brush drawing

JEWISH-NEGRO relations

Bibliography

Selected bibliography of books, pamphlets and articles on Negro-Jewish relations. 10p '66 Am Jewish com 165 E 56th st N Y 10022 25c proc

JEWS

Religion

See Judaism

JUDAISM

Orthodoxy in American Jewish life, by C. S. Liebman. 81p '65 Am Jewish com 165 E 56th st N Y 10022 75c

Reprint from "American Jewish year book," vol 66, 1965

JUNIOR colleges

Guidelines for the establishment of community junior colleges, by A. J. Brumbaugh. 21p nd Southern regional educ bd 130 6th st NW Atlanta Ga 30313 free

JURY

Maryland judiciary, part 3: The role of fact in circuit court cases. (Pubn no092-64) 5p '64 League of women voters of Md 6 Dock st Annapolis Md 21401 7c proc

Parts 1 and 2 listed in VFI 1964

JUSTICE, Administration of Southern justice: an indictment. (Sp rep) 30p '65 Southern regional counc 5 Forsyth st Atlanta Ga 30303 30c proc

KITCHENS

Bibliography

Kitchens and bathrooms; a selected list of references, 1964 to 1966. (Ref list no74) 8p '66 Nat housing center lib 1625 L st Washington D C 20036 $2

LAND reserves

Action for open space. (National capital open space Planning rep no 1) 114p '65 Northern Va regional planning & econ devel comm 3150 Wilson blvd Arlington Va 22201 free proc

Open space project; a summary report. 17p maps '65 Northern Va regional planning & econ devel comm 3150 Wilson blvd Arlington Va 22201 free proc

Easements

Open space easements. (Nat capital open space prog Tech rep no4) 40p '65 Northern Va regional planning & econ devel comm 3150 Wilson blvd Arlington Va 22201 free proc

LAND utilization

Local open space manual, planning and zoning, Baltimore county, Maryland. 54p il '65 Baltimore county office of planning & zoning 111 W Chesapeake av Towson Md 21201 free supply limited spiral binding

LAND values

Farming in the national capital region; maximum land values that complement open space. (National capital open space prog Tech rep no5) 36p maps '66 Northern Va regional planning & econ devel comm 3150 Wilson blvd Arlington Va 22201 free proc

LARCENY

See also

Embezzlement

LEGAL aid
Legal assistance: how is it being supplied to those who can't afford it? With what results, by W. K. Muir jr. (Vital issues v 15 no8) 4p '66 Center for inf on Amer Washington Conn 06793 35c

LEGISLATION
South Dakota
Law making in South Dakota, by T. C. Geary. (Rep no55) 4th ed 34p '66 Univ of S D Govl res bur Vermillion S D 57069 free to libs

LIBRARIES
Shelving systems
Automatic shelving and book retrieval: a contribution toward a progressive philosophy of library service for a research library, by Stanley Humenuk. (Occ pa no78) 29p '66 Univ of Ill Grad sch of lib sci Pubns office Urbana Ill $1 proc

LIQUOR traffic
Apparent consumption of distilled spirits, 1956-1965. 25p '66 Distilled spirits inst Pennsylvania bldg Washington D C 20004 free Gallonage consumption by states and by months. Supplement by class and type for calendar year 1965 is included

LOCATION in business and industry
Influence of labor supply location of electronics firms, by E. J. Burtt jr. (Res rep no34-'66) 76p tables '65 Fed reserve bank of Boston Boston 02106 free supply limited proc Study is concerned with recent changes in the location of the electronics manufacturing industries within the region of Massachusetts and Southern New Hampshire, and especially of Greater Boston

LOCOMOTIVES
ABC of L.M.S. locomotives of 1943. (Abc bks) 52p il '66 Sportshelf Box 634 New Rochelle N Y 10802 $2.50
List of the locomotives employed on Britain's largest railway—the London, Midland and Scottish

MAPS, Weather. See Weather maps

MARRIAGE counseling
Marriage counseling: a guide for ministers, by J. R. Hine. 29p '66 Interstate printers & pubrs 19 N Jackson st Danville Ill 61832 50c

MARYLAND
See also Housing—Maryland
Legislature
Maryland General assembly. (Pubn no096) rev ed 11p '65 League of women voters of Md 6 Dock st Annapolis Md 21401 25c
Politics and government
Do you know the ABC's of your state government? 4p '65 League of women voters of Md 6 Dock st Annapolis Md 21401 15c proc
Outline of Maryland state government. (Pubn no008) rev ed 10p '65 League of women voters of Md 6 Dock st Annapolis Md 21401 15c proc

MATERIALS handling
Material handling engineer. (Career summary S-175) rev ed 2p '66 Careers Box 135 Largo Fla 15c send cash with order

MENTALLY handicapped children
ABC's for parents; aids to management of the slow child at home, by M. P. Frey. (Rep AR-193) 4p '65 Nat socy for crippled children & adults 2023 W Odgen av Chicago 12 10c
Reprint from "Rehabilitation literature," September 1965

MERCHANT marine
United States
Overhauling the nation's maritime policy, by L. A. Rapping. 4p il '66 Challenge communications 475 5th av N Y 10017 35c
Reprint from "Challenge," March/April 1966

METALLURGICAL engineers. See Metallurgists

METALLURGISTS
Metallurgist. (Career summary S-188) rev ed 2p '66 Careers Box 135 Largo Fla 15c send cash with order

MICROBIOLOGISTS
Microbiologist. (Chronicle occupational briefs 135R) rev ed 4p il '66 Chronicle guidance pubns Moravia N Y 13118 35c send cash with order

MIGRANT labor
Migrant farmer: a psychiatric study, by Robert Coles. 32p '65 Southern regional counc 5 Forsyth st Atlanta Ga 30303 30c
New ways of serving agricultural migrants, by E. W. Jacobs. 12p '65 Nat travelers aid assn 44 E 23d st N Y 10010 free
Reprint from "Social work practice," 1965

MILITARY purchasing. See United States—Armed forces—Procurement

MILWAUKEE
Education
Milwaukee: a fair deal, by E. L. Winter and Education for industry, by H. S. Vincent. 4p il '66 Am Jewish com 165 E 56th st N Y 10022 10c
Two articles reprinted from "Saturday review," January 8, 1966 describe how business and the schools in Milwaukee are cooperating in expanding equal vocational opportunities for students

MODEL car racing. See Automobile models—Racing

MODEL roadracing. See Automobile models—Racing

MOTEL managers
Motel manager. (Chronicle occupational briefs 213R) rev ed 4p il '66 Chronicle guidance pubns Moravia N Y 13118 35c send cash with order

MOTOR buses
Great Britain
British bus fleets no.2. Yorkshire municipal operators, by F. Gardiner & F. Hilliard. 72p il map ['66] Sportshelf Box 634 New Rochelle N Y 10802 $1.75
Printed in Great Britain
British bus fleets, no9, Yorkshire company operators, by J. S. Cockshott. 80p il map ['66] Sportshelf Box 634 New Rochelle N Y 10802 $1.75
Printed in Great Britain

MOTOR vehicle accidents. See Traffic accidents

MUNICIPAL employees
Salaries
Salaries of municipal officials in Virginia towns. (Rep no477) 11p '66 Va munic league Travelers bldg Richmond Va 23219 $1

MUNICIPAL government
City manager plan
See City manager plan

MUNICIPAL improvement
Highest and best use: Civic center project, a case history in urban renewal, Memphis, Tennessee. 12p il '65 Memphis housing authority Box 68 Memphis 1 Tenn free supply limited

MUNICIPAL ordinances. See City ordinances

MUNICIPAL services
Directories
Directory of governmental services available to Colorado municipalities, by N. J. Cayer. 75p '66 Univ of Colo Bur of govl res & serv Boulder Colo 80304 $1 proc

MUSIC, School. See School music

MUSICAL instruments
See also
Guitar

NARCOTIC addicts
New hope for drug addicts, by R. H. Berg. 6p il '65 Look mag 488 Madison av N Y 10022 15c
A teaspoonful of medicine taken daily in a cup of orange juice is changing former dope addicts into decent, law-abiding men. Reprint from "Look," November 30, 1965

NEGRO-Jewish relations. See Jewish-Negro relations

NEGROES in the United States
Is there a breakdown of the Negro family, by Elizabeth Herzog. 8p '66 Am Jewish com 165 E 56th st N Y 10022 20c
Reprint from "Social work," January 1966
Housing
See also
Discrimination in housing

NEIGHBORHOOD centers. See Social settlements

NEIGHBORHOODS
Neighborhood stabilization: a program. (Sp rep) 14p '66 Southern regional counc 5 Forsyth st Atlanta Ga 30303 30c proc

NON-VIOLENT non-cooperation. See Passive resistance to government

NURSES and nursing
Practical nurses
Licensed practical nurse. (Chronicle occupational briefs 11R) rev ed 4p il '66 Chronicle guidance pubns Moravia N Y 13118 35c send cash with order

NURSES and nursing—Continued

Training

NLN accreditation—community nursing services; guide to preparing a report for evaluation for preliminary accreditation. (Code no21-1217) 9p '66 Nat league for nursing 10 Columbus circ N Y 10019 $1
Program cosponsored by the American public health association

Nursing education—creative, continuing, experimental. (Code no 15-1214) 62p '66 Nat league for nursing 10 Columbus circ N Y 10019 $1.75 proc
Papers presented at the twentieth conference of the Council of member agencies of the Department of baccalaureate and higher degree programs held at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania November 10-12, 1965

NURSES and nursing, Public health

Nursing activities in public health agencies, based on data for the year 1964. (Code no21-1219) rev ed 20p '66 Nat league for nursing Dept of pub health 10 Columbus circ N Y 10019 $1 proc

OFFENSE against property
See also Embezzlement

OFFICE workers
See also
Reception clerks
Secretaries

OPINION research. See Public opinion polls

ORDINANCES, City. See City ordinances

OREGON

Economic statistics

Oregon economic statistics, 1966. 76p map '66 Univ of Ore Bur of bus & econ res Eugene Ore 97403 $3

ORIENTAL brushwork. See Brush drawing

PAINE, Thomas

Thomas Paine: was he really anticlassical. by R. M. Gummere. 17p '66 Am antiquarian socy Worcester Mass $1
Reprint from "Proceedings of the American antiquarian society," October 1965

PAKISTAN

Constitution

Constitutional development and cultural change, part 6: The first Pakistani constitution of 1956, by Louis Dupree. (S Asia ser v9 no8) 22p '65 Am univs field staff 366 Madison av N Y 10017 $1 proc

PAMPHLETS

How to collect free & inexpensive pamphlets, by Alicia Luff. 12p '66 Alicia Luff Burbank pub lib 110 N Glenoaks blvd Burbank Calif 91501 50c proc

PARKS, Industrial. See Industrial districts

PASSIVE resistance to government

What do you mean—nonviolence? the story of wars with peaceful weapons, by Sue Gottfried. (Forerunner ser for high sch young people) 31p il '64 Fellowship pubns Box 271 Nyack N Y 50c

PATENTS

Patent your invention and make it pay, by W. R. Sanderson. 82p il '66 Grosset & Dunlap 1107 Broadway N Y 10010 $1

PERSONNEL managers

Should you go into personnel work, by C. S. Ching, as told to Harold Baron. rev ed 8p il '65 N Y life ins co Career inf serv Box 51 Madison sq sta N Y 10010 free

PETROLEUM industry and trade

Letter to Fortune from Stanley Learned. 9p por '66 Phillips petroleum co Adv & pub rel dept Bartlesville Okla 74004 free to libs
An oil man's analysis of Fortune magazine's April, 1965, article, "A giant caught in its own web." Reprinted from "Petroleum management." February 1966

PETROLEUM workers

Petroleum production occupations. (Career brief B-126) rev ed 8p '66 Careers Box 135 Largo Fla 25c send cash with order

PHILADELPHIA

Riots

Leader's guide for group discussion of Case study of a riot—the Philadelphia story, by L. E. Berson. (Pam ser no7) 16p '66 Inst of human rel press 165 E 56th st N Y 10022 25c
Case study of a riot was listed in VFI March 1966

PHYSICIANS and patients

Sensitivity of one person to another, by Tamara Dembo. (Rep AR-188) 6p '64 Nat socy for crippled children & adults 2023 W Ogden av Chicago 12 10c
Reprint from "Rehabilitation literature," August 1964

PHYSICISTS

Should you be a physicist, by A. H. Compton, as told to N. M. Lobsenz. rev ed 8p il '65 N Y life ins co Career inf serv Box 51 Madison Sq sta N Y 10010 free

POLITICAL forecasting

Political predictions and projections: how are they conducted? Do they influence the outcome of elections, by A. R. Clausen. (Grass roots guides on democ & practical politics no24) 14p '66 Center for inf on Amer Washington Conn 06793 35c also subhead Politics and government under names of countries and states, e.g. Maryland—Politics and government

POLITICS

POLLS, Public opinion. See Public opinion polls

POLLUTION of air. See Air pollution

POOLS, Swimming. See Swimming pools

POPULATION

Overpopulation

Population problem and economic development, by David Rockefeller. 16p '66 Econ club of Detroit 321 W Lafayette Detroit 48226 free to libs
Address before the Economic Club of Detroit, February 14, 1966

PRACTICAL nurses. See Nurses and nursing—Practical nurses

PREACHING

Listener's guide to preaching, by W. D. Thompson. 110p il '66 Abingdon press 201 8th av S Nashville 2 Tenn $1.25

PREJUDICE

How to hate in one easy lesson, by Leo Rosten. 1p '65 Look mag 488 Madison av N Y 10022 5c
Reprint from "Look," December 14, 1965

PRESIDENTS (United States)

Presidents of the United States, by Frank Freidel. rev ed 79p col il '64 White House hist assn 1634 I st Washington D C 20006 pa 75c; cl $1.75

Election

What happened in the South? 15p '64 Southern regional counc 5 Forsyth st Atlanta Ga 30303 15c proc
Analysis of the meaning of the Negro vote in the South

PRINTING industry

Should you go into the printing industry, by W. H. Walling, as told to Roger Dakin. rev ed 8p il '65 N Y life ins co Career inf serv Box 51 Madison Sq sta N Y 10010 free

PRIVACY, Right of

Protection of privacy, by H. B. Shaffer. (v 1 '66 no 15) 17p '66 Editorial res reps 1735 K st Washington D C 20006 $2
Contents: Prominent cases of invasion of privacy; Moves to restrict abuses of privacy; Spying devices and restraints on use; Constitutional protection of privacy

Secretary of State sets forth guide lines for State department dealings with Americans traveling abroad. (Interp releases v43 no 14) 3p '66 Am counc for nationalities serv 20 W 40th st N Y 10018 50c proc

PROFESSIONAL ethics

Ethics and professional conduct in management counseling, by P. W. Shay. rev ed 15p '65 Assn of consulting management engrs 347 Madison av N Y 10017 $1 proc

PROJECT head start

Teachers find headstart helps Dade preschoolers. 4p il '66 Am Jewish com 165 E 56th st N Y 10022 10c

PUBLIC opinion polls

Direct democracy and water policy: a preliminary examination of a special district election, by R. W. Brandsma. (Calif gov ser no 10) 47p '66 Univ of Calif, Davis Inst of govl affairs Davis Calif $2

PUBLIC relations as a career

Should you go into public relations, by J. W. Hill, as told to Jhan Robbins. rev ed 8p il '65 N Y life ins co Career inf serv Box 51 Madison Sq sta N Y 10010 free

PUBLIC schools

Black belt schools: beyond segregation, by D. R. Green & others. (Toward regional realism no4) 40p '65 Southern regional counc 5 Forsyth st Atlanta Ga 30303 30c

Desegregation

September 1965 school desegregation: old problems under a new law. (Sp rep) 23p map '65 Southern regional counc 5 Forsyth st Atlanta Ga 30303 30c proc

PUBLIC welfare

Mobile poor, by E. W. Jacobs. (PRO-8668-65) 8p '65 Nat travelers aid assn 44 E 23d st N Y 10010 free proc
Testimony presented at the National conference on poverty in the Southwest, Tucson, Arizona, January 25-26, 1965

Social services for the mobile poor in urban areas, by S. M. Simons. 12p '65 Nat travelers aid assn 44 E 23d st N Y 10010 free
Reprint from 'Social work practice," 1965

PUBLIC welfare—Continued
Statement on public welfare to the Advisory council on public welfare, Department of health, education and welfare, by S. M. Simons. (ADM-8678-65) 6p '65 Nat travelers aid assn 44 E 23d st N Y 10010 free proc

PUBLISHERS and publishing
Manuals
ABC manual for new editors of recreation and park publications, ed by Dorothy Donaldson. 56p '65 Nat recreation & park assn 8 W 8th st N Y 10011 $2.60

RACE relations
Bibliography
Police and race relations: a selected bibliography. rev ed 14p '66 Am Jewish com 165 E 56th st N Y 10022 25c

RAILROADS
Employees
Railroad conductor. (Career summary S-177) rev ed 2p '66 Careers Box 135 Largo Fla 15c send cash with order

REAL property
Valuation
Alaska school districts; property, assessments and full value determination, 1964. 113p '64 Alaska Office of the Governor Local affairs agency Box 710 Juneau Alaska 99801 free proc spiral binding

RECEPTION clerks
Receptionist. (Chronicle occupational briefs 107R) rev ed 4p il '66 Chronicle guidance pubns Moravia N Y 13118 35c send cash with order

REGIONAL planning
Comprehensive plan for the Difficult Run watershed. 62p maps '66 Fairfax county planning office Fairfax Va 22030 $3 plus 32c postage maps in pocket spiral binding
Design for a worldwide study of regional development: a report to the United Nations on a proposed research-training program. (Resources for the future staff study) 82p '66 Johns Hopkins press Homewood Baltimore 21218 $1.50

REHABILITATION
Workshop as a clinical rehabilitation tool, by William Gellmann & S. B. Friedman. (Rep AR-190) 6p pors '65 Nat socy for crippled children & adults 2023 W Ogden av Chicago 12 10c
Reprint from "Rehabilitation literature." February 1965

RESEARCH
See also Industrial research

RESTAURANTS
Employees
Bus boy-bus girl. (Career summary S-178) rev ed 2p '66 Careers Box 135 Largo Fla 15c send cash with order

REVOLUTIONS
Revolution and you: the story of the rising expectations of the world's people, by Sidney Lens. (Forerunner ser for high sch young people) 31p nd Fellowship pubns Box 271 Nyack N Y 50c

RIGHT of privacy. See Privacy, Right of ROAD maps

Rand McNally road atlas and travel guide. rev ed 84p il '66 Rand McNally & co Box 7600 Chicago 60680 $1
Guide to United States, Canada and Mexico featuring the national parks

ROADSIDES
Roadside preservation of scenic, historic, and natural areas. unp il maps '65 Northern Va regional planning & econ devel comm 3150 Wilson blvd Arlington Vt 22201 free
Prepared by the National capital open space program

ROLLING-stock. See Locomotives

RUSSIA
Commerce
Changing Soviet Union and the prospects for increasing East-West trade, by John Scott. 21p '66 Econ club of Detroit 321 W Lafayette Detroit 48226 free to libs
Address of special correspondent and assistant to the publisher of Time magazine, February 7, 1966

SAFETY education
Our schools plan safe living. rev ed 32p il '66 Nat comm on safety educ, NEA 1201 16th st Washington D C 20036 75c send payment with order also subhead Salaries under various subjects e.g.

SALARIES
Municipal employees—Salaries

SALESMANSHIP. See Salesmen and salesmanship

SALESMEN and salesmanship
Should you be a salesman, by R. A. Whitney, as told to Oscar Schisgall. 8p il '65 N Y life ins co Career inf serv Box 51 Madison Sq sta N Y 10010 free
Wholesale salesmen. (Career brief B-124) rev ed 8p '66 Careers Box 135 Largo Fla 25c send cash with order

SAYINGS. See Aphorisms and apothegms

SCANDINAVIA
See also
Sweden

SCHOOL buildings
Equipment
Guide for Texas public schools property accounting. (Bul 637) 150p '64 Tex educ agency Capitol sta Austin Tex 78711 50c
A property account, as used in this guide, is a descriptive heading under which is recorded specific information about land, buildings, and equipment under the jurisdiction and control of school districts and any other units that operate schools

SCHOOL bus drivers
Handbook for school bus drivers. (Bul 649) 43p il '64 Tex educ agency Capitol sta Austin Tex 78711 7c send cash with order

SCHOOL music
Contemporary music for schools. 88p '66 Music educators nat conf 1201 16th st Washington D C 20036 $1
A catalog of works written by composers participating in the Young composers project-1959 to 1964, sponsored by the Ford foundation and the National music council
Music for elementary schools. (Bul 648) 77p '64 Tex educ agency Capitol sta Austin Tex 78711 22c send cash with order

SCHOOLS
See also Public schools

SCIENCE
Study and teaching—Juvenile literature
How to individualize science instruction in the elementary school, by T. W. Munch. 12p '66 Nat educ assn Pubns-sales sec 1201 16th st Washington D C 20036 35c send payment with order
Science, grades 1-9; suggested lists of principles and terms. (Bul 643) 106p '64 Tex educ agency Capitol sta Austin Tex 78711 24c send cash with order

SCIENCE as a profession
Should you be a scientist, by Edward Teller, as told to Donald Robinson. 8p il '65 N Y life ins co Career inf serv Box 51 Madison Sq sta N Y 10010 free

SCIENCE teachers
Career for you as a science teacher, by F. X. Sutman & others. rev ed 24p il '66 Nat educ assn Pubns-sales sec 1201 16th st Washington D C 20036 25c send payment with order Activities of science teachers—at all grade levels from kindergarten to college are described in this booklet

SECRETARIES
Should you be a secretary, by C. H. Jennings, as told to Llewellyn Miller. rev ed 8p il '65 N Y life ins co Career inf serv Box 51 Madison Sq sta N Y 10010 free

SEGREGATION in housing. See Discrimination in housing

SELLING. See Salesmen and salesmanship

SETTLEMENTS, Social. See Social settlements

SEX crimes
Protecting the child victim of sex crimes, by Vincent De Francis. (Pubn no28) 14p '65 Am humane assn Childrens div Box 1266 Denver Colo 80201 single copy free to libs; 35c to others

SEX instruction
Sex education comes of age, by Leonard Gross. 4p il '66 Look mag 488 Madison av N Y 10022 10c
Reprint from "Look," March 8, 1966
Wonder of sex: how to teach children: a guide for parents and teachers, by Jack & Barbara Willke. 115p '64 Hiltz pubg co 6300 Hamilton av Cincinnati Ohio 45224 $1.50

SHELVING systems (libraries). See Libraries—Shelving systems

SIGHT
See also
Eye

SLOT car racing. See Automobile models—Racing

SLUMS
City slum—poor people and problems: a report on an attempt to build a community organization around local self-interest issues in a southern city. (Sp rep) 26p '65 Southern regional counc 5 Forsyth st Atlanta Ga 30303 30c

SOUTHERN

REGIONAL

COUNCIL

P U B L I C A T I O N S

A listing of current materials related to civil rights and race relations available from

The Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

August, 1965

Index to Price Code

SC - single copy
Q - price per copy in quantity
SCF - single copy free
QRR - quantity rates on request

* * * * * * * * * * *

1964:

THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, 1944-1964. How, why, and by whom the SRC was organized; statement of policy and aims; statement of views. SC 20¢, Q 15¢.

SERIES OF SPECIAL REPORTS telling of progress in race relations in five southern cities: what happened, how, why, and the outlook for the future. CHARLOTTE, LOUISVILLE, MEMPHIS, available now @ 40¢ each city; others will be out later, same price. (Mimeo., 40 to 91 pp.)

LAW ENFORCEMENT IN MISSISSIPPI. Special Report on Mississippi during the Summer of 1964, responsibilities of Mississippi and federal authorities as they relate to law enforcement and white reaction to the COFO program. SC 40¢.

THE PRICE WE PAY. Samples the costs -- chiefly money -- incurred by the South's resistance to equal opportunity. Produced in cooperation with Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. SC 75¢ QRR.

1963:

DIRECT ACTION IN THE SOUTH. A report on the Negro revolt, beginning with Feb. 1, 1960 and continuing through summer, 1963. SC 35¢ QRR.

A HUNDRED YEARS LATER. Comments by four outstanding Southerners on the meaning of the Civil War Centennial. SC 20¢.

PLANS FOR PROGRESS. A study of their interpretation and implementation by 24 large corporations with southern branch offices in Atlanta. SC 10¢ mimeo.

FEDERAL PROGRAMS TO PROMOTE EMPLOYMENT AND DEVELOPMENT IN RURAL COMMUNITIES by M. Hayes Mizell. Sponsored jointly by Penn Community Services and South Carolina Council on Human Relations. SC 10¢ mimeo.

SOUTHERN SCHOOLS: TOKEN DESEGREGATION AND BEYOND, by Prof. J. Kenneth Morland, Randolph-Macon Woman's College, 27 pp., June, 1963. Sponsored jointly by SRC and Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. SC 50¢ QRR.

THE DESEGREGATION OF SOUTHERN SCHOOLS: A PSYCHIATRIC STUDY, by Robert Coles, M. D. Two-year research by child psychiatrist on effects of school desegregation, 25 pp. July, 1963. Sponsored jointly by SRC and ADL. SC 50¢ QRR.

THE CIVIL RIGHTS CRISIS: A SYNOPSIS OF RECENT DEVELOPMENTS. A synopsis of racial protest and reaction in the South by state and city. I. covers period April-June, 1963; III covers period July 24-August 28, 1963; IV, a year-end summary, covers period August 28-December 31, 1963. (No more copies of II, June-July). These synopses are neither press releases nor detailed analyses, but very brief statements of action. Mimeo. SC 20¢ each report.

THE ECONOMIC STATUS OF NEGROES: IN THE NATION AND IN THE SOUTH, by Vivian W. Henderson, Prof. of Economics at Fisk University. "Unless unforeseeable, 'revolutionary' changes take place in Negro manpower utilization and development, the Negro citizen will remain the 'forgotten man' in America's affluent society." 23 pp., Sept. 1963. SC 25¢ QRR.

BUSINESS -- NEXT TARGET FOR INTEGRATION? by John Perry, reprinted from Harvard Business Review, March-April, 1963. SC 20¢.

A STUDY OF NEGRO FARMERS IN SOUTH CAROLINA. Brief description of federal agricultural programs for Negro farmers in the Deep South. SC 10¢.

MISSISSIPPI: THE CLOSED SOCIETY, by James W. Silver, University of Mississippi. Presidential Address before the Southern Historical Association, Asheville, N. C., November 7, 1963. SC 50¢ QRR.

1962:

THE NEGRO AND EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES IN THE SOUTH: HOUSTON, 22 page report based on survey by Prof. Art Gallaher, University of Houston, November, 1961; ATLANTA, Prof. Carl Holman, research coordinator, May, 1962; CHATTANOOGA, Dr. Major J. Jones, research coordinator, February, 1962. SC each study, 20¢, Q 15¢.

ALBANY, by Howard Zinn, Prof. History & Social Science. A first-hand account of the "Albany Movement" for desegregation in that Georgia city. Mimeo. SC 25¢

THE UNEQUAL BADGE, by Elliott M. Rudwick, Assoc. Prof. of Sociology, Southern Illinois University. A 14-page survey of number of Negro policemen employed in the South and their status in 130 communities. SC 10¢, Q 6¢.

THE OXFORD DISASTER . . . PRICE OF DEFIANCE, by Rep. Karl Wiesenburg, Jackson County, Miss. Reprint of articles appearing in The Chronicle (Pascagoula, Miss.) December 17-21, 1962. SC 10¢.

SOUTHERN STUDENT NEWSPAPER OPINION OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MISSISSIPPI RIOTS. A round-up of editorials and columns reflecting on Oxford. SC 5¢.

1961:

THE FEDERAL EXECUTIVE AND CIVIL RIGHTS, a 48-page report sent to President John F. Kennedy with an 18-point proposal on executive power in furthering civil rights. February, 1961, SC 35¢, Q 25¢.

THE ANNEALING OF THE SOUTH, by Leslie W. Dunbar. Article reprinted from Autumn, 1961 Virginia Quarterly Review. SRC's Executive Director examines the changing climate of southern thinking. SC 10¢, Q 7¢.

THIS I BELIEVE, by Haywood M. Hill, M. D. Eloquent message a southern Presbyterian elder delivered to his church school class. SCF, Q 2¢.

THE FREEDOM RIDE, May, 1961. Chronology and reactions. Mimeo. SC 25¢.

THE CASE FOR INTEGRATION, by Daniel C. Thompson, Social Science chairman, Dillard University. Dr. Thompson's side of a debate on integration -- a clear and explicit statement of Negro aims. SC 10¢ QRR.

A VIRGINIA VIEW OF "RACE AND REASON," by Benjamin Muse. Refutation of Carleton Putnam's views on superior-inferior race. SC 5¢, Q 3¢.

WHAT THE SUPREME COURT SAID, a commentary on the school desegregation decree of 1964.

1960: (and later, as noted)

THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL REPORTS THE CHANGING SOUTH. A collection of reprints illustrative of SRC's program in public information. SCF.

RACIAL VIOLENCE AND LAW ENFORCEMENT, by George McMillan. A study drawn on Chattanooga, Little Rock, and Montgomery, 1960. SC 25¢.

RACIAL CRISIS AND THE PRESS, by Walter Spearman and Sylvan Meyer. Racial news in the press. SC 25¢, Q 20¢.

SCHOOL DESEGREGATION: THE FIRST SIX YEARS. In question and answer form, the fact confronting the South on this issue. SC 25¢.

MAP, showing percentage of non-white population in counties of southern states as of 1960. SC 25¢, Q 20¢.

THE SOUTH AND THE NATION, by LeRoy Collins, then Governor of Florida, dealing with fundamental issues of southern life. SC 20¢, Q 15¢.

IF THE SCHOOLS ARE CLOSED . . . A Critical Analysis of the Private School Plan, by Warren E. Gauerke and Donald Ross Green. 40 pp., 1959. SC 15¢.

THE TRUTH ABOUT DESEGREGATION IN WASHINGTON'S SCHOOLS, reprints from The Washington Post in 1958 in reply to Davis Committee report.

A SOUTHERNER'S WORDS SUPPLY REBUTTAL, by John Lofton. In his article reprinted from the Pittsburgh Post Gazette (March 18, 1959), Lofton pits arguments from James M. Dabbs' The Southern Heritage against Putnam's segregationist views. SCF, QRR.

THE NEGRO AND THE BALLOT IN THE SOUTH, by Margaret Price, 1959. Statistics and specific local examples. SC 25¢.

LEADERSHIP REPORTS

(All mimeographed unless otherwise noted) SCF, QRR

L-1 THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL - ORIGINS AND AIMS

L-5 PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND THE ECONOMY OF VIRGINIA

L-16 ATLANTA AND WASHINGTON: RACIAL DIFFERENCES IN ACADEMIC ACHIEVEMENT, by Frank H. Stallings, Associate Professor of Education, University of Louisville, 1960.

L-17 DESEGREGATION AND ACADEMIC ACHIEVEMENT. Findings of some border and southern school districts which have desegregated. 1960.

L-19 WHAT PRICE TAG FOR 'MASSIVE RESISTANCE?' Two articles by Frank Trippett on the economic effects of Virginia's policy reprinted from St. Petersburg Times.

L-21 PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT, address by an Atlanta industrialist, H. McKinley Conway, Jr., stressing the importance of leaving education to educators. 1960.

L-22 A REPORT BY THE FOWLER COMMISSION ON RACE RELATIONS. A biracial group appointed by former Governor Collins of Florida to supply leadership. 1960.

L-23C DESEGREGATION IN HIGHER EDUCATION. Fact sheet, 1935-63.

L-23B " " " "

L-23D " " " "

L-24* ADDRESS BY MALCOLM BRYAN, President of Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, concerning racial problems and economics. 1961.

L-24A NEW SCHOOL LAWS FOR GEORGIA

L-25 NEW CENSUS LOOK AT CITIES AND RACE. Reprint from the Washington Post, 1961.

L-26 ADDRESS BY GENERAL LUCIUS D. CLAY. Remarks on the industrial climate of Georgia. 1961.

L-27* THE EASY OR THE HARD WAY? Aspects of the option taken in parts of Virginia and North Carolina not to desegregate schools. 1961.

L-28 ORGANIZATIONS SUPPORTING THE STUDENT PROTEST MOVEMENT. 1961.

L-29 AMERICAN ANTHROPOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION RESOLUTION ON RACE. Scientists reject theories of Negro racial inferiority. 1961.

L-30 A POSITIVE PLAN TO HELP SOLVE OUR RACIAL DILEMMA. Reprint from Jackson (Mississippi) State Times, November, 1961; and BIRMINGHAM FACES A HARD DECISION, reprint from the Birmingham (Alabama) News, October, 1961.

L-31 SLIPPING SEGREGATION: NEGROES WIN LOWERING OF MORE BARRIERS IN SOUTH. Reprint from Wall Street Journal, January, 1961.

L-32 REFUTATION OF "RACE AND REASON," by Dr. William P. Sullivan, Asst. Professor of English, McNeese State College, Lake Charles, Louisiana. 1962.

L-33* A STATEMENT OF RECOMMENDED POLICE POLICY RESULTING FROM THE NEW YORK UNIVERSITY GRADUATE SCHOOL OF PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION CONFERENCE ON "The Challenge of Desegregation for American Police Executives." 1962.

L-34 DESEGREGATION IN SOUTHERN PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS. Report on Catholic dioceses in 11 states. May 30, 1962.

L-34A DESEGREGATION IN SOUTHERN PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS. August, 1963.

L-35 STATE COMMISSIONS ON HUMAN RELATIONS: Delaware, Kentucky, Maryland, West Virginia. 1962.

L-36 RICHMOND QUIETLY LEADS WAY IN RACE RELATIONS. Reprint from the Washington Post. 1962.

L-37 STATEMENT ON "ECONOMIC COST OF RACIAL DISCRIMINATION IN EMPLOYMENT" presented to Congress by the Council of Economic Advisers.

L-38 WHAT PRICE VIOLENCE? Press commentary on economic hazards of University of Mississippi riots. 1962.

L-40 OBSERVATIONS FOR A SECOND CENTURY, from an address by Governor Terry Sanford of North Carolina on the "Good Neighbor" program. 1962.

L-41 EXCERPTS FROM SPEECHES OF GOVERNOR BERT COMBS OF KENTUCKY AND SECRETARY OF COMMERCE LUTHER T. HODGES. Both speeches concerned national need for development of a deeper understanding of the meaning of practical human brotherhood. 1963.

L-42* ACCEPTANCE SPEECH OF EDWARD J. MEEMAN, editor emeritus of the Memphis Press-Scimitar, upon receiving the National Human Relations Award of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, February 25, 1963.

L-43* BUSINESSMEN POINT THE WAY. Recently issued statements by business groups in southern cities calling on all businesses serving the public to desegregate. 1963.

L-44 CHARLOTTE HAS BUILT ITS INTEGRATION ROAD: A DIFFERENT WAY, By L. M. Wright, Jr., city editor of Charlotte Observer. The story of quiet, organized desegregation of public facilities without demonstrations. 1963.

L-45 PUBLIC EDUCATION IN MISSISSIPPI. Analysis of reports from Public Welfare and Department of Education of Mississippi, noting gap in educational opportunities for whites and Negroes. 1963.

L-46 VOICE OF THE PEOPLE: 'AT THIS VERY LATE HOUR.' -- A letter co-authored by two citizens of Birmingham, James A. Head and Charles P. Zukoski, Jr., reprinted from the Birmingham News, Sept. 30, 1963.

L-47 THE QUESTION FROM JACKSONVILLE. Description of Jacksonville's racial outbreak of 1964.

SOME QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS ON THE CIVIL RIGHTS BILL, Leadership Conference on Civil Rights. SCF.

NEW SOUTH, monthly magazine published by SRC, SC 20¢ each; subscription, $2.50 yearly. Articles of general interest in copies of which we still have a supply:

THE MARCH ON WASHINGTON, by Margaret Long, September, 1963.
THE MYTH, THE MOVEMENT, AND THE AMERICAN DREAM, by James M. Dabbs, retiring President of SRC. December, 1963.
THE TURKS, by Ira Kaye; ACHIEVEMENT IN ALBANY, by Wyatt T. Walker. June, 1963.
BLACK MUSLIMS--MIRROR OF THE EXISTING ORDER, by Eric Lincoln. January, 1963.
MISSISSIPPI. October, 1962 (violence and harassment).
MARGINAL MAN AND THE NEW NEGRO IDENTITY, by Herman Long. April, 1962.
A SEMANTIC JOURNEY IN THE SOUTH, by Lillian Smith. March, 1962. A psychological x-ray of southerners.
THE DILIGENT KNITTERS, by Nedra Tyre (fears and falacies), February, 1962, and THE RIGHT TO PROTEST, by Marion Wright (Rebels--past and present).

THE ONLY TRUE AMERICAN, by Louis E. Lomax. January, 1962. and THE WHITE FEATHER, by Will D. Campbell (human relations).

MINORITY SOUTH: "Some of My Best Friends Are Southerners," by George A. Gulette; "Police, Minorities and Mobs," by E. C. Hale, Chief of Police, Lexington, Kentucky; a southern newspaper reader. September, 1961.

THE FREEDOM RIDES . . . their impact on one rider, the Deep South, national unity, and world opinion. July-August, 1961.

REPRINTS, SCF - QRR

New York Times, 9-27-59, "The Agony of the Southern Minister," by Ralph McGill.

Washington Post, 10-7-62, "The South's Pattern of Violence Has Changed," by George McMillan.

"Segregation v. the Space Age," by Marion Wright, 4-9-48.

Harper's, June, 1958, "The Easy Chair," by Harry S. Ashmore (Little Rock).

New York Times, 4-1-60, "A Southern View of the South," by Harold Fleming.

BOOK, paperback, THIS IS WHAT WE FOUND, by Ralph and Carl Creger. (Little Rock). Negro history, useful to elementary and high school students. 25¢.

LATEST PUBLICATIONS

1965:

RACIAL DISCRIMINATION IN THE SOUTHERN FEDERAL COURTS

ENCOUNTER WITH THE FUTURE, by Pat Watters

CIVIL RIGHTS UNDER FEDERAL PROGRAMS

AMERICANS ARE LAW ABIDING CITIZENS

*Out of print, but available on loan to special individuals or groups for research or other special purposes.

"Perhaps the oldest and most consistently reliable source of information about the South's sociological and interracial problems is the Southern Regional Council . . . /it/ has been dedicated to research and to the principle that fair, open, and well-informed discussion and dialogue are invaluable to advancement and understanding."

-- Ralph McGill
Atlanta Constitution, 8/5/63

"The . . . publications of the Council since 1961, when I discovered it, have been a constant source of enlightment and inspiration. I have seen published in New South, its lively little monthly periodical, statements of truths that the establishmentarian white liberal editors of the North wouldn't even understand."

-- Howard N. Meyer
The Commonweal, 7/10/64

BULK PRICES APPLY FOR 10 OR MORE COPIES

1966:

A CITY SLUM -- POOR PEOPLE AND PROBLEMS. A report on an attempt to build a community organization around local self-interest issues in a southern city. .30
bulk .20

NEIGHBORHOOD STABILIZATION: A PROGRAM. A look at what residents of so-called changing neighborhoods can do to revitalize their community while resisting the exploitation of unscrupulous real estate agents. .30
bulk .20

COOPERATIVES, CREDIT UNIONS AND POOR PEOPLE. An appraisal of the growing trend toward cooperatives and credit unions among impoverished Negro farmers in the rural South with emphasis on the realistic expectations of such ventures. .30
bulk .20

1965:

SEPTEMBER 1965 SCHOOL DESEGREGATION: OLD PROBLEMS UNDER A NEW LAW. A survey of southern school desegregation in the year after the enactment of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, including state-by-state statistics and problems faced under Freedom of Choice plans. .30
bulk .15

SOUTHERN JUSTICE: AN INDICTMENT. A documentary account of the South's system of dual justice. .30
bulk .15

RACIAL DISCRIMINATION IN THE SOUTHERN FEDERAL COURTS. A revealing report on the exclusion of Negroes from juries and employment in southern federal courts. .20
bulk .10

THE MIGRANT FARMER: A PSYCHIATRIC STUDY. An unusual look by Harvard University psychiatrist Dr. Robert Coles into the lives and problems of migrant farm families. .30
bulk .20

BLACK BELT SCHOOLS: BEYOND DESEGREGATION. A study by four Georgia educators with their sample suggestions of unusual programs for curing rural education problems. .30
bulk .20

1965: (Cont'd)

ENCOUNTER WITH THE FUTURE. A definitive report on the civil rights movement with special emphasis on its young militants. .30
bulk .20

FEDERAL ANTI-POVERTY PROGRAMS. A descriptive listing of federal programs for the rehabilitation of communities and their citizens. .05
bulk .02

EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN FARM PROGRAMS. Excerpts from the U. S. Civil Rights Commission appraisal of U. S. Department of Agriculture services. .05

1964:

THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, 1944-1964. How, why, and by whom the SRC was organized; statement of policy and aims; statement of views. .20
bulk .15

SERIES OF SPECIAL REPORTS telling of progress in race relations in four southern cities: CHARLOTTE, LOUISVILLE, MEMPHIS, BRUNSWICK. What happened, how, why, and the outlook for the future. .40
bulk .30

LAW ENFORCEMENT IN MISSISSIPPI. Special Report on Mississippi during the summer of 1964, responsibilities of Mississippi and federal authorities as they relate to law enforcement and white reaction to the COFO program. .40
bulk .30

THE PRICE WE PAY. Samples the costs -- chiefly money -- incurred by the South's resistance to equal opportunity. Produced in cooperation with Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. .75
bulk .50

WHAT HAPPENED IN THE SOUTH? An analysis of the Negro vote in the 1964 Presidential election. .05

1963:

DIRECT ACTION IN THE SOUTH. A report on the Negro revolt, beginning with Feb. 1, 1960 and continuing through summer 1963. .35
bulk .20

1963: (Cont'd)

PLANS FOR PROGRESS. A study of their interpretation and implementation by 24 large corporations with southern branch offices in Atlanta. .10
bulk .05

FEDERAL PROGRAMS TO PROMOTE EMPLOYMENT AND DEVELOPMENT IN RURAL COMMUNITIES by M. Hayes Mizell. Sponsored jointly by Penn Community Services and South Carolina Council on Human Relations. .10
bulk .05

SOUTHERN SCHOOLS: TOKEN DESEGREGATION AND BEYOND, by Prof. J. Kenneth Morland, Randolph-Macon Woman's College, 27 pp., June, 1963. Sponsored jointly by SRC and Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. .50
bulk .35

THE DESEGREGATION OF SOUTHERN SCHOOLS: A PSYCHIATRIC STUDY, by Robert Coles, M.D. Two-year research by child psychiatrist on effects of school desegregation, 25 pp., July, 1963. Sponsored jointly by SRC and ADL. .50
bulk .35

THE CIVIL RIGHTS CRISIS: A SYNOPSIS OF RECENT DEVELOPMENTS. A listing of racial protest and reaction in the South by state and city. I. covers period April-June, 1963; III. covers period July 24-August 28, 1963. These synopses are neither press releases nor detailed analyses, but very brief statements of action. .20
bulk .10

THE ECONOMIC STATUS OF NEGROES: IN THE NATION AND IN THE SOUTH, by Vivian W. Henderson, "Unless unforeseeable, 'revolutionary' changes take place in Negro manpower utilization and development, the Negro citizen will remain the 'forgotten man' in America's affluent society." 23 pp., Sept. 1963. .25
bulk .15

BUSINESS -- NEXT TARGET FOR INTEGRATION? by John Perry, reprinted from Harvard Business Review, March-April 1963. .20
bulk .15

A STUDY OF NEGRO FARMERS IN SOUTH CAROLINA. Brief description of federal agricultural programs for Negro farmers in the Deep South. .10
bulk .05

1963: (Cont'd)

MISSISSIPPI: THE CLOSED SOCIETY, by James W. Silver, University of Mississippi. Presidential Address before the Southern Historical Association, Asheville, N. C., November 7, 1963. .50
bulk .35

1962:

THE NEGRO AND EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES IN THE SOUTH: HOUSTON, report based on survey by Prof. Art Gallaher, November, 1961; ATLANTA, Prof. Carl Holman, research coordinator, May, 1962; CHATTANOOGA, Dr. Major J. Jones, research coordinator, February, 1962. .20
bulk .15

ALBANY, by Howard Zinn, Prof. History & Social Science. A first hand account of the "Albany Movement" for desegregation in that Georgia city. .25
bulk .15

THE UNEQUAL BADGE, by Elliott M. Rudwick, Assoc. Prof. of Sociology, Southern Illinois University. A 14-page survey of number of Negro policemen employed in the South and their status in 130 communities. .10
bulk .06

A HUNDRED YEARS LATER. Comments by four outstanding Southerners on the meaning of the Civil War Centennial. .20
bulk .15

SOUTHERN STUDENT NEWSPAPER OPINION OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MISSISSIPPI RIOTS. A round-up of editorials and columns reflecting on Oxford. .05
bulk .03

1961:

THE FEDERAL EXECUTIVE AND CIVIL RIGHTS, a 48-page report sent to President John F. Kennedy with an 18-point proposal on executive power in furthering civil rights. February 1961. .35
bulk .25

THE ANNEALING OF THE SOUTH, by Leslie W. Dunbar. Article reprinted from Autum 1961 Virginia Quarterly Review. SRC's former Executive Director examines the changing climate of southern thinking. .10
bulk .07

1961: (Cont'd)

THIS I BELIEVE, by Haywood M. Hill, M.D. Eloquent message a southern Presbyterian elder delivered to his church school class. Single copy free
bulk .02

THE FREEDOM RIDE, May, 1961. Background and reactions. .20

A VIRGINIA VIEW OF "RACE AND REASON," by Benjamin Muse. Refutation of Carleton Putnam's views on superior-inferior race. .05
bulk .03

WHAT THE SUPREME COURT SAID, a commentary on the school desegregation decree of 1954. .10
bulk .05

1960: (and later, as noted)

THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL REPORTS THE CHANGING SOUTH. A collection of reprints illustrative of SRC's program in public information. Single copy free

RACIAL CRISIS AND THE PRESS, by Walter Spearman and Sylvan Meyer. Racial news in the press. .25
bulk .20

MAP, showing percentage of non-white population in counties of southern states as of 1960. .25
bulk .20

IF THE SCHOOLS ARE CLOSED . . . A Critical Analysis of the Private School Plan, by Warren E. Gauerke and Donald Ross Green. 40 pp., 1959. .15
bulk .10

THE TRUTH ABOUT DESEGREGATION IN WASHINGTON'S SCHOOLS, reprints from The Washington Post in 1958 in reply to Davis Committee report. Single copy free

THE NEGRO AND THE BALLOT IN THE SOUTH, by Margaret Price, 1959. Statistics and specific local examples. .25
bulk .15

LEADERSHIP REPORTS

(All mimeographed unless otherwise noted)

Single copy free, bulk rates on request

L-16 ATLANTA AND WASHINGTON: RACIAL DIFFERENCES IN ACADEMIC ACHIEVEMENT, by Frank H. Stallings, Associate Professor of Education, University of Louisville, 1960.

L-23B DESEGREGATION IN HIGHER EDUCATION. Fact sheet, Feb. 1963.

L-23D DESEGREGATION IN HIGHER EDUCATION. Fact sheet, Dec. 1964.

L-25 NEW CENSUS LOOK AT CITIES AND RACE. Reprint from the Washington Post, 1961.

L-26 ADDRESS BY GENERAL LUCIUS D. CLAY. Remarks on the industrial climate of Georgia. 1961.

L-27 THE EASY OR THE HARD WAY? Aspects of the option taken in parts of Virginia and North Carolina not to desegregate schools. 1961.

L-28 ORGANIZATIONS SUPPORTING THE STUDENT PROTEST MOVEMENT. 1961.

L-29 AMERICAN ANTHROPOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION RESOLUTION ON RACE. Scientists reject theories of Negro racial inferiority. 1961.

L-30 A POSITIVE PLAN TO HELP SOLVE OUR RACIAL DILEMMA. Reprint from Jackson (Mississippi) State Times, November 1961; and BIRMINGHAM FACES A HARD DECISION, reprint from the Birmingham (Alabama) News, October 1961.

L-31 SLIPPING SEGREGATION: NEGROES WIN LOWERING OF MORE BARRIERS IN SOUTH. Reprint from Wall Street Journal, January 1961.

L-32 REFUTATION OF "RACE AND REASON," by Dr. William P. Sullivan, Asst. Professor of English, McNeese State College, Lake Charles, Louisiana. 1962.

L-33 A STATEMENT OF RECOMMENDED POLICE POLICY RESULTING FROM THE NEW YORK UNIVERSITY GRADUATE SCHOOL OF PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION CONFERENCE ON "The Challenge of Desegregation for American Police Executives." 1962.

L-34 DESEGREGATION IN SOUTHERN PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS. Report on Catholic dioceses in 11 states. May 1962.

L REPORTS (Cont'd)

L-34A DESEGREGATION IN SOUTHERN PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS. August 1963.

L-35 STATE COMMISSIONS ON HUMAN RELATIONS: Delaware, Kentucky, Maryland, West Virginia. 1962.

L-36 RICHMOND QUIETLY LEADS WAY IN RACE RELATIONS. Reprint from the Washington Post. 1962.

L-41 EXCERPTS FROM SPEECHES OF GOVERNOR BERT COMBS OF KENTUCKY AND SECRETARY OF COMMERCE LUTHER T. HODGES. Both speeches concerned national need for development of a deeper understanding of the meaning of practical human brotherhood. 1963.

L-44 CHARLOTTE HAS BUILT ITS INTEGRATION ROAD: A DIFFERENT WAY, by L. M. Wright, Jr., city editor of Charlotte Observer. The story of quiet, organized desegregation of public facilities without demonstrations. 1963.

L-45 PUBLIC EDUCATION IN MISSISSIPPI. Analysis of reports from Departments of Public Welfare and Education of Mississippi, noting gap in educational opportunities for whites and Negroes. 1963.

L-46 VOICE OF THE PEOPLE: 'AT THIS VERY LATE HOUR.' -- A letter co-authored by two citizens of Birmingham, James A. Head and Charles P. Zukoski, Jr., reprinted from the Birmingham News, Sept. 30, 1963.

L-47 THE QUESTION FROM JACKSONVILLE. Description of Jacksonville's racial outbreak of 1964.

REPRINTS, Single Copy Feee

New York Times, 9-27-59, "The Agony of the Southern Minister," by Ralph McGill.

Washington Post, 10-7-62, "The South's Pattern of Violence Has Changed," by George McMillan.

"Segregation v. the Space Age," by Marion Wright, 4-9-48.

Harper's, June, 1958, "The Easy Chair," by Harry S. Ashmore (Little Rock).

New York Times, 4-1-60, "A Southern View of the South," by Harold Fleming.

BOOK, paperback, THIS IS WHAT WE FOUND, by Ralph and Carl Creger (Little Rock). Negro history, useful to elementary and high school students. .25

NEW SOUTH, quarterly magazine published by the Southern Regional Council.

Yearly	$3.00
Monthly issues prior to 1966	.20
Quarterly issues	1.00

PUBLICATIONS SUBSCRIPTION SERVICE - beginning with all publications released since October 1965, other publications as released through December 1966 (does NOT include subscription to NEW SOUTH). Yearly $5.00

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

File Materials for "Pub lists"

publications

southern regional council / 5 forsyth st., n.w. / atlanta, ga.

BULK PRICES APPLY FOR 10 OR MORE COPIES

1966:

A CITY SLUM -- POOR PEOPLE AND PROBLEMS. A report on an attempt to build a community organization around local self-interest issues in a southern city. .30
bulk .20

NEIGHBORHOOD STABILIZATION: A PROGRAM. A look at what residents of so-called changing neighborhoods can do to revitalize their community while resisting the exploitation of unscrupulous real estate agents. .30
bulk .20

COOPERATIVES, CREDIT UNIONS AND POOR PEOPLE. An appraisal of the growing trend toward cooperatives and credit unions among impoverished Negro farmers in the rural South with emphasis on the realistic expectations of such ventures. .30
bulk .20

1965:

SEPTEMBER 1965 SCHOOL DESEGREGATION: OLD PROBLEMS UNDER A NEW LAW. A survey of southern school desegregation in the year after the enactment of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, including state-by-state statistics and problems faced under Freedom of Choice plans. .30
bulk .15

SOUTHERN JUSTICE: AN INDICTMENT. A documentary account of the South's system of dual justice. .30
bulk .15

RACIAL DISCRIMINATION IN THE SOUTHERN FEDERAL COURTS. A revealing report on the exclusion of Negroes from juries and employment in southern federal courts. .20
bulk .10

THE MIGRANT FARMER: A PSYCHIATRIC STUDY. An unusual look by Harvard University psychiatrist Dr. Robert Coles into the lives and problems of migrant farm families. .30
bulk .20

BLACK BELT SCHOOLS: BEYOND DESEGREGATION. A study by four Georgia educators with their sample suggestions of unusual programs for curing rural education problems. .30
bulk .20

1965: (Cont'd)

ENCOUNTER WITH THE FUTURE. A definitive report on the civil rights movement with special emphasis on its young militants. .30
bulk .20

FEDERAL ANTI-POVERTY PROGRAMS. A descriptive listing of federal programs for the rehabilitation of communities and their citizens. .05
bulk .02

EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN FARM PROGRAMS. Excerpts from the U. S. Civil Rights Commission appraisal of U. S. Department of Agriculture services. .05

1964:

THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, 1944-1964. How, why, and by whom the SRC was organized; statement of policy and aims; statement of views. .20
bulk .15

SERIES OF SPECIAL REPORTS telling of progress in race relations in four southern cities: CHARLOTTE, LOUISVILLE, MEMPHIS, BRUNSWICK. What happened, how, why, and the outlook for the future. .40
bulk .30

LAW ENFORCEMENT IN MISSISSIPPI. Special Report on Mississippi during the summer of 1964, responsibilities of Mississippi and federal authorities as they relate to law enforcement and white reaction to the COFO program. .40
bulk .30

THE PRICE WE PAY. Samples the costs -- chiefly money -- incurred by the South's resistance to equal opportunity. Produced in cooperation with Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. .75
bulk .50

WHAT HAPPENED IN THE SOUTH? An analysis of the Negro vote in the 1964 Presidential election. .05

1963:

DIRECT ACTION IN THE SOUTH. A report on the Negro revolt, beginning with Feb. 1, 1960 and continuing through summer 1963. .35
bulk .20

1963: (Cont'd)

PLANS FOR PROGRESS. A study of their interpretation and implementation by 24 large corporations with southern branch offices in Atlanta. .10
bulk .05

FEDERAL PROGRAMS TO PROMOTE EMPLOYMENT AND DEVELOPMENT IN RURAL COMMUNITIES by M. Hayes Mizell. Sponsored jointly by Penn Community Services and South Carolina Council on Human Relations. .10
bulk .05

SOUTHERN SCHOOLS: TOKEN DESEGREGATION AND BEYOND, by Prof. J. Kenneth Morland, Randolph-Macon Woman's College, 27 pp., June, 1963. Sponsored jointly by SRC and Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. .50
bulk .35

THE DESEGREGATION OF SOUTHERN SCHOOLS: A PSYCHIATRIC STUDY, by Robert Coles, M.D. Two-year research by child psychiatrist on effects of school desegregation, 25 pp., July, 1963. Sponsored jointly by SRC and ADL. .50
bulk .35

THE CIVIL RIGHTS CRISIS: A SYNOPSIS OF RECENT DEVELOPMENTS. A listing of racial protest and reaction in the South by state and city. I. covers period April-June, 1963; III. covers period July 24-August 28, 1963. These synopses are neither press releases nor detailed analyses, but very brief statements of action. .20
bulk .10

THE ECONOMIC STATUS OF NEGROES: IN THE NATION AND IN THE SOUTH, by Vivian W. Henderson, "Unless unforeseeable, 'revolutionary' changes take place in Negro manpower utilization and development, the Negro citizen will remain the 'forgotten man' in America's affluent society." 23 pp., Sept. 1963. .25
bulk .15

BUSINESS -- NEXT TARGET FOR INTEGRATION? by John Perry, reprinted from Harvard Business Review, March-April 1963. .20
bulk .15

A STUDY OF NEGRO FARMERS IN SOUTH CAROLINA. Brief description of federal agricultural programs for Negro farmers in the Deep South. .10
bulk .05

1963: (Cont'd)

MISSISSIPPI: THE CLOSED SOCIETY, by James W. Silver, University of Mississippi. Presidential Address before the Southern Historical Association, Asheville, N. C., November 7, 1963. .50
bulk .35

1962:

THE NEGRO AND EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES IN THE SOUTH: HOUSTON, report based on survey by Prof. Art Gallaher, November, 1961; ATLANTA, Prof. Carl Holman, research coordinator, May, 1962; CHATTANOOGA, Dr. Major J. Jones, research coordinator, February, 1962. .20
bulk .15

ALBANY, by Howard Zinn, Prof. History & Social Science. A first hand account of the "Albany Movement" for desegregation in that Georgia city. .25
bulk .15

THE UNEQUAL BADGE, by Elliott M. Rudwick, Assoc. Prof. of Sociology, Southern Illinois University. A 14-page survey of number of Negro policemen employed in the South and their status in 130 communities. .10
bulk .06

A HUNDRED YEARS LATER. Comments by four outstanding Southerners on the meaning of the Civil War Centennial. .20
bulk .15

SOUTHERN STUDENT NEWSPAPER OPINION OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MISSISSIPPI RIOTS. A round-up of editorials and columns reflecting on Oxford. .05
bulk .03

1961:

THE FEDERAL EXECUTIVE AND CIVIL RIGHTS, a 48-page report sent to President John F. Kennedy with an 18-point proposal on executive power in furthering civil rights. February 1961. .35
bulk .25

THE ANNEALING OF THE SOUTH, by Leslie W. Dunbar. Article reprinted from Autum 1961 Virginia Quarterly Review. SRC's former Executive Director examines the changing climate of southern thinking. .10
bulk .07

1961: (Cont'd)

THIS I BELIEVE, by Haywood M. Hill, M.D. Eloquent message a southern Presbyterian elder delivered to his church school class. Single copy free
bulk .02

THE FREEDOM RIDE, May, 1961. Background and reactions. .20

A VIRGINIA VIEW OF "RACE AND REASON," by Benjamin Muse. Refutation of Carleton Putnam's views on superior-inferior race. .05
bulk .03

WHAT THE SUPREME COURT SAID, a commentary on the school desegregation decree of 1954. .10
bulk .05

1960: (and later, as noted)

THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL REPORTS THE CHANGING SOUTH. A collection of reprints illustrative of SRC's program in public information. Single copy free

RACIAL CRISIS AND THE PRESS, by Walter Spearman and Sylvan Meyer. Racial news in the press. .25
bulk .20

MAP, showing percentage of non-white population in counties of southern states as of 1960. .25
bulk .20

IF THE SCHOOLS ARE CLOSED . . . A Critical Analysis of the Private School Plan, by Warren E. Gauerke and Donald Ross Green. 40 pp., 1959. .15
bulk .10

THE TRUTH ABOUT DESEGREGATION IN WASHINGTON'S SCHOOLS, reprints from The Washington Post in 1958 in reply to Davis Committee report. Single copy free

THE NEGRO AND THE BALLOT IN THE SOUTH, by Margaret Price, 1959. Statistics and specific local examples. .25
bulk .15

LEADERSHIP REPORTS

(All mimeographed unless otherwise noted)

Single copy free, bulk rates on request

L-16 ATLANTA AND WASHINGTON: RACIAL DIFFERENCES IN ACADEMIC ACHIEVEMENT, by Frank H. Stallings, Associate Professor of Education, University of Louisville, 1960.

L-23B DESEGREGATION IN HIGHER EDUCATION. Fact sheet, Feb. 1963.

L-23D DESEGREGATION IN HIGHER EDUCATION. Fact sheet, Dec. 1964.

L-25 NEW CENSUS LOOK AT CITIES AND RACE. Reprint from the Washington Post, 1961.

L-26 ADDRESS BY GENERAL LUCIUS D. CLAY. Remarks on the industrial climate of Georgia. 1961.

L-27 THE EASY OR THE HARD WAY? Aspects of the option taken in parts of Virginia and North Carolina not to desegregate schools. 1961.

L-28 ORGANIZATIONS SUPPORTING THE STUDENT PROTEST MOVEMENT. 1961.

L-29 AMERICAN ANTHROPOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION RESOLUTION ON RACE. Scientists reject theories of Negro racial inferiority. 1961.

L-30 A POSITIVE PLAN TO HELP SOLVE OUR RACIAL DILEMMA. Reprint from Jackson (Mississippi) State Times, November 1961; and BIRMINGHAM FACES A HARD DECISION, reprint from the Birmingham (Alabama) News, October 1961.

L-31 SLIPPING SEGREGATION: NEGROES WIN LOWERING OF MORE BARRIERS IN SOUTH. Reprint from Wall Street Journal, January 1961.

L-32 REFUTATION OF "RACE AND REASON," by Dr. William P. Sullivan, Asst. Professor of English, McNeese State College, Lake Charles, Louisiana. 1962.

L-33 A STATEMENT OF RECOMMENDED POLICE POLICY RESULTING FROM THE NEW YORK UNIVERSITY GRADUATE SCHOOL OF PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION CONFERENCE ON "The Challenge of Desegregation for American Police Executives." 1962.

L-34 DESEGREGATION IN SOUTHERN PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS. Report on Catholic dioceses in 11 states. May 1962.

L REPORTS (Cont'd)

L-34A DESEGREGATION IN SOUTHERN PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS. August 1963.

L-35 STATE COMMISSIONS ON HUMAN RELATIONS: Delaware, Kentucky, Maryland, West Virginia. 1962.

L-36 RICHMOND QUIETLY LEADS WAY IN RACE RELATIONS. Reprint from the Washington Post. 1962.

L-41 EXCERPTS FROM SPEECHES OF GOVERNOR BERT COMBS OF KENTUCKY AND SECRETARY OF COMMERCE LUTHER T. HODGES. Both speeches concerned national need for development of a deeper understanding of the meaning of practical human brotherhood. 1963.

L-44 CHARLOTTE HAS BUILT ITS INTEGRATION ROAD: A DIFFERENT WAY, by L. M. Wright, Jr., city editor of Charlotte Observer. The story of quiet, organized desegregation of public facilities without demonstrations. 1963.

L-45 PUBLIC EDUCATION IN MISSISSIPPI. Analysis of reports from Departments of Public Welfare and Education of Mississippi, noting gap in educational opportunities for whites and Negroes. 1963.

L-46 VOICE OF THE PEOPLE: 'AT THIS VERY LATE HOUR.' -- A letter co-authored by two citizens of Birmingham, James A. Head and Charles P. Zukoski, Jr., reprinted from the Birmingham News, Sept. 30, 1963.

L-47 THE QUESTION FROM JACKSONVILLE. Description of Jacksonville's racial outbreak of 1964.

REPRINTS, Single Copy Fee

New York Times, 9-27-59, "The Agony of the Southern Minister," by Ralph McGill.

Washington Post, 10-7-62, "The South's Pattern of Violence Has Changed," by George McMillan.

"Segregation v. the Space Age," by Marion Wright, 4-9-48.

Harper's, June, 1958, "The Easy Chair," by Harry S. Ashmore (Little Rock).

New York Times, 4-1-60, "A Southern View of the South," by Harold Fleming.

BOOK, paperback, THIS IS WHAT WE FOUND, by Ralph and Carl Creger (Little Rock). Negro history, useful to elementary and high school students. .25

NEW SOUTH, quarterly magazine published by the Southern Regional Council.
Yearly $3.00
Monthly issues prior to 1966 .20
Quarterly issues 1.00

PUBLICATIONS SUBSCRIPTION SERVICE - beginning with all publications released since October 1965, other publications as released through December 1966 (does NOT include subscription to NEW SOUTH). Yearly $5.00

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

File Materials
Files
Publications lists

publications

southern regional council / 5 forsyth st., n.w. / atlanta, ga.

PUBLICATIONS

of the

URBAN PLANNING PROJECT

	DATE	PRICE Single	PRICE Bulk
1. NEIGHBORHOOD STABILIZATION Guidelines for groups trying to build stable interracial neighborhoods.	1966	.30	.20
2. A HOME OF YOUR OWN What families should know when buying their first home.	1966	.60	.40
3. MR. MAYOR - SLUM GHETTOS IN YOUR CITY, Can We Solve Our Housing Dilemma? A guideline for city officials in facing the total problems of slums.	1967	.50	.40
4. NEIGHBORHOODS - WHERE HUMAN RIGHTS BEGIN Experiences and evaluation of three interracial neighborhoods.	1967	.50	.40
5. A GUIDE TO PROGRAMS FOR BETTER HOMES AND NEIGHBORHOODS A layman's guide to government and private housing programs.	1967	1.00	.75
6. ATLANTA HOUSING STUDY An analysis of Atlanta's housing patterns	In process

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

PUBLICATIONS

1967:

IN THEIR OWN WORDS. A student appraisal of what happened after school desegregation in Alabama. .75
bulk .60

MORE MONEY FOR YOU? Your Rights Under The Minimum Wage Law. .15
10-49 copies .10
50 copies or more .08

1966:

THE CONTINUING CRISIS. A report on race-related violence in the South, published jointly by SRC and the American Jewish Committee. .60
bulk .40

VOTER REGISTRATION IN THE SOUTH. County-by-county registration figures by race for seven southern states as of summer and late summer of 1966. .25
bulk .20

SCHOOL DESEGREGATION 1966: THE SLOW UNDOING. An examination of school desegregation in the twelfth year since the Supreme Court decision against racially separate schools. Includes a narrative account of the southern assault on the federal guidelines and a critique of the guidelines' potential. .40
bulk .30

PUBLIC ASSISTANCE IN THE SOUTH. Statistical analysis. .30
bulk .20

BULK PRICES APPLY FOR 10 OR MORE COPIES

1966:

A CITY SLUM -- POOR PEOPLE AND PROBLEMS. A report on an attempt to build a community organization around local self-interest issues in a southern city. .30
bulk .20

NEIGHBORHOOD STABILIZATION: A PROGRAM. A look at what residents of so-called changing neighborhoods can do to revitalize their community while resisting the exploitation of unscrupulous real estate agents. .30
bulk .20

COOPERATIVES, CREDIT UNIONS AND POOR PEOPLE. An appraisal of the growing trend toward cooperatives and credit unions among impoverished Negro farmers in the rural South with emphasis on the realistic expectations of such ventures. .30
bulk .20

1965:

SEPTEMBER 1965 SCHOOL DESEGREGATION: OLD PROBLEMS UNDER A NEW LAW. A survey of southern school desegregation in the year after the enactment of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, including state-by-state statistics and problems faced under Freedom of Choice plans. .30
bulk .15

SOUTHERN JUSTICE: AN INDICTMENT. A documentary account of the South's system of dual justice. .30
bulk .15

RACIAL DISCRIMINATION IN THE SOUTHERN FEDERAL COURTS. A revealing report on the exclusion of Negroes from juries and employment in southern federal courts. .20
bulk .10

THE MIGRANT FARMER: A PSYCHIATRIC STUDY. An unusual look by Harvard University psychiatrist Dr. Robert Coles into the lives and problems of migrant farm families. .30
bulk .20

BLACK BELT SCHOOLS: BEYOND DESEGREGATION. A study by four Georgia educators with their sample suggestions of unusual programs for curing rural education problems. .30
bulk .20

1965: (Cont'd)

ENCOUNTER WITH THE FUTURE. A definitive report on the civil rights movement with special emphasis on its young militants. .30
bulk .20

FEDERAL ANTI-POVERTY PROGRAMS. A descriptive listing of federal programs for the rehabilitation of communities and their citizens. .05
bulk .02

EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN FARM PROGRAMS. Excerpts from the U. S. Civil Rights Commission appraisal of U. S. Department of Agriculture services. .05

1964:

THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, 1944-1964. How, why, and by whom the SRC was organized; statement of policy and aims; statement of views. .20
bulk .15

SERIES OF SPECIAL REPORTS telling of progress in race relations in four southern cities: CHARLOTTE, LOUISVILLE, MEMPHIS, BRUNSWICK. What happened, how, why, and the outlook for the future. .40
bulk .30

LAW ENFORCEMENT IN MISSISSIPPI. Special Report on Mississippi during the summer of 1964, responsibilities of Mississippi and federal authorities as they relate to law enforcement and white reaction to the COFO program. .40
bulk .30

THE PRICE WE PAY. Samples the costs -- chiefly money -- incurred by the South's resistance to equal opportunity. Produced in cooperation with Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. .75
bulk .50

WHAT HAPPENED IN THE SOUTH? An analysis of the Negro vote in the 1964 Presidential election. .05

1963:

DIRECT ACTION IN THE SOUTH. A report on the Negro revolt, beginning with Feb. 1, 1960 and continuing through summer 1963. .35
bulk .20

1963: (Cont'd)

PLANS FOR PROGRESS. A study of their interpretation and implementation by 24 large corporations with southern branch offices in Atlanta. .10
bulk .05

FEDERAL PROGRAMS TO PROMOTE EMPLOYMENT AND DEVELOPMENT IN RURAL COMMUNITIES by M. Hayes Mizell. Sponsored jointly by Penn Community Services and South Carolina Council on Human Relations. .10
bulk .05

SOUTHERN SCHOOLS: TOKEN DESEGREGATION AND BEYOND, by Prof. J. Kenneth Morland, Randolph-Macon Woman's College, 27 pp., June, 1963. Sponsored jointly by SRC and Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. .50
bulk .35

THE DESEGREGATION OF SOUTHERN SCHOOLS: A PSYCHIATRIC STUDY, by Robert Coles, M.D. Two-year research by child psychiatrist on effects of school desegregation, 25 pp., July, 1963. Sponsored jointly by SRC and ADL. .50
bulk .35

THE CIVIL RIGHTS CRISIS: A SYNOPSIS OF RECENT DEVELOPMENTS. A listing of racial protest and reaction in the South by state and city. I. covers period April-June, 1963; III. covers period July 24-August 28, 1963. These synopses are neither press releases nor detailed analyses, but very brief statements of action. .20
bulk .10

THE ECONOMIC STATUS OF NEGROES: IN THE NATION AND IN THE SOUTH, by Vivian W. Henderson, "Unless unforeseeable, 'revolutionary' changes take place in Negro manpower utilization and development, the Negro citizen will remain the 'forgotten man' in America's affluent society." 23 pp., Sept. 1963. .25
bulk .15

BUSINESS -- NEXT TARGET FOR INTEGRATION? by John Perry, reprinted from Harvard Business Review, March-April 1963. .20
bulk .15

A STUDY OF NEGRO FARMERS IN SOUTH CAROLINA. Brief description of federal agricultural programs for Negro farmers in the Deep South. .10
bulk .05

1963: (Cont'd)

MISSISSIPPI: THE CLOSED SOCIETY, by James W. Silver, University of Mississippi. Presidential Address before the Southern Historical Association, Asheville, N. C., November 7, 1963. .50
bulk .35

1962:

✓ THE NEGRO AND EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES IN THE SOUTH: HOUSTON, report based on survey by Prof. Art Gallaher, November, 1961; ATLANTA, Prof. Carl Holman, research coordinator, May, 1962; CHATTANOOGA, Dr. Major J. Jones, research coordinator, February, 1962. .20
bulk .15

ALBANY, by Howard Zinn, Prof. History & Social Science. A first hand account of the "Albany Movement" for desegregation in that Georgia city. .25
bulk .15

✓ THE UNEQUAL BADGE, by Elliott M. Rudwick, Assoc. Prof. of Sociology, Southern Illinois University. A 14-page survey of number of Negro policemen employed in the South and their status in 130 communities. .10
bulk .06

A HUNDRED YEARS LATER. Comments by four outstanding Southerners on the meaning of the Civil War Centennial. .20
bulk .15

SOUTHERN STUDENT NEWSPAPER OPINION OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MISSISSIPPI RIOTS. A round-up of editorials and columns reflecting on Oxford. .05
bulk .03

1961:

✓ THE FEDERAL EXECUTIVE AND CIVIL RIGHTS, a 48-page report sent to President John F. Kennedy with an 18-point proposal on executive power in furthering civil rights. February 1961. .35
bulk .25

✓ THE ANNEALING OF THE SOUTH, by Leslie W. Dunbar. Article reprinted from Autum 1961 Virginia Quarterly Review. SRC's former Executive Director examines the changing climate of southern thinking. .10
bulk .07

1961: (Cont'd)

THIS I BELIEVE, by Haywood M. Hill, M.D. Eloquent message a southern Presbyterian elder delivered to his church school class. Single copy free
bulk .02

THE FREEDOM RIDE, May, 1961. Background and reactions. .20

A VIRGINIA VIEW OF "RACE AND REASON," by Benjamin Muse. Refutation of Carleton Putnam's views on superior-inferior race. .05
bulk .03

WHAT THE SUPREME COURT SAID, a commentary on the school desegregation decree of 1954. .10
bulk .05

1960: (and later, as noted)

THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL REPORTS THE CHANGING SOUTH. A collection of reprints illustrative of SRC's program in public information. Single copy free

RACIAL CRISIS AND THE PRESS, by Walter Spearman and Sylvan Meyer. Racial news in the press. .25
bulk .20

MAP, showing percentage of non-white population in counties of southern states as of 1960. .25
bulk .20

IF THE SCHOOLS ARE CLOSED . . . A Critical Analysis of the Private School Plan, by Warren E. Gauerke and Donald Ross Green. 40 pp., 1959. .15
bulk .10

THE TRUTH ABOUT DESEGREGATION IN WASHINGTON'S SCHOOLS, reprints from The Washington Post in 1958 in reply to Davis Committee report. Single copy free

THE NEGRO AND THE BALLOT IN THE SOUTH, by Margaret Price, 1959. Statistics and specific local examples. .25
bulk .15

LEADERSHIP REPORTS

(All mimeographed unless otherwise noted)

Single copy free, bulk rates on request

L-16 ATLANTA AND WASHINGTON: RACIAL DIFFERENCES IN ACADEMIC ACHIEVEMENT, by Frank H. Stallings, Associate Professor of Education, University of Louisville, 1960.

L-23B DESEGREGATION IN HIGHER EDUCATION. Fact sheet, Feb. 1963.

L-23D DESEGREGATION IN HIGHER EDUCATION. Fact sheet, Dec. 1964.

L-25 NEW CENSUS LOOK AT CITIES AND RACE. Reprint from the Washington Post, 1961.

L-26 ADDRESS BY GENERAL LUCIUS D. CLAY. Remarks on the industrial climate of Georgia. 1961.

L-27 THE EASY OR THE HARD WAY? Aspects of the option taken in parts of Virginia and North Carolina not to desegregate schools. 1961.

L-28 ORGANIZATIONS SUPPORTING THE STUDENT PROTEST MOVEMENT. 1961.

L-29 AMERICAN ANTHROPOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION RESOLUTION ON RACE. Scientists reject theories of Negro racial inferiority. 1961.

L-30 A POSITIVE PLAN TO HELP SOLVE OUR RACIAL DILEMMA. Reprint from Jackson (Mississippi) State Times, November 1961; and BIRMINGHAM FACES A HARD DECISION, reprint from the Birmingham (Alabama) News, October 1961.

L-31 SLIPPING SEGREGATION: NEGROES WIN LOWERING OF MORE BARRIERS IN SOUTH. Reprint from Wall Street Journal, January 1961.

L-32 REFUTATION OF "RACE AND REASON," by Dr. William P. Sullivan, Asst. Professor of English, McNeese State College, Lake Charles, Louisiana. 1962.

L-33 A STATEMENT OF RECOMMENDED POLICE POLICY RESULTING FROM THE NEW YORK UNIVERSITY GRADUATE SCHOOL OF PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION CONFERENCE ON "The Challenge of Desegregation for American Police Executives." 1962.

L-34 DESEGREGATION IN SOUTHERN PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS. Report on Catholic dioceses in 11 states. May 1962.

L REPORTS (Cont'd)

L-34A DESEGREGATION IN SOUTHERN PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS. August 1963.

L-35 STATE COMMISSIONS ON HUMAN RELATIONS: Delaware, Kentucky, Maryland, West Virginia. 1962.

L-36 RICHMOND QUIETLY LEADS WAY IN RACE RELATIONS. Reprint from the Washington Post. 1962.

L-41 EXCERPTS FROM SPEECHES OF GOVERNOR BERT COMBS OF KENTUCKY AND SECRETARY OF COMMERCE LUTHER T. HODGES. Both speeches concerned national need for development of a deeper understanding of the meaning of practical human brotherhood. 1963.

L-44 CHARLOTTE HAS BUILT ITS INTEGRATION ROAD: A DIFFERENT WAY, by L. M. Wright, Jr., city editor of Charlotte Observer. The story of quiet, organized desegregation of public facilities without demonstrations. 1963.

L-45 PUBLIC EDUCATION IN MISSISSIPPI. Analysis of reports from Departments of Public Welfare and Education of Mississippi, noting gap in educational opportunities for whites and Negroes. 1963.

L-46 VOICE OF THE PEOPLE: 'AT THIS VERY LATE HOUR.' -- A letter co-authored by two citizens of Birmingham, James A. Head and Charles P. Zukoski, Jr., reprinted from the Birmingham News, Sept. 30, 1963.

L-47 THE QUESTION FROM JACKSONVILLE. Description of Jacksonville's racial outbreak of 1964.

REPRINTS, Single Copy Feee

New York Times, 9-27-59, "The Agony of the Southern Minister," by Ralph McGill.

Washington Post, 10-7-62, "The South's Pattern of Violence Has Changed," by George McMillan.

"Segregation v. the Space Age," by Marion Wright, 4-9-48.

Harper's, June, 1958, "The Easy Chair," by Harry S. Ashmore (Little Rock).

New York Times, 4-1-60, "A Southern View of the South," by Harold Fleming.

BOOK, paperback, THIS IS WHAT WE FOUND, by Ralph and Carl Creger (Little Rock). Negro history, useful to elementary and high school students. .25

NEW SOUTH, quarterly magazine published by the Southern Regional Council.
Yearly $3.00
Monthly issues prior to 1966 .20
Quarterly issues 1.00

PUBLICATIONS SUBSCRIPTION SERVICE - beginning with all publications released since October 1965, other publications as released through December 1966 (does NOT include subscription to NEW SOUTH). Yearly $5.00

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

PUBLICATIONS

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth St., N. W.
Atlanta, Ga. 30303

Spring 1968

(Bulk prices apply for 10 or more copies.)

1968

THE DELTA PRISONS: PUNISHMENT FOR PROFIT. A special report on the prison systems of Arkansas, Mississippi, and Louisiana. .30
bulk .20

EVENTS AT ORANGEBURG. A report based on study and interviews in Orangeburg, South Carolina, in the aftermath of tragedy. By Pat Watters and Weldon Rougeau. .30
bulk .20

BLACK YOUTH IN A SOUTHERN METROPOLIS. A study of socio-economic characteristics, attitudes, and values of Negro high school students in Atlanta. January 1968. .30
bulk .40

1967

THE PRESENT DILEMMA OF THE NEGRO by Kenneth B. Clark. An address before the 1967 Annual Meeting of the Southern Regional Council. NC

PUBLIC ASSISTANCE: TO WHAT END? A study of the southern state policies and practices which regulate public assistance in 97 of the nation's 100 poorest counties. November 1967. .25
bulk .10

ON THE NATIONAL CRISIS: A statement by the Southern Regional Council. August 1967. NC

HUNGRY CHILDREN. A report by a team of six eminent physicians on the health and living conditions of Negro children in rural Mississippi. .25
bulk .20

PUBLICATIONS LIST ADDENDUM, Spring 1968
Southern Regional Council, Inc., 5 Forsyth Street, N. W., Atlanta, Georgia 30303
(Bulk prices apply for 10 or more copies.)

1968

POVERTY IN THE RURAL SOUTH by Paul Good, photographs by Al Clayton. Special single-subject issue of NEW SOUTH, Winter 1968. 1.00

Summary of the REPORT OF THE NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMISSION ON CIVIL DISORDERS. Reprinted by 23 organizations from the Bantam Books edition of the full report. .15
bulk .10

IN MEMPHIS: MORE THAN A GARBAGE STRIKE. An analysis of the Memphis sanitation workers' strike by J. Edwin Stanfield. Two supplements. .60
bulk .50

1967 (Cont'd.)

ATLANTA HOUSING STUDY (includes map, below). .50
bulk .40

ATLANTA RESIDENTIAL PATTERNS (Map). .25

HOW TO CONDUCT A REGISTRATION CAMPAIGN. .25
bulk .20

KNOW YOUR GEORGIA GOVERNMENT. .25
bulk .20

KNOW YOUR RIGHTS. Illustrated statement of citizens' and law enforcement officers' rights in cases of suspected law violation. Published by the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia. .25
bulk .20

IN THEIR OWN WORDS. A student appraisal of what happened after school desegregation in Alabama. .75
(See Reprints, last section.) bulk .60

MORE MONEY FOR YOU? Your Rights Under the Minimum Wage Law. .15
bulk .08

MR. MAYOR - SLUM GHETTOS IN YOUR TOWN. A guideline for city officials in facing the total problems of slums. .50
bulk .40

NEIGHBORHOODS - WHERE HUMAN RELATIONS BEGIN. Experiences and evaluation of three interracial neighborhoods. .50
bulk .40

1966

NEIGHBORHOOD STABILIZATION. Guidelines for groups trying to build stable interracial neighborhoods. .30
bulk .20

THE CONTINUING CRISIS. A report on race-related violence in the South, published jointly by SRC and the American Jewish Committee. .60
bulk .40

SCHOOL DESEGREGATION 1966: THE SLOW UNDOING. An examination of school desegregation in the twelfth year since the Supreme Court decision against racially separate schools. Includes a narrative account of the southern assault on the federal guidelines and a critique of the guidelines' potential. .40
bulk .30

1966 (Cont'd.)

PUBLIC ASSISTANCE IN THE SOUTH. Statistical analysis. .30
bulk .20

A CITY SLUM -- POOR PEOPLE AND PROBLEMS. A report on an attempt to build a community organization around local self-interest issues in a southern city. .30
bulk .20

WHAT HAPPENED IN THE SOUTH, 1966. An analysis of the effect of the Negro vote in the 1966 general elections. .05

1965

SEPTEMBER 1965 SCHOOL DESEGREGATION: OLD PROBLEMS UNDER A NEW LAW. A survey of southern school desegregation in the year after the enactment of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, including state-by-state statistics and problems faced under Freedom of Choice Plans. .30
bulk .15

RACIAL DISCRIMINATION IN THE SOUTHERN FEDERAL COURTS. A revealing report on the exclusion of Negroes from juries and employment in southern federal courts. .20
bulk .10

THE MIGRANT FARMER: A PSYCHIATRIC STUDY. An unusual look by Harvard University psychiatrist Dr. Robert Coles into the lives and problems of migrant farm families. .30
bulk .20

BLACK BELT SCHOOLS: BEYOND DESEGREGATION. A study by four Georgia educators with their sample suggestions of unusual programs for curing rural education problems. .30
bulk .20

ENCOUNTER WITH THE FUTURE. A definitive report on the civil rights movement with special emphasis on its young militants. .20
bulk .15

EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN FARM PROGRAMS. Excerpts from the U. S. Civil Rights Commission appraisal of U. S. Department of Agriculture services. .05

1964

THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, 1944-1964. How, why and by whom the SRC was organized; statement of policy and aims; statement of views. .20
bulk .15

SERIES OF SPECIAL REPORTS telling of progress in race relations in four southern cities: CHARLOTTE, LOUISVILLE, MEMPHIS, BRUNSWICK. What happened, how, why, and the outlook for the future. each .40 set 1.50
bulk .30

THE PRICE WE PAY. Samples the costs -- chiefly money -- incurred by the South's resistance to equal opportunity. Produced in cooperation with Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. .75
bulk .50

WHAT HAPPENED IN THE SOUTH? An analysis of the Negro vote in the 1964 Presidential election. .05

1963

PLANS FOR PROGRESS. A study of their interpretation and implementation by 24 large corporations with branch offices in Atlanta. .10
bulk .05

SOUTHERN SCHOOLS: TOKEN DESEGREGATION AND BEYOND, by J. Kenneth Morland. Sponsored jointly by SRC and Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. .50
bulk .35

THE ECONOMIC STATUS OF NEGROES: IN THE NATION AND IN THE SOUTH, by Vivian W. Henderson. "Unless unforseeable, 'revolutionary' changes take place in Negro manpower utilization and development, the Negro citizen will remain the 'forgotten man' in America's affluent society." .25
bulk .15

A STUDY OF NEGRO FARMERS IN SOUTH CAROLINA. Brief description of federal agricultural programs for Negro farmers in the Deep South. .10
bulk .05

MISSISSIPPI: THE CLOSED SOCIETY, by James W. Silver. Presidential Address before the Southern Historical Association, Asheville, N. C., November 7, 1963. .50
bulk .35

1962

THE NEGRO AND EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES IN THE SOUTH: HOUSTON, report based on survey by Prof. Art Gallagher, November, 1961; ATLANTA, Prof. Carl Holman, research coordinator, May, 1962; CHATTANOOGA, Dr. Major J. Jones, research coordinator, February, 1962. each .20 set .50
bulk each .15

ALBANY. A first hand account of the "Albany Movement" for desegregation in that Georgia city. .25
bulk .15

THE UNEQUAL BADGE, Elliott M. Rudwick. A 14-page survey of number of Negro policemen employed in the South and their status in 130 communities. .10
bulk .06

A HUNDRED YEARS LATER. Comments by four outstanding Southerners on the meaning of the Civil War Centennial. .20
bulk .15

SOUTHERN STUDENT NEWSPAPER OPINION OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MISSISSIPPI RIOTS. A round-up of editorials and columns reflecting on Oxford. .05
bulk .03

1961

THE FEDERAL EXECUTIVE AND CIVIL RIGHTS, a 48-page report sent to President John F. Kennedy with an 18-point proposal on executive power in furthering civil rights. February 1961. .35
bulk .25

THIS I BELIEVE, by Haywood M. Hill, M.D. Eloquent message a southern Presbyterian elder delivered to his church school class. Single copy free
bulk .02

1960 (and earlier)

THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL REPORTS THE CHANGING SOUTH. A collection of reprints illustrative of SRC's program in public information. Single copy free

RACIAL CRISIS AND THE PRESS, Walter Spearman and Sylvan Meyer. Racial news in the press. .25
bulk .20

WHAT THE SUPREME COURT SAID, a commentary on the school desegregation decree of 1954. .10
bulk .05

1960 (Cont'd.)

MAP, showing percentage of non-white population in counties of southern states as of 1960. .25
bulk .20

IF THE SCHOOLS ARE CLOSED . . . A Critical Analysis of the Private School Plan, Warren E. Gauerke and Donald Ross Green. 1959. .15
bulk .10

LEADERSHIP REPORTS

(All mimeographed unless otherwise noted; single copy free.)

L-16 ATLANTA AND WASHINGTON: RACIAL DIFFERENCES IN ACADEMIC ACHIEVEMENT, Frank H. Stallings, Associate Professor of Education, University of Louisville, 1960.

L-23B DESEGREGATION IN HIGHER EDUCATION. Fact Sheet, Feb. 1963.

L-23D DESEGREGATION IN HIGHER EDUCATION. Fact Sheet, Dec. 1964.

L-25 NEW CENSUS LOOK AT CITIES AND RACE. Reprint from The Washington Post, 1961.

L-26 ADDRESS BY GENERAL LUCIUS D. CLAY. Remarks on the industrial climate of Georgia. 1961.

L-27 THE HARD OR THE EASY WAY? Aspects of the option taken in parts of Virginia and North Carolina not to desegregate schools. 1961.

L-28 ORGANIZATIONS SUPPORTING THE STUDENT PROTEST MOVEMENT. 1961.

L-29 AMERICAN ANTHROPOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION RESOLUTION ON RACE. Scientists reject theories of Negro racial inferiority. 1961.

L-30 A POSITIVE PLAN TO HELP SOLVE OUR RACIAL DILEMMA. Reprint from Jackson (Mississippi) State Times, November 1961; and BIRMINGHAM FACES A HARD DECISION, reprint from the Birmingham (Alabama) News, October 1961.

L-31 SLIPPING SEGREGATION: NEGROES WIN LOWERING OF MORE BARRIERS IN SOUTH. Reprint from Wall Street Journal, January 1961.

LEADERSHIP REPORTS (Cont'd.)

L-32 REFUTATION OF "RACE AND REASON," Dr. William P. Sullivan, Asst. Professor of English, McNeese State College, Lake Charles, Louisiana. 1962.

L-33 A STATEMENT OF RECOMMENDED POLICE POLICY RESULTING FROM THE NEW YORK UNIVERSITY GRADUATE SCHOOL OF PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION CONFERENCE on "The Challenge of Desegregation for American Police Executives." 1962.

L-34 DESEGREGATION IN SOUTHERN PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS. Report on Catholic dioceses in 11 states. May 1962.

L-34A DESEGREGATION IN SOUTHERN PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS. August 1963.

L-35 STATE COMMISSIONS ON HUMAN RELATIONS: Delaware, Kentucky, Maryland, West Virginia. 1962.

L-36 RICHMOND QUIETLY LEADS WAY IN RACE RELATIONS. Reprint from The Washington Post. 1962.

L-41 EXCERPTS FROM SPEECHES OF GOVERNOR BERT COMBS OF KENTUCKY AND SECRETARY OF COMMERCE LUTHER T. HODGES. Both speeches concern national need for development of a deeper understanding of the meaning of practical human brotherhood. 1963.

L-44 CHARLOTTE HAS BUILT ITS INTEGRATION ROAD: A DIFFERENT WAY, L. M. Wright, Jr., city editor of Charlotte Observer. The story of quiet, organized desegregation of public facilities without demonstrations. 1963.

L-46 VOICE OF THE PEOPLE: 'AT THIS VERY LATE HOUR.' -- A letter co-authored by two citizens of Birmingham, James A. Head and Charles P. Zukoski, Jr., reprinted from The Birmingham News, Sept. 30, 1963.

L-47 THE QUESTION FROM JACKSONVILLE. Description of Jacksonville racial outbreak of 1964.

REPRINTS

(Single copy free unless otherwise noted)

New South, Summer 1967. "Sorrow Song in Black and White," Vera Rony. A sensitive account of the agricultural labor movement in the South in the 1930's.

bulk .20

Reprints (Cont'd.)

New South, Winter 1967. "What Happened after You Desegregated the White School," Mark Chesler. Excerpt from IN THEIR OWN WORDS, 1967.
bulk .20

Harvard Business Review, March-April 1963. "Business -- Next Target for Integration? John Perry. .20
bulk .15

The Washington Post, 10-7-62. "The South's Pattern of Violence Has Changed," George McMillan.

Virginia Quarterly Review, Autumn 1961. "The Annealing of the South," Leslie W. Dunbar. .10
bulk .07

New South, December 1961. "A Virginia View of 'Race and Reason,'" Benjamin Muse. Refutation of Carleton Putnam's views on superior-inferior race. .05
bulk .03

The New York Times, 4-1-60. "A Southern View of the South," Harold Fleming.

The New York Times Magazine, 9-27-59. "The Agony of the Southern Minister," Ralph McGill.

The Washington Post, 1958. "The Truth About Desegregation in Washington's Schools," reprints in reply to Davis Committee report.

Harper's, June 1958. "The Easy Chair," Harry S. Ashmore (Little Rock).

Speech delivered April 1958. "Segregation versus the Space Age," Marion Wright.

.....

NEW SOUTH, quarterly magazine published by the Southern Regional Council.

Yearly..... $ 3.00
Monthly issues prior to 1966..... .20
Quarterly issues..... 1.00

PUBLICATIONS SUBSCRIPTION SERVICE - All publications released for a one-year period. (Does NOT include subscription to NEW SOUTH.) Yearly..... $ 5.00

PUBLICATIONS

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

5 FORSYTH ST., N.W., ATLANTA, GA. 30303

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth St., N. W.
Atlanta, Ga. 30303

PUBLICATIONS LIST

Spring 1969

PUBLICATIONS SUBSCRIPTION SERVICE - All publications released for a one-year period. (Does NOT include subscription to NEW SOUTH.) Yearly.....$5.00

NEW SOUTH, quarterly magazine published by the Southern Regional Council.

Yearly.....$3.00
Quarterly issues.....$1.00

(Prior to 1966, NEW SOUTH was published eleven times yearly and all volumes since its inception through 1967 (Vol. 1-22, 1946-1967) are available on microfilm for $33. An order may be placed with Serials Publications, University of Michigan, 300 N. Zeeb Road, Ann Arbor, Michigan, 48106. Single available issues prior to 1966 may be ordered from SRC at 20¢ each.)

(Bulk prices apply for 10 or more copies.)

1969

COOPERATIVES AND POOR PEOPLE IN THE SOUTH. An evaluation of nine coops operating in the South, by Al Ulmer. .30
bulk .20

RACE MAKES THE DIFFERENCE. An analysis of sentence disparity among black and white offenders in Southern prisons. .30
bulk .20

CONFERENCE PROCEEDINGS, SOUTHWIDE CONFERENCE OF BLACK ELECTED OFFICIALS. Includes major address at first such regional conference, December 1968. .75
bulk .60

BLACK ELECTED OFFICIALS IN THE SOUTHERN STATES. Roster of black elected officials after Fall 1968 general elections. .25
bulk .20

1968

RADICALISM: SOUTHERN STYLE: A Commentary on Regional Extremism of the Right. by Reese Cleghorn. Published jointly by SRC and The American Jewish Committee. .50
bulk .40

VOTER REGISTRATION IN THE SOUTH, Summer 1968. A breakdown by county of white-Negro registration in the eleven southern states. .25
bulk .20

KNOW YOUR NORTH CAROLINA GOVERNMENT. Joint publication of the N. C. Voter Education Project and the Voter Education Project of SRC. .25
bulk .20

LAWLESSNESS AND DISORDER: Fourteen Years of Failure in Southern School Desegregation. .40
bulk .30

THE DELTA PRISONS: PUNISHMENT FOR PROFIT. A special report on the prison systems of Arkansas, Mississippi, and Louisiana. .30
bulk .20

EVENTS AT ORANGEBURG. A report based on study and interviews in Orangeburg, South Carolina, in the aftermath of tragedy. By Pat Watters and Weldon Rougeau. .30
bulk .20

BLACK YOUTH IN A SOUTHERN METROPOLIS. A study of socio-economic characteristics, attitudes, and values of Negro high school students in Atlanta. January 1968. .50
bulk .40

1967

THE PRESENT DILEMMA OF THE NEGRO by Kenneth B. Clark. An address before the 1967 Annual Meeting of the Southern Regional Council. NC

PUBLIC ASSISTANCE: TO WHAT END? A study of the southern state policies and practices which regulate public assistance in 97 of the nation's 100 poorest counties. November 1967. .30
bulk .20

ON THE NATIONAL CRISIS: A statement by the Southern Regional Council. August 1967. NC

HUNGRY CHILDREN. A report by a team of six eminent physicians on the health and living conditions of Negro children in rural Mississippi. .30
bulk .20

1967 (Cont'd.)

ATLANTA HOUSING STUDY (includes map, below). .50
bulk .40

ATLANTA RESIDENTIAL PATTERNS (map). .25

HOW TO CONDUCT A REGISTRATION CAMPAIGN. .25
bulk .20

KNOW YOUR GEORGIA GOVERNMENT. .25
bulk .20

KNOW YOUR RIGHTS. Illustrated statement of citizens' and law enforcement officers' rights in cases of suspected law violation. Published by the American Civil Liberties Union of Georgia. .25
bulk .20

MORE MONEY FOR YOU? Your Rights Under the Minimum Wage Law. .15
bulk .08

MR. MAYOR - SLUM GHETTOS IN YOUR TOWN. A guideline for city officials in facing the total problems of slums. .50
bulk .40

NEIGHBORHOODS - WHERE HUMAN RELATIONS BEGIN. Experiences and evaluation of three interracial neighborhoods. .50
bulk .40

1966

NEIGHBORHOOD STABILIZATION. Guidelines for groups trying to build stable interracial neighborhoods. .30
bulk .20

THE CONTINUING CRISIS. A report on race-related violence in the South, published jointly by SRC and the American Jewish Committee. .60
bulk .40

SCHOOL DESEGREGATION 1966: THE SLOW UNDOING. An examination of school desegregation in the twelfth year since the Supreme Court decision against racially separate schools. Includes a narrative account of the southern assault on the federal guidelines and a critique of the guidelines' potential. .40
bulk .30

1966 (Cont'd.)

PUBLIC ASSISTANCE IN THE SOUTH. Statistical analysis. .30
bulk .20

A CITY SLUM -- POOR PEOPLE AND PROBLEMS. A report on an attempt to build a community organization around local self-interest issues in a southern city. .30
bulk .20

WHAT HAPPENED IN THE SOUTH, 1966. An analysis of the effect of the Negro vote in the 1966 general elections. .05

1965

SEPTEMBER 1965 SCHOOL DESEGREGATION: OLD PROBLEMS UNDER A NEW LAW. A survey of southern school desegregation in the year after the enactment of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, including state-by-state statistics and problems faced under Freedom of Choice Plans. .30
bulk .15

RACIAL DISCRIMINATION IN THE SOUTHERN FEDERAL COURTS. A revealing report on the exclusion of Negroes from juries and employment in southern federal courts. .20
bulk .10

THE MIGRANT FARMER: A PSYCHIATRIC STUDY. An unusual look by Harvard University psychiatrist Dr. Robert Coles into the lives and problems of migrant farm families. .30
bulk .20

BLACK BELT SCHOOLS: BEYOND DESEGREGATION. A study by four Georgia educators with their sample suggestions of unusual programs for curing rural education problems. .30
bulk .20

1964

THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, 1944-1964. How, why and by whom the SRC was organized; statement of policy and aims; statement of views. .20
bulk .15

THE PRICE WE PAY. Samples the costs -- chiefly money -- incurred by the South's resistance to equal opportunity. Produced in cooperation with Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. .75
bulk .50

1964 (Cont'd.)

WHAT HAPPENED IN THE SOUTH? An analysis of the Negro vote in the 1964 Presidential election. .05

1963

SOUTHERN SCHOOLS: TOKEN DESEGREGATION AND BEYOND, by J. Kenneth Morland. Sponsored jointly by SRC and Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. .50
bulk .35

THE ECONOMIC STATUS OF NEGROES: IN THE NATION AND IN THE SOUTH, by Vivian W. Henderson. "Unless unforseeable, 'revolutionary' changes take place in Negro manpower utilization and development, the Negro citizen will remain the 'forgotten man' in America's affluent society." .25
bulk .15

A STUDY OF NEGRO FARMERS IN SOUTH CAROLINA. Brief description of federal agricultural programs for Negro farmers in the Deep South. .10
bulk .05

1962

THE NEGRO AND EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES IN THE SOUTH: HOUSTON, report based on survey by Prof. Art Gallagher, November, 1961; ATLANTA, Prof. Carl Holman, research coordinator, May, 1962; CHATTANOOGA, Dr. Major J. Jones, research coordinator, February, 1962. each .20 set .50
bulk each .15

1961

THE FEDERAL EXECUTIVE AND CIVIL RIGHTS, a 48-page report sent to President John F. Kennedy with an 18-point proposal on executive power in furthering civil rights. February 1961. .35
bulk .25

THIS I BELIEVE, by Haywood M. Hill, M.D. Eloquent message a southern Presbyterian elder delivered to his church school class. Single copy only Free

1960 (and earlier)

WHAT THE SUPREME COURT SAID, a commentary on the school desegregation decree of 1954. .10
bulk .05

1960 (Cont'd.)

MAP, showing percentage of non-white population in counties of southern states as of 1960. .25
bulk .20

IF THE SCHOOLS ARE CLOSED . . . A Critical Analysis of the Private School Plan, Warren E. Gauerke and Donald Ross Green. 1959. .15
bulk .10

LEADERSHIP REPORTS

(All mimeographed unless otherwise noted; single copy free.)

L-16 ATLANTA AND WASHINGTON: RACIAL DIFFERENCES IN ACADEMIC ACHIEVEMENT, Frank H. Stallings, Associate Professor of Education, University of Louisville, 1960.

L-26 ADDRESS BY GENERAL LUCIUS D. CLAY. Remarks on the industrial climate of Georgia. 1961.

L-27 THE HARD OR THE EASY WAY? Aspects of the option taken in parts of Virginia and North Carolina not to desegregate schools. 1961.

L-28 ORGANIZATIONS SUPPORTING THE STUDENT PROTEST MOVEMENT. 1961.

L-29 AMERICAN ANTHROPOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION RESOLUTION ON RACE. Scientists reject theories of Negro racial inferiority. 1961.

L-30 A POSITIVE PLAN TO HELP SOLVE OUR RACIAL DILEMMA. Reprint from Jackson (Mississippi) State Times, November 1961; and BIRMINGHAM FACES A HARD DECISION, reprint from the Birmingham (Alabama) News, October 1961.

L-31 SLIPPING SEGREGATION: NEGROES WIN LOWERING OF MORE BARRIERS IN SOUTH. Reprint from Wall Street Journal, January 1961.

L-32 REFUTATION OF "RACE AND REASON," Dr. William P. Sullivan, Asst. Professor of English, McNeese State College, Lake Charles, Louisiana. 1962.

L-33 A STATEMENT OF RECOMMENDED POLICE POLICY RESULTING FROM THE NEW YORK UNIVERSITY GRADUATE SCHOOL OF PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION CONFERENCE on "The Challenge of Desegregation for American Police Executives." 1962.

LEADERSHIP REPORTS (Cont'd.)

L-34 DESEGREGATION IN SOUTHERN PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS. Report on Catholic dioceses in 11 states. May 1962.

L-34A DESEGREGATION IN SOUTHERN PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS. August 1963.

L-35 STATE COMMISSIONS ON HUMAN RELATIONS: Delaware, Kentucky, Maryland, West Virginia, 1962.

L-36 RICHMOND QUIETLY LEADS WAY IN RACE RELATIONS. Reprint from The Washington Post. 1962.

L-41 EXCERPTS FROM SPEECHES OF GOVERNOR BERT COMBS OF KENTUCKY AND SECRETARY OF COMMERCE LUTHER T. HODGES. Both speeches concern national need for development of a deeper understanding of the meaning of practical human brotherhood. 1963.

L-44 CHARLOTTE HAS BUILT ITS INTEGRATION ROAD: A DIFFERENT WAY, L. M. Wright, Jr., city editor of Charlotte Observer. The story of quiet, organized desegregation of public facilities without demonstrations. 1963.

L-46 VOICE OF THE PEOPLE: 'AT THIS VERY LATE HOUR.' -- A letter co-authored by two citizens of Birmingham, James A. Head and Charles P. Zukoski, Jr., reprinted from The Birmingham News, Sept. 30, 1963.

L-47 THE QUESTION FROM JACKSONVILLE. Description of Jacksonville racial outbreak of 1964.

REPRINTS

(Single copy free unless otherwise noted)

New South, Summer 1967. "Sorrow Song in Black and White," Vera Rony. A sensitive account of the agricultural labor movement in the South in the 1930's. bulk .20

New South, Winter 1967. "What Happened after You Desegregated the White School," Mark Chesler. bulk .20

Harvard Business Review, March-April 1963. "Business--Next Target for Integration?" John Perry. .20
bulk .15

The Washington Post, 10-7-62. "The South's Pattern of Violence Has Changed," George McMillan.

Virginia Quarterly Review, Autumn 1961. "The Annealing of the South," Leslie W. Dunbar. .10
bulk .07

Reprints (Cont'd.)

The New York Times, 4-1-60. "A Southern View of the South," Harold Fleming.

The New York Times Magazine, 9-27-59. "The Agony of the Southern Minister," Ralph McGill.

The Washington Post, 1958. "The Truth About Desegregation in Washington's Schools," reprints in reply to Davis Committee report.

Harper's, June 1958. "The Easy Chair," Harry S. Ashmore (Little Rock).

Speech delivered April 1958. "Segregation versus the Space Age," Marion Wright.

. . . . . .